SANKARA NARAYANA PILLAI—RESPONDENT No. 2—APPELLANT

GANGAMMAL AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 71—Execution of decree—Sale—Failure to pay purchase-money—Re-sale—Liability to make up deficiency in price—Proclamation of sale—Omission to mention time and place of sale—Date of sale not specified in proper place—Irregularity—Illegality.

There is no general rule for distinguishing between an illegality and an irregularity in a Court sale. The decision in every case must rest on the special facts of the case. [p. 2, col. 1.]

Where an auction-sale is held in the Court premises and within the usual office hours, the mere omission to mention the time and the place of the sale in the sale proclamation does not amount to an illegality, in absence of proof that such omission caused a low price to be fetched. [p. 2, col. 2.]

The omission to mention the date of sale in the sale proclamation in its proper place is an irregularity, but in the absence of evidence to show that any possible bidder was kept away owing to his not knowing the exact date of the sale as a result of the date not being entered in its proper place, the sale is not vitiated. [ibid.]

The provision contained in O. XXI, r. 71 of the C. P. C. is a salutary one intended to minimise the hardship resulting from the purchaser's default and there is no reason why the Court should refuse to give effect to it, unless the defaulting purchaser would be substantially prejudiced. [p. 3, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, in A. S. No. 87 of 1921, preferred against an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Tuticorin, in E. A. No. 419 of 1921, in O. S. No. 219 of 1919.

Messrs. Chidambaram and Marthandam, for the Appellant

Mr. G. Tiruvengadachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first auction-purchaser of certain properties sold in execution of the decree, in Original Suit No. 219 of 1919 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Tuticorin, is the appellant in this civil miscellaneous second appeal. He purchased the property for Rs. 2,600 and deposited 25 per cent. of that amount, but failed to deposit the balance in time. The sale was, therefore, set aside and a re-sale was ordered. At the re-sale, the same property fetched only Rs. 1,400. The judgment-debtor then applied under O. XXI, r. 71, for the recovery of the difference of Rs. 1,200 from the appellant (first auction-purchaser), on the ground that the re-sale which resulted in the sale of the property, for a smaller amount, was caused by his failure to complete the purchase in time and that, therefore, he is responsible for paying her this difference in price. Both the lower Courts upheld the contentions of the judgment-debtor.

In this appeal, the appellant has urged only two points which are specified as points Nos. 2 and 3 in the memorandum of appeal, presented by him to the lower Court. These are: (1) the time and place of sale were not mentioned in the proclamation issued for re-sale, and the re-sale is, therefore, null and void and cannot affect the appellant. (2) The date of the re-sale was not specified in the proclamation and, therefore, the re-sale would not bind him.

As regards point No. (1), it may be mentioned at the very outset that this objection was not pleaded by the appellant in his objection statement filed before the District Munsif; nor was it argued before the First Court. No evidence also has been adduced to show that it was on account of the non-mention of the time and place in the proclamation of sale that the property failed to fetch the original price. What is argued is that the omission complained of is not an irregularity, but an illegality and that, therefore, the re-sale is a nullity. As pointed out by Oldfield, J., in Jayarama Aiyar v. Vridhigiri Aiyar (1), it is difficult to lay down any general rule for distinguishing between an illegality and an irregularity and the decision in any case must rest on its special facts. The cases cited by the learned Vakil in support of the argument that the omission to mention the time and the place in a proclamation for the sale amounts to an illegality are all clearly distinguishable. In Basharutulla v. Uma Churn Dutt (2), the property that had been advertised for a particular date was sold on the date, but at an earlier hour, than that stated in the proclamation for sale and the Court held that in such circumstances, there was no sale within the meaning of the Code. The reason is obvious and is thus stated by the learned Judge:

"When the time advertised arrived, the property had been sold, and the whole thing was over; and when persons came for the purpose of attending the sale at the time advertised, they found that the property had been sold, and that they were too late."

Following this case, it was held in Jayarama Aiyar v. Vridhagiri Aiyar (1), that when it was intimated in the village where the lands were situate, that a sale would be held at a place and by an officer different from those fixed by the proclamation, the sale held at the place and by the official fixed by the proclamation is illegal and a nullity and not merely an irregularity, obviously on the ground that the effect of the intimation given was to divert the possible bidders to a place, where the sale was not held and, therefore, it could not be said that the property had been sold within the meaning of the Code. In Subraya Venkatesh v. Ganga Narain (3), it was found that the property re-sold was not the property originally sold. It is clear that, if the same property is not re-sold, the first auction-purchaser cannot be made liable for the deficiency in price, as there has been no sale of the property originally sold to him. The re-sale in such circumstances is a nullity.

In the present case, there was no misstatement of time or place in the proclamation, nor was the property re-sold, different from the one originally sold: only the time and the place are not mentioned in the proclamation. In the absence of any notification to the contrary, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, it is not unreasonable to hold that the purchasers would presume that the sale would, as is well-known and usual, be held within the premises of the Court, which holds the sale and within the usual office hours. As has already been pointed out, it has not been proved by evidence that the omission complained of brought about a deficiency in the price of the property, when it was re-sold. I hold that the re-sale in this case has not been vitiated by any illegality, on account of the omission to mention the time and place in the proclamation.

The second objection deals with the omission to mention the date of the sale in the proclamation. The date is not mentioned in its appropriate place; but it can clearly be inferred from the date, upto which interest on the decree amount is calculated and the context in which this date is mentioned in the body of the proclamation clearly shows that it is the date of sale that is referred to therein. It is true that the date of sale should not be left to mere inferences. But in this case the date of sale is specifically mentioned with sufficient clearness in another place also, namely, in the left-hand corner at the top of the sale proclamation, though this is not the place allotted for its mention. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that the intending purchasers would have been in any way misled as regards the date, when the sale was to be held. The omission to mention it in its proper place is no doubt an irregularity; but no evidence has been let in to show that any possible bidder was kept away, owing to his not knowing the exact date of the sale. The appellant has also not given any evidence to connect the irregularities complained of, with the loss alleged to have resulted, on account of such irregularities. The appellant's case, as his counter-statement would show, was not that the deficiency in the price was due to those irregularities; but there was no justification for the re-sale at all, as the omission to pay the $\frac{3}{4}$th of the sale price was not in any way due to default on his part. The second objection must also be overruled.

As pointed out by Wallis, C. J., in Annavajhulu Venkatachellamayya Garu v. Ramagirjee Neelakanta Girjee (4), the provision in O. XXI, r. 71, is a salutary one, intended to minimise the hardship resulting from the purchaser's default and there is no reason why the Court should refuse to give effect to it, unless the defaulting purchaser would be substantially prejudiced. As already mentioned, not even an attempt has been made to show that the appellant was in any way substantially prejudiced in this case, on account of the omissions complained of.

In my opinion, the order of the Court below is right and this civil miscellaneous second appeal is dismissed with costs of the second respondent.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 2664 OF 1917.

GOKAL CHAND AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

Musammat NIHAL DEVI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Custom—Succession—Daughter-in-law, right of—Aroras of Kasur, Lahore District.

There is no custom among the Aroras of Kasur in the Lahore District whereby the widow of a predeceased son succeeds to the property left by her father-in-law in preference to the latter's reversioners, in contravention of the general rule of Hindu Law. [p. 8, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 16th July 1917.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Mr. Mohammad Rafi, for the Appellants.

Lala Tirath Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The parties in this case are Aroras of the town of Kasur in the Lahore District. The plaintiffs are the sons of Khazana Mal, and the defendant is the widow of Bishan Das who was the grandson of a brother of Khazana Mal. The members of the family were traders and money-lenders. Bishan Das died before his father Narain Das, and the dispute between the parties arose after the death of Narain Das, which occurred in 1911. The plaintiffs allege that they and Narain Das formed a joint Hindu family, and they sue for a declaration that the property in their possession, specified in the lists attached to the plaint, is the property of the joint family of which they are now the sole members, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering therewith contending that she has no rights except those of residence and maintenance. They also sue for possession of certain moveable property which they say is with the defendant.

The defendant denies that the members of the family were joint, and pleads that the property in respect of which a declaratory decree is asked for belonged to her father-in-law Narain Das and that she is his heir by a local and family custom. She also denies that the property of which the plaintiffs ask for possession is with her.

The Subordinate Judge has found that Narain Das and the plaintiffs did not form a joint Hindu family, and that the defendant has proved that among Aroras there is a special custom by which a widow succeeds to her father-in-law's estate. He has accordingly dismissed the suit and the plaintiffs appeal. It will be sufficient to discuss the question of the custom set up by the defendant as the appeal must, in our opinion, succeed on this point. Thirty-four instances have been adduced in support of the custom, and the lower Court considers that 24 of these are clear instances in the defendant's favour. It may be noted, however, that, although the defendant pleaded a family custom, none of these instances occurred in the family to which the parties belong, and in fact none occurred in the got of the parties, namely the khetarpal got. Only the first nine instances are from the town of Kasur, the others being nearly all instances from villages in the Kasur and Chunian Tahsils of the Lahore District and in Districts other than Lahore. Instances from villages are of little value in the present case, and in this connection we may refer to Motan Das v. Morni Bai (1), a case relating to Aroras of Multan City at page 174.* We will consider the instances in the order in which they are given in the lower Court's judgment.

Instance No. 1.—Dhana Singh's land was mutated in 1906 in favour of his daughter-in-law, Musammat Sardha Devi, and her husband's brother Dhari Mal. But notwithstanding this mutation the defendant's own witness Sundar Das (D. W. No. 1) admits that Dhari Mal did not give possession of the property to Musammat Sardha Devi. Musammat Sardha Devi, in fact, sued for possession of her share of some land which Dhari Mal had mortgaged, and the suit was dismissed by the Munsif, Mehta Lekh Raj, on the ground that under the Hindu Law she had no right of succession to her father-in-law (P. B. III, page 170). No custom appears to have been set in that case. It is true that a joint mortgage was effected by Dhari Mal and Musammat Sardha Devi in favour of Sant Ram (D. W. No. 2), but as Musammat Sardha Devi had been entered in the Revenue Records as a co-sharer, it was natural for the mortgagee to insist on her joining in the mortgage. Tulsi Ram, a witness for the defendant, states (P. B. I, page 70) that Musammat Sardha Devi and Dhari Mal jointly sold half of the shop to him, but Dhari Mal, who was a witness for the plaintiff (page 104), was not questioned in cross-examination with regard to that sale, although he had denied in examination-in-chief that Musammat Sardha Devi had any right in the property left by his father, and Musammat Sardha Devi herself was not called to give evidence. This instance, therefore, cannot be said to be one in which a daughter-in-law has actually succeeded.

Instance No. 2.—The land left by one Kahn Chand was mutated in favour of his daughter-in-law Musammat Thakari along with her husband's brothers Maghi Ram and Ram Lal on the 31st July 1912 (P. B. III, page 238). But at the time when that mutation took place the dispute between the present parties was going on before the Revenue Authorities. The Assistant Collector had already sanctioned mutation in favour of the defendant, and the plaintiffs had appealed from that order to the Settlement Collector, who dismissed the appeal on the 29th November 1912 (P. B. III, page 295), and it is noteworthy that it was the defendant's cousin and agent Lachhman Dass who appeared before the Revenue Officer in the mutation proceedings which took place on Kahn Chand's death and stated that the latter had left a daughter-in-law, who had not been mentioned in the patwari's report as one of the heirs. Maghi Ram and Ram Lal both disputed Musammat Thakari's right to succeed to the property, and there is no evidence to show that she really got possession. Neither Musammat Thakari herself, nor any one of the family has given evidence, while Saudagar Mal, a witness for the plaintiff, has stated positively (P. B. I, page 131) that Musammat Thakari did not get any of the property, but that it all went to her husband's brothers. This instance, therefore, like the first is not shown to be one in which a daughter-in-law has inherited.

Instance No. 3.—Wadhawa Mal's property passed to his daughter-in-law Musammat Har Kaur. But this is not a case of succession, since Musammat Har Kaur took the property under her father-in-law's Will, as proved by the evidence of his brother Bhana Mal (P. B. I, page 120), who produced an attested copy of the Will (P. B. III, page 170).

Instance No. 4.—Khazana Mal's property is said to have been inherited by his daughter-in-law and two witnesses, Kesho Das (D. W. No. 5) and Sant Singh (D. W. No. 12), have deposed to this. Kesho Das is not an Arora but a Brahman, and does not know the daughter-in-law's name or what property Khazana Mal left besides a house. Sant Singh also knows little about the matter. He is not a khetarpal Arora, and, although he says the daughter-in-law is in possession of his (Khazana Mal's) estate, he admits in cross-examination that he did not see her in possession. Sardari Mal (P. W. No. 5) says that Khazana Mal, who was his brother, left no property at all and that the house he lived in had been lent to him by the witness' father. Khazana Mal's daughter-in-law has not been produced, and it cannot be held to be proved that she inherited her father-in-law's property.

Instance No. 5.—The property of one Maghi Mal is stated by Bahadur Singh (D. W. No. 11) to have been inherited by his daughter-in-law, the widow of Haria, alone with her husband's brothers, but against this there is the statement of the plaintiffs' witness Sukh Ram (P. B. I, page 132) that the property was inherited by Maghi Mal's grandson, a son of Haria, and that it was on the grandson's death that his mother succeeded. The Subordinate Judge has consequently not relied on this instance, and we agree with him that it is not shown to be an instance of a daughter-in-law's succession. The best evidence would have been that of Haria's widow, who has not been produced.

Instance No. 6.—One Mehra Mal's property is said to have been inherited by his daughter in law, but the only evidence is that of one Bulaki (D. W No. 21), who is not related to Mehra Mal. Bulaki admits that Mehra Mal left only one house, so that the fact of Mehra Mal's daughter-in-law living in the house in which she would have a right of residence would prove nothing. This instance is, therefore, of no value.

Instances Nos. 7, 8 and 9.—These are not shown to be cases of succession of a daughter-in-law, and they may be cases of widows succeeding to the property of their husbands. The lower Court has consequently left them out of consideration, and Counsel for the respondent also does not rely on them.

Instance No. 10.—The land held by one Sahibu Mal of village Sanda in the Kasur Tahsil passed on his death in 1903 to his sons, Labha Ram and Bhana Mal, and to Musammat Naraini, the widow of his predeceased son, Chuni Lal, but a copy has been filed only of the mutation order relating to the land which Sahibu Mal held as mortgagee. Labha Ram (D. W. No. 7) admits that on his father's death he and his brother had a dispute with Musammat Naraini and that they settled it by giving her 36 ghumaons out of the total estate of 250 ghumaons obtaining from her an agreement that she was not to alienate it, and he adds that if this property were not sufficient they would maintain her. It thus appears that Musammat Naraini really took the land by way of maintenance rather than by right of inheritance. The lower Court says that the land given to her was of superior quality; but Labha Ram does not say this, but only says that Musammat Naraini took the land which she considered good, the instance supports the plaintiffs rather than the defendant.

Instance No. 11.—The property of Ram Ditta at village Chuharpura in the Kasur Tahsil was inherited in 1906 by his daughter-in-law Musammat Thakari (P. B. III, page 278). But in the first place Musammat Thakari, in her application for a succession certificate and in the statement which she made in the certificate proceedings (pages 279 and 282) said that she was the only heir of her father-in-law, and, although Anant Ram (D. W. No. 3) and Kalu Mal (D. W. No. 4) say that her husband left cousins, they do not state the exact relationship. In the second place the property left by Ram Ditta seems to have been very small. Kalu Mal who is Musammat Thakari's father says that Ram Ditta owned only 9 or 10 ghumaons of land and held only 12 kanals as mortgagee, and the debts due to him were stated by Musammat Thakari in her application for the succession certificate to amount only to Rs. 240-8-0. Her husband's collaterals would have had to maintain her, and they may have thought it proper to let her have for her maintenance the little property which Ram Ditta had left. This instance does not help the defendant.

Instance No. 12.—The property of one Atma Singh of Mauza Hujra in the Montgomery District is said to have been inherited by his daughter-in-law, but Bahadur Singh (D. W. No. 11), the only witness who mentions this instance, has no personal knowledge of it, and admits in cross-examination that he has only heard about it, and that he does not even know Atma Singh's got.

Instance No. 13.—This is a judgment given on the 22nd December 1915 by Rai Maya Ram, Subordinate Judge (P. B. III, page 289), in which he found in favour of the right of the daughter-in-law to succeed; but most of the instances on which he based his decision are among those which have been mentioned by the lower Court in its judgment in the present case. We have already discussed some of them and shown that they do not prove the right of the daughter-in-law to succeed, and the others will presently be shown to be equally valueless. Rai Maya Ram also mentioned as one of the instances the present defendant's succession to her father-in-law's property, notwithstanding that the suit contesting her right to succeed was pending at the time. He referred to only five other instances, in three of which the particulars necessary to enable us to judge whether the instances were in point and supported the custom set up by the defendant are not given, while the remaining two were instances occurring in the family to which the parties to that case belonged, and even as regards those two it does not appear what was the extent of the property inherited. The defendant in that case had pleaded a special family custom, and the two instances in which a daughter-in-law had succeeded in the family may have carried weight. In the present case, on the other hand, although a family custom was pleaded, not a single instance of a daughter-in-law succeeding in the family has been cited. Rai Maya Ram's judgment is in our opinion of little value as an instance showing the existence of the custom.

Instance No. 14.—The land left by Hakim Singh, a resident of village Punnunsinghwala in the Chunian Tahsil, who died in 1909, was mutated in the names of his two sons, and his third son's widow Musammat Indar Kaur (P. B. III, page 193); but this instance does not appear to be in point in the present case, as Hakim Singh was an agriculturist, as admitted by the defendant's witness Gurbakhsh Singh (P. B. I, page 66), who was a cousin of Musammat Indar Kaur's husband.

Instance No. 15.—The land of Jiwana Mal of Khudian, a village in the Chunian Tahsil, was mutated in the name of his two sons and his two daughters-in-law (P. B. III, pages 218 and 226); but this took place in 1913, while the present suit was pending, and the Settlement Commissioner had already on the 29th November 1912, upheld the Naib Tahsildar's order mutating in the defendants' favour the lands claimed by the plaintiffs, as that any mutations sanctioned by Revenue Officers in the Lahore District after that date cannot have any value as instances of a daughter-in-law's succession.

Instance No. 16.—The land owned by Amira at Khudian was mutated on the 20th April 1910 in favour of his son Bhag Mal and his daughter-in-law Musammat Jawali (P. B. III, page 222). It is, however, not certain whether Musammat Jawali's husband Duni Chand died before or after his father. Amira had died in August 1909. The patwari wrote his report of the death on the 2nd April, 1910, mentioning only the name of Bhag Mal as the heir of Amira. On the 20th April Bhag Mal stated before the Naib Tahsildar that Amira had two sons, Duni Chand and himself, but that Duni Chand had died and that Jawali was his (that is Duni Chand's) heir. This would leave the impression that Duni Chand died after his father, and it is possible that he may have died during the interval of about eight months which elapsed between Amira's death and the patwari's report. At any rate the matter is not clear, and Sardari Mal (D. W. No. 16) who mentions the instance, does not say whether Duni Chand died before his father or not, so that the instance is inconclusive. The best evidence would have been that of Musammat Jawali or Bhag Mal, and they are not produced.

Instance No. 17.—One Mangal's land at Doburji in Tahsil Chunian was mutated in favour of his daughter-in-law Musammat Kirpa Devi and his grandson Jagan Nath (P. B. III, page 205). That mutation was effected on the 10th April 1914, and for the reason given above in regard to instance No. 15, it is of no value. It is also to be noted that Jagan Nath is a minor and may yet contest Musammat Kirpa Devi's right to succeed.

Instances Nos. 18 and 19.—One Sardari Mal's widow is said to have succeeded to the property of her father-in law, Arura Mal, a resident of Dholan in the Chunian Tahsil, along with her husband's brother, and similarly on the death of one of the brothers named Shivan Ditta his property is said to have passed to his daughters-in-law and surviving son. The only witness as to these instances is Bhagat Ram (D. W. No. 9), a cousin of the defendant, and he is contradicted by the plaintiffs' witness Saudagar Mal who says (P. B. I, page 131) that the daughters-in-law did not inherit, but only got maintenance. Here again the best evidence, namely, that of the daughters-in-law, is withheld, and the instance must be held to be improved.

Instance No. 20.—This relates to the succession of the property of one Mangal Singh. But his son Jaimal Singh (D. W. No. 10), though he says his sister-in-law succeeded to the property of his father along with his brothers, goes on to say that she had adopted his son after her husband's death and passed on her share to him, so that this is not a case of the succession of a daughter-in-law at all, and the lower Court has left it out of consideration.

Instance No. 21.—The property of one Vir Bhan of village Jajja in the Chunian Tahsil is said to have been inherited by his daughter-in-law, the widow of Ganpat. There is no documentary evidence in regard to this instance. Bura Singh, who deposes to it, says (P.B. I, page 65) that Vir Bhan died only two or three months back and that he had another son Diwan Chand who died a few days after Vir Bhan, leaving two minor sons. This instance is clearly of no value, as it is of recent occurrence and the persons interested in opposing the claim of the daughter-in-law are minors.

Instance No. 22.—The land of one Bahadur Singh of village Kanganpur is said to have devolved upon the widow of his son Jamita and Karam Singh, the son of Bahadur Singh's second son Kesar. But neither the daughter-in-law nor Karam Singh has come forward to give evidence, nor is the mutation order produced. The only witness in regard to this instance is Ralla Singh, who admits that he is not related to Bahadur Singh and we must regard the instance as improved. Ralla Singh, moreover, admits that Bahadur Singh was an agriculturist, though he says he was also a money-lender. No other instances are forthcoming from the Lahore District and the next seven instances are from the Ferozepore District.

Instance No. 23.—Karam Chand's land at Makho was mutated in 1903 in favour of his daughter-in-law Musammat Ram Rakhi (P. B. III, page 260). Dharmu Mal (D. W. No. 13), who has given evidence in regard to this instance as well as to other instances from Makho, says that Karam Chand's brothers were alive. They have not been produced, and it may be that they agreed to allow their brothers' daughter-in-law to take the land as it was only 42 kanals, 7 marlas in area and she would have needed it all for her maintenance. Har Dayal (P. W. No. 3) says (P. B. I, page 101) that the property of Karam Chand yields an income of only about Rs. 100 per annum. This instance, therefore, does not help the defendant.

Instance No. 24.—On the death of Sobha Mal of Makho in 1910 his land was mutated in the names of his sons Har Dayal and Mathra Dass, and his daughter-in-law Musammat Ishar Devi, the widow of Harnam Das (P. B. III, page 266), but notwithstanding this Har Dayal and Mathra Dass appear to have had possession of the whole property and to have paid Musammat Ishar Devi an allowance of Rs. 6 a month for her maintenance till 1915, when they and Musammat Ishar Devi referred the matter to arbitration (P. B. III, page 157), and the arbitrators awarded the whole property to Har Dayal and Mathra Dass, but increased Musammat Ishar Devi's allowance to Rs. 7 a month (page 160). This instance supports the plaintiffs rather than the defendant.

Instance No. 25.—This is a judgment (P. B. III, page 142), by Mr. Prenter, District Judge, dated the 2nd August 1909, in a case relating to Aroras of Makho, in which he held that it had not been proved that a daughter-in-law was entitled to succeed in preference to collaterals. This is a clear instance in favour of the plaintiffs.

Instance No. 26.—Dharmu Mal (D. W. No. 13) mentions the succession of one Musammat Bishan Devi, widow of Ram Rakha, but as a matter of fact there was no question of succession as Ram Rakha had been a member of a joint Hindu family with his brother and his widow was given a portion of the immoveable property for her maintenance under an agreement entered with her husband's brother on the 27th February 1915, (P. B. III, page 166).

Instance No. 27.—The land left by Nand Mal at Ferozepore was mutated in the names of his sons and his daughter-in-law Musammat Ganga Devi in 1904 (P. B. III, page 248); but this was done in the teeth of protest on the part of the collaterals, and in 1912 a deed was executed (page 173) by which Nand Mal's brothers gave certain property to Musammat Ganga Devi and the widows of the other sons who had died for their maintenance, while it was declared that the widows had no right in the remainder of the property. This again supports the plaintiffs.

Instance No. 28.—Sant Ram (D. W. No. 20) says that the property of Gobinda Mal, a resident of Ferozepore, was inherited by his daughter-in-law in the presence of his cousins, and then her daughter succeeded, but he also says there were two cases which went up to the Chief Court. No copies of the judgments of the Chief Court have been produced and in their absence it is impossible to place any reliance on Sant Ram's statement.

Instance No. 29.—This is a mutation which occurred on the death of one Musammat Gur Devi, but the Subordinate Judge says he does not see its relevancy, and the mutation order does not appear to have been printed.

Instances Nos. 30 to 33.—These are mentioned by the lower Court as being instances of the succession of daughters in law in the Muzaffargarh District, but there is no oral evidence regarding them and the mutations are not on the printed record. The lower Court has referred to Exs. D-25 to 28, but D-25 to 27 do not relate to these instances. D. 28 (P. B. III, page 268 to 272) shows that on the death of one Heman Mal the land at Chak Shori, of which he was the mortgagee, was mutated in the names of his sons and of one Musammat Khillo, but there is nothing to show that Musammat Khillo's husband was the son of Heman Mal, or that, if he was, he died before his father.

Instance No. 34.—This is from Minchinabad in the Bahawalpur State, and the only witness in regard to it is Sohan Singh (D. W. No. 8) who has no personal knowledge of it and speaks only from hearsay.

The result is that there is not a single instance of any value in the defendant's favour, whilst four of the instances cited, namely, Nos. 10, 24, 25 and 27, and the judgment of Mehta Lekh Raj referred to in connection with instance No. 1, support the plaintiffs. We hold, therefore, that the defendant has failed to prove the custom set up and that the rule of Hindu Law must be followed.

Admittedly under that law the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed to the property of their cousin Narain Das to the exclusion of the daughter-in-law and it becomes unnecessary to go into the question whether they and Narain Das constituted a joint family. They are entitled to a decree in respect of the property in their possession, but it is admitted that there is no evidence as to the existence of the moveable property which they allege to be in the possession of the defendant. We accept the appeal and pass a decree declaring that the plaintiffs are the owners of the property in their possession shown in the lists attached to the plaint, and that the defendant has no rights therein except those of residence and maintenance, and granting an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with such property. The defendant will pay the plaintiffs' costs in both Courts except the costs incurred in respect of the claim mentioned in paragraph 11 (d) of the plaint.

A wajib-ul-arz laid down that on the death of a proprietor his widow would be entitled to his share whether the deceased was separate from his brother or joint, but that the widow would not have any right of transfer. The widow was not given a right to adopt which was given to male owners, and it was further provided that the share of the deceased would be obtained by that person who was nearer in degree:

Held, (1) that the widow having been specifically made a successor to her husband and it not being stated that she would only have the usufruct she must be regarded as a full owner with certain restraints put on her rights of ownership; [p. 9, col. 2.]

(2) that where a widow succeeded to her husband no property devolved on the other heirs of the deceased and succession to the deceased opened out on the death of the widow and that the person nearest in degree to the deceased at the time of the death of the widow was entitled to succeed to the exclusion of all other heirs. Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 5th February 1924, in Appeal No 142 of 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, Musafirkhana, dated the 2nd July 1923, in Suit No. 429 of 1922.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellant.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an interesting appeal and Mr. Wasim has argued it on behalf of his client with his usual ability and restraint. The pedigree, so far as is necessary for the purposes of this appeal, may be briefly stated to be that one Muhammad Bakhsh had three sisters, Musammat Sahebzadi, Musammat Dan Bibi and Musammat Ulfat Bibi. These sisters and his widow Musammat Abadi survived him. Devolution of property in this family is governed by the Muhammadan Law as modified by custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz. Musammat Abadi according to that custom took possession of the entire property belonging to Muhammad Bakhsh. When Musammat Abadi died none of the three sisters was alive and the defendant Niamat Ali, the surviving son of one sister Musammat Ulfat Bibi took possession of the property. There was no survivor among the sons of the other two sisters, so there was no one in equal degree to Muhammad Bakhsh with Niamat Ali alive at the time of the death of the widow of Muhammad Bakhsh.

Two suits were brought one by the descendants of Musammat Dan Bibi and the other by the descendants of Musammat Ulfat Bibi other than Niamat Ali for recovery of their shares of the property from Niamat Ali. The case of the plaintiffs in both the suits was that on the death of Muhammad Bakhsh his sisters succeeded to the property but their possession was postponed till the death of Musammat Abadi and that on the death of Musammat Abadi the successors-in-interest of the three sisters succeeded to the 1/3rd share of each sister in the property of which she became owner at the time of the death of Muhammad Bakhsh.

The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court held that no property devolved on the three sisters and that the succession opened out on the death of Musammat Abadi. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants conceded that if this view be correct his clients will be out of Court.

The question for decision, therefore, is, whether Musammat Abadi became owner and proprietor of the property in suit or she was only in enjoyment of the usufruct of the property while the three sisters of Muhammad Bakhsh were owners thereof. This is the clear way in which the plaintiffs' learned Counsel put forward the case on behalf of his clients. To decide this point reference must be made to the wajib-ul-arz. The wajib-ul-arz begins with the word which I take to be the right of succession of the widow. The words are: the widow is entitled to the share of her husband. Then it is narrated that she will be entitled to this share whether the husband was separate from his brother or joint. Obviously some idea of the Hindu joint family was agitating the minds of the persons who fixed this method of devolution of property. Then the wajib ul-arz goes on to state that the widow shall not have any right of transfer. Rules are then laid down as to the right of an owner of the property to adopt a son which right is not given to the widow. There is then the clause: "The share of the deceased will be obtained by that person who will be nearer in degree." In the presence of male issue the female is debarred from succession and finally a right of maintenance is given to wives not duly married and their children.

The argument of the appellant's learned Counsel was, that as soon as a Muhammadan dies his heirs under the Muhammadan Law become vested with the ownership of the property of the deceased. When the sisters proceeded to take possession the custom stepped in and said that you shall not take possession until the widow's death. He argued that custom will supersede law only in so far as special provision is made by custom and that where custom is silent law will have its usual force. I am, however, not able to interpret the wajib-ul-arz in the sense in which the appellants' learned Counsel would like it to be interpreted. The widow is specifically made a successor to her husband and it is not stated that she will only have the usufruct. It is true that she is deprived of the right of transfer while she is in possession. To my mind this does not convey the idea that she is to succeed only to the usufruct of the property. The proper interpretation ought to be that she is made full owner and then certain restraints are put on her rights of ownership. While she is in possession and owner nothing remains over to be vested in any other person

The learned Counsel warned the Court against following rules of law applicable to a Hindu widow because in the present case the estate was different in two respects, one that a widow was given certain rights even where her husband was joint with his brothers and secondly, transfer was completely prohibited and not allowed, as in the case of a Hindu widow, for certain purposes recognized as legitimate. At the same time it cannot be denied that the custom is borrowed by Muhammadans in this particular locality or village from observation of the law followed by their neighbours the Hindus. It will, therefore, not be wrong to presume that at the time of such adoption of the custom the idea would be present in the minds of the Muhammadans of devolution of property as it would devolve on Hindus where a Hindu widow entered into possession under certain circumstances which permitted her possession according to Hindu Law.

The enquiry was made why the custom was silent as to what was to happen on the death of the widow if the widow was made full owner with a reservation on her right of transfer. My opinion is that the rule put by me in inverted commas above that the share of the deceased will be obtained by the relation nearer in degree would govern both cases—cases where a widow was surviving to succeed to the property and also to cases where no such widow survived. It is interesting to note that such an interpretation was accepted by the members of this family itself. The previous litigation between certain members of the family came up to this Court and will be found reported in the case of Niamat Ali v. Ashiq Ali (1). Niamat Ali defendant there is the same Niamat Ali who is defendant here. Ashiq Ali was a collateral connected by males to Muhammad Bakhsh and also son's son of Musammat Shahzadi sister of Muhammad Bakhsh. When Ashiq Ali brought the suit he claimed that the devolution to the property opened out on the death of the widow Musammat Abadi and that according to the term of the wajib-ul-arz twice referred to above he was shaks karib (nearer relation) to Muhammad Bakhsh on the death of the widow because those terms indicated connection by male and not through females. In my opinion this is admissible evidence as to how a custom applying to a family is interpreted by members of that family itself.

The learned Counsel for the appellants did not insist that this case was governed by a Single Judge's decision of this Court reported in Farzand Ali v. Karim Bakhsh (2). In that case there were definite words in the wajib-ul-arz clause indicating that the widow was only put in possession and did not succeed to proprietary interest in the property.

The way the appellant's learned Counsel has argued the appeal it is not necessary to refer to rulings dealing with the creation of a life-estate among Muhammadans. In Harpal Singh v. Lekhraj Kuar (3) a Bench of the Allahabad High Court interpreted the Privy Council decision of Abdul Wahid Khan v. Nuran Bibi (4) as an opinion of their Lordships that the creation of a life-estate was not consistent with Muhammadan usage. The appeal, however, was not argued from the point of view that Musammat Abadi Bibi held a life-estate in the property. As already indicated what was argued was that she was only in possession of the usufruct while the actual owners were the sisters of Muhammad Bakhsh.

In the view I take the appeals must fail and both of them are dismissed with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1516 OF 1922.
November 13, 1924.
Present:—Mr. Justice Ramesam.

T. GOVINDASAMI CHETTIAR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
A. R. M. A. L. P. L. PALANIAPPA CHETTIAR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 108, 111—Lease for term—Breach of condition by lessor—Lessee, whether entitled to put an end to lease—Waiver—Liability to pay rent.

There is nothing in the provisions of ss. 108 and 111 of the Transfer of Property Act which entitles a lessee for a term to put an end to the lease on account of a breach of a term of the contract by the lessor. [p. 11, col. 2.]

Plaintiff granted a lease of a house for five years to the defendant and one of the terms of the lease was that within six months from its date the lessor should have a latrine constructed, a well sunk and a room built upstairs. The term was not carried out by the lessor but the defendant continued to occupy the house for nearly two years after the expiry of the period within which the construction had to be made and then purported to put an end to the lease. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover rent:

Held, (1) that it was not open to the defendant to continue to occupy the house after the breach by the plaintiff of the terms of the lease, without giving notice that he was willing to extend the time for performance up to a specified date, and then to throw up the lease on a date arbitrarily chosen by him; [ibid.]

(2) that under the circumstances it must be taken that the defendant had waived the benefit of the condition and that the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to succeed. [ibid.]

of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Madura Taluk at Madura, in O. S. No. 44 of 1921, (O. S. No. 1143 of 1923, on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Periakulam).

Mr. T. L. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for damages for breach of contract of lease. The lease was of a house in Periyakulam and is dated 12th November 1916 (Exs. I and A). It was executed by Subban Chetti, plaintiff's elder brother, and it is not denied that plaintiff is the person now entitled to the house. The lease was for five years. One of the terms of the lease is that within six months from its date, the lessor "shall have a latrine constructed, a well sunk and a room upstairs built." The lessee occupied the house up to 23rd February 1919 and a notice was given to the plaintiff on 3rd March 1919 alleging that the defendant vacated the house as the well was not sunk, and other necessary repairs were not effected. The plaintiff brought this suit for Rs. 521-12-9 being the rent for the period 23rd March 1919 to 15th September 1920. The District Munsif gave a decree but the District Judge reversed his decision and dismissed the suit.

Before me Mr. T. L. Venkatarama Iyer who has appeared for the appellant argued that the lessee for a term is not entitled to put an end to the lease, for breach of covenants in the lease. He can only claim damages for such breach, if any. It is unnecessary to refer to the authorities cited by him. For the learned Vakil for the respondent concedes that if there is a breach of mere covenants, the lessee is not entitled to put an end to the lease. See Woodfall, page 213: Surplice v. Farnsworth (1). But the respondent contends that the term is a condition in the lease and not a covenant. He relies on Foa on "Landlord and Tenant," pages 312 and 313. But the distinction between a condition and covenant is made only when a lessor relies on the breach for putting an end to the lease. At page 317 Foa says "In no case can the lessee take advantage of the proviso for re-entry in order to avoid the lease, even where it is in the form that the term shall cease or that the lease shall be void for all purposes." Anyhow s. 111 of the Transfer of Property Act contains no clause providing for the termination of the lease at the option of the lessee on account of a breach of a term of the contract by the lessor, similar to cl. (g) providing for a forfeiture at the option of the lessor. I am, therefore, unable to agree with the District Judge, when he says "It is further argued that the lease could only be avoided under the provisions of s. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act. Exhaustive as these provisions appear to be they do not say that a perfectly clear breach of contract is not a good ground for avoiding a lease". All that I have to observe is that the Act does not provide for the termination of the lease for a term by the lessee on account of a breach by the lessor. Nor is there anything in s. 108 to enable the lessee to avoid the lease.

But, assuming that the lessee is entitled to terminate the lease on account of the lessor's default in carrying out a term of the contract it seems to me that he has waived it. The lease provides for the construction of a well within six months, i. e., 12th May 1917. It is not pretended t[illegible] time was extended by mutual agr[illegible] or that the lessee, while condoni[illegible] breach on 13th May 1917 gave n[illegible] the lessor extending the time for p[illegible] ance of the term upto any late[illegible] The lessee simply chose to conti[illegible] occupy the house till 23rd Februar[illegible] and then vacated it. It seems to m[illegible] open to the lessee to continue to o[illegible] the house after breach, without g[illegible] notice that he was willing to extend[illegible] time for performance upto a specified d[illegible] and then throw up the lease on a [illegible] arbitrarily chosen by him. If he did [illegible] put an end to the lease on 12th M[illegible] 1917, it must be taken that he has waiv[illegible] the benefit of the condition (assuming ther[illegible] was one). In this view, the plaintiff is en[illegible] titled to succeed.

I am not satisfied that plaintiff is entitled to the whole of the rent for the remaining period. In his deposition he says "I asked many persons. They said the rent was high. It seems to me that he demanded higher rent than people were willing to pay and could get no tenant. I think, it was his duty to mitigate damages by taking tenants for a smaller rent. The Vakils, to avoid calling for a finding, left it to me to fix the damages. I have fixed it at half the suit amount and they have agreed to it."

The plaintiff will, therefore, have a decree for Rs. 260-4-4. The defendant will pay half the Court-fee in second appeal to plaintiff. Otherwise each party will bear his own costs throughout.

Civil revision against an order of the [illegible]ub-Judge, Second Class, Raipur, in Civil [illegible]uit No. 46 of 1924, decided on the 19th [illegible]ebruary 1924.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—This is an application for revision of an order dated the 19th February 1924 passed by Mr. D. R. Vaidya, Sub-Judge, II, Raipur, in Civil Suit No. 237 of 1922. The present applicant was plaintiff in the lower Court. He filed his aforesaid suit on 10th August 1922 for removal of a drain and gate and for re-construction of a kaccha wall pulled down by the defendants and thus to restore the parties to status quo ante. The subject-matter of the suit was referred for adjudication to arbitrators by an order dated the 16th October 1922, but the proceedings for arbitration became abortive and the case was fixed for the defendants' written statement and issues for 31st January 1923. After the issues were framed the case was adjourned to 4th April 1923 for evidence of both parties. Plaintiff examined two witnesses on 4th April 1923 and four on 13th July 1923 Two remained. An order for examination of one on commission was passed and as regards the other the order was to arrest him and bring him before the Court on 11th September 1923. The defendants' witnesses being ordered to be re-dieted for 12th September 1923. Time was given to plaintiff to pay the commission fee till the next day for which the case was already fixed and defendants' witnesses were dieted. On 14th July 1923 plaintiff's next friend did not attend when the case was called at 11 A. M., and then again at 1-30 P. M. Mr. Samsherkhan who had taken charge of the case from 13th July 1923 passed the following order :—

14th July 1923. Plaintiff absent. Defendant No. 2 in person.

11 A.M. Will be called later on.

(Sd.) S. K. KHAN,
Second Munsif.

Again called at 1-30 P. M.

Plaintiff absent. Defendant No. 2 in person. The case is dismissed in default of plaintiff's appearance and in presence of defendant No. 2 at 1-30 P. M. Witnesses are discharged. The costs of the defendants shall be borne by the plaintiff's next friend.

(Sd.) S. K. KHAN,
Second Munsif.

The plaintiff's next friend made an application sometime after the dismissal, for restoration of the suit to file alleging that he was sitting outside in the verandah but had gone out temporarily and that on enquiry he learnt that in his absence the case was dismissed to his great surprise. This petition was supported by an affidavit also of the same date. The defendants opposed the petition for restoration alleging that the applicant was not on the Court premises between 11 A. M., and 3 P. M., and deliberately kept away. The plaintiff's next friend was prepared to abide by the defendant No. 2 Safdar Ali's special oath but the latter declined to take it as being against his religion. The matter went to trial, and the said Munsif after hearing the evidence rejected the petition for restoration as disclosing no sufficient ground for setting aside the dismissal. The plaintiff through the same next friend preferred an appeal against the order refusing to restore the case to file and the learned Additional District Judge allowed the appeal and remanded the case to the Trial Court. His conclusions based on the evidence principally of a Pleader who had seen the plaintiff's next friend at 11-30 A.M., was that the applicant was present in Court at 11-30 A. M., and in subsequent hours with the exception of short intervals on 14th July 1923. He also held that the order of dismissal was proper but that the Munsif used his "discretion improperly in refusing to restore the suit to file especially in view of the fact that the case was already adjourned to 12th September 1923 and very little had to be done by the plaintiff in Court on 14th July 1923 and that he appeared before the Court shortly after the order of dismissal was passed and that the dispute involved was about rights in immoveable property." He, therefore, passed the following order:—

"I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the order of the lower Court and order the suit to be restored to file on the applicant's paying Rs. 8 to the non-applicants in 8 days from this day. Parties should appear before the lower Court on 7th February 1924 * * * ."

"30th January 1924"

On remand the case went before Sub-Judge, Second Class, who took down the statements of the parties on 15th February 1924 and summarily rejected the petition for restoration on the ground that the amount of Rs. 8 was not deposited in time. The amount had, however, been deposited in Court on 9th February 1924. His view was that plaintiff "failed to do what the Appellate Court ordered as a condition precedent for restoration of suit" and he, therefore, refused to restore the case to file. He considered that the Appellate Court had clearly stated that the payment of Rs. 8 was a condition precedent and of essence for restoration and had so very properly fixed the case to be taken upon 7th February 1924. The dismissal of the suit was thus allowed to stand as before.

(Sd.) D. R. VAIDYA.
Second Sub Judge.

Against this order the plaintiff has preferred this petition for revision. The non-applicants did not appear though they were served with notices. The case was heard ex parte against them.

What I have to decide is whether the Court of first instance has failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested or it has acted with material irregularity or illegality in the exercise of such jurisdiction. This will necessarily depend upon the correctness or otherwise of the view that it took of the lower Appellate Court's directions. The learned Subordinate Judge, Second Class, regards the payment of Rs 8 in 8 days as a condition precedent and of essence for restoration of the suit. It is argued before me that the proper order where payment in time could have been made of the essence for restoration, would have been one which attached a penalty for a non-compliance with the same. A distinction is made between a term and a condition precedent on the strength of the ruling in Narayan Chitko Juvekar v. Vithal Parshotam (1). It is pointed out that here as in the reported case "there is no provision that, failing fulfilment by the plaintiff at the end of.....(time) his right under the..... (order) is to fail," and that "such an expression is what one would look for where the precise date was intended to form an essential element of the condition." Justice West and Birdwood, JJ., relied upon the case of Sidney v. Vaughan (2) as showing that the mention of something to be done coupled with an expression of time may but serve to indicate a term not to impose a condition sine qua non. They, therefore, observed as follows: —

"The mention of a term when a particular right is to become enforceable is not a condition whether the enforcement be otherwise subject to a condition or not."

In a case arising under O. IX, r. 13, C. P. C., out of an application to set aside an ex parte decree, the Court passed an order allowing the application, setting aside the ex parte decree and directing the suit to be restored to its original number for re-trial but appended the following direction to it "but the order of restoration will be subject to the payment of Rs. 15 as damages by the applicant within three days to plaintiff." The Sub-Judge who passed this order on 31st March 1913 was transferred almost immediately afterwards, and on the 4th of April 1913 the matter came before his successor, the money was not deposited or tendered within the time but it was tendered in Court on 4th April 1913 and refused by plaintiff, the question was whether the learned Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to extend the time fixed by the order dated 31st March 1913 for payment of the money. I refer to Jagarnath Sahi v. Kamta Prashad (3). The Subordinate Judge there recorded a formal order definitely dismissing the application to have the ex parte decree set aside. Similarly in the present case also the Sub-Judge, Second Class, has passed an order definitely refusing to restore the suit to file. Ryves and Piggott, JJ., who heard the appeal observed at page 80* of the report:—

"In our opinion the learned Subordinate Judge on the 4th April 1913 was still seised of the original application under O. IX, r. 13 of the C. P. C., and had power to pass suitable orders in respect of the same. He could extend the time fixed for the payment of the prescribed damages, provided good cause was shown, under the powers recognized by s. 148 of the C. P. C. or he could proceed to pass a fresh conditional order, setting aside the decree upon terms, in place of the order of the 31st March 1913 which had become ineffectual through the failure of the applicants to comply strictly with the prescribed conditions."

They accordingly reversed the order and remanded the case for disposal.

In both these cases there was no provision that failing fulfilment of the order by plaintiff at the end of the time allowed his rights under the order were to fail and, therefore, the Courts were directed to ignore the failure. In Nand Lal v. Kishorilal (4), the Allahabad High Court had to consider the effect of an order refusing to restore a suit to file under the following circumstances:—

The plaintiff's suit was set down for hearing on the 2nd January 1914. He did not appear when the suit was called on and it was accordingly dismissed. Plaintiff presented himself in Court later on the same day. He explained his default and supported it by affidavit, stating that he was accidently delayed on his way. The Subordinate Judge thought that the affidavit did not afford sufficient reason for the plaintiff's failure to be present. However, after some consultation or discussion before the Court defendants informed the Court that they would have no objection to the granting of the plaintiff's application, provided each set of the defendants were paid adequate damages on account of costs incurred to date. Upon this an order was passed "directing plaintiff to pay, within one week, the sum of Rs. 250 to each of the four sets of defendants and providing that in the event of his failure to do this the application to have the suit restored should stand dismissed." It was remarked that the Court below proceeded to pass an order which was intended to, and did, in fact, completely dispose of the application for restoration of the suit. It provided that on a certain event the application should stand dismissed.

I say that it is only to an order such as this that any completeness or finality could be said to attach. It is a self-contained order and provides even for the consequences of non-fulfilment thereof. No such order was passed in the present case by Rao Sahib Chitnavis and I am not, therefore, prepared to accept the narrow construction which the learned Sub-Judge, Second Class, has put upon it. Had there been any provision in the order dated the 30th January 1924 stating what the consequences of the non-fulfilment within the time fixed by it were to be, the Subordinate Judge's seisin over the case would have been limited to simply passing an order that the condition not having been fulfilled in time the conditional order granting restoration became ipso facto revoked or withdrawn. The absence of such a provision in the order makes all the difference and as remarked by Ryves and Piggott, JJ., the Sub-Judge, Second Class, had power to pass suitable order in respect of the application. He could still extend the time fixed, under the powers recognized by s. 148, C. P. C.

That s. 148, C. P. C., applies to proceedings antecedent to the passing of a decree is clearly established as a review of the case-law will show. It does not enable the Court to extend time for doing acts allowed by a decree, e. g., the time allowed by a pre-emption decree for payment of the sale-price: per Prideaux, A.J.C., in Ambadas v. Laxman (5), following Suranjan Singh v. Rambahal Lal (6), Dharmaraja Iyer v. Sreenivasa Mudaliar (7), Bibi Sharofan v. Mahomed Habibuddin (8), Sajjadi Begam v. Dilawar Husain(9) and Komalsingh v. Jagannath (10). It will be clearly seen from the following cases that the Court's jurisdiction to extend time once allowed by the Code itself is limited to proceedings anterior to the passing of the decree. Ganga Ratan v. Chandika Prasad (11) and Firm Gobind Sahai-Rup Lal v. Gurdas Mal (12). While in Habibullah v. Gola Asmoter Khatun (13) it was pointed out that where time has been fixed by a decree of Court for payment of Court-fee, the Court has no jurisdiction to amend the decree so as to enlarge the time for payment.

It will thus be clear that the Sub-Judge, Second Class, had ample jurisdiction to exercise his powers under s. 148, C. P. C., and to accept the deferred payment of Rs. 8 as a sufficient compliance with the order dated 30th January 1924 and excuse the delay of one day in the peculiar circumstances of the case. But he declined to do so and has, therefore, failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law. I am fully aware that I must allow a fairly considerable margin of discretion to a Subordinate Court in a case like the present, but having considered the matter fully I think, the reasons set forth by the Additional District Judge would have amply supported an extension of time upto the day of the lodgment of the adjournment costs into Court. I do not think that the order dated 30th January 1924 was such a conditional order as authorized the First Court to dismiss the application, for otherwise it is wrong to dismiss a case for non-payment of costs: Feru Shaikh v. Beseswar Ghattak (14).

I, therefore, acting under s. 115, C. P. C., set aside the order dated 19th February 1924 passed by the Sub-Judge Second Class and remand the case with directions to restore the suit to file and to proceed further with the trial of the suit on the merits.

The case has already been delayed and I should, therefore, like to see that it is finished soon. I, therefore, direct that the plaintiff's next friend should appear before the First Court on 24th November 1924 to ascertain the date which that Court might fix for proceeding further with the case. The defendants also must similarly appear on that day.

Costs of this Court will be borne by the applicant. Costs of proceedings for setting aside the dismissal hitherto incurred shall be borne by the applicant, so far as the First Court is concerned, while those in the lower Appellate Court shall be costs in the suit as already directed by that Court.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 767 OF 1923.
November 26, 1924.
Present:—Mr. Justice Mukerji.
DIP NARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS —PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS
JAGMOHAN AHIR AND OTHERS— DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 76—Mortgage—Mortgagee encroaching upon mortgaged land—Suit by mortgagor for restoration—Remedy.

It is the duty of a mortgagee, when he takes possession of the mortgaged property, to manage it as a person of ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own. A duty is cast on him to see that the property is not lost by any encroachment. So long as he is in possession as mortgagee he is trustee for the mortgagor and is bound to protect his rights. [p. 17, col. 1]

Where immoveable property is trespassed upon, a money compensation is not the proper remedy to the plaintiff. [p. 17, col. 2.]

Jethalal v Lalbhai, 28 B. 298; 6 Bom. L. R. 86 and Ganga Din v. Jagat Tiwari, 25 Ind. Cas. 198; 12 A. L. J. 1026, relied on.

Defendants were put in possession of certain property by the plaintiff under a mortgage for a definite period. Shortly before the expiry of the period they erected a building on land adjoining to the mortgaged land and encroached upon a portion of the mortgaged land. After redeeming the property the plaintiff brought a suit for demolition of that portion of the building which stood on the mortgaged land and for restoration of the site to its original position :

Held, that during the period of the mortgage the defendants were entitled to use the land in any manner they pleased provided that on redemption they restored it to the same condition in which it was when the mortgage was made, and that, therefore, no question of acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff could arise and the plaintiff was entitled to have the building demolished and the site restored to its original condition. Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 3rd February, 1923.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen are practically all admitted and are as follows :—

The plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 9 to 12 are the appellants in this Court. Defendants Nos. 9 to 12 being away from the district were made pro forma defendants. They and the plaintiffs possessed the same right in the property in suit. The predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 9 to 12 mortgaged plot No. 1763 which was their tenancy (presumably tenancy at fixed rate) for a period of 20 years in favour of the predecessors-in-title of defendants Nos. 1 to 8. This mortgage was executed on the 27th of June 1901 and was redeemed on 22nd of June 1921. The plaintiffs came to Court with the allegation that some six months before the institution of the suit the defendants encroached upon a portion of plot No. 1763 and built a house upon the same. They asked for the demolition of the construction and for the restoration of the site to its original position. Of course, the suit involved a claim for the recovery of possession.

The defence was that the building was an ancient one; that no portion of the land had been encroached upon and that the suit was due to the fact that the defendants refused to allow a redemption of the mortgage before the expiry of the term.

The Court of first instance found that 1½ dhurs of land had been encroached upon by the defendants' building and that the defendants constructed the building some 12 years before the institution of the suit. On these findings the learned Munsif gave a decree for Rs. 10 by way of compensation and dismissed the rest of the claim. On appeal this decision was affirmed.

The learned Subordinate Judge found the following:—

"The truth is only so much that when the house was built, plaintiffs never thought that defendants were encroaching and defendants never thought that they were doing anything wrong. Now after 12 years when the time for redemption arrived plaintiffs want to take their pound of flesh. You will find in the map that the house is a large one and a very small portion of it lies in plaintiffs' area."

The learned Subordinate Judge applying the principle of acquiescence affirmed the decree of the First Court.

In this Court it is contended on the authority of the Privy Council case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (1) which has also been cited by the learned Subordinate Judge, that the rule of acquiescence does not apply to the facts of the case and that the plaintiffs were entitled to have their land restored to them.

The Counsel for the respondents cited two cases, namely, Shama Charan v. Babu Lal Misr (2) and Haji Syed Muhammad v. Gulab Rai (3).

The principle of acquiescence has been discussed by their Lordships of the Privy Council at page 502 in the case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (1) already quoted. Although this Court in the case of Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (1) came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were bound by the principle of acquiescence, their Lordships of the Privy Council found themselves unable to agree with the view. In that case it appears that the predecessors-in-title of the defendants had taken a lease for a definite term of a certain piece of land. They did not use the land for the purpose for which they had taken it. After a few years they went on erecting buildings on the site. The buildings were of a permanent nature. On the lessees suing for recovery of possession after the expiry of the term of the lease it was urged on behalf of the lessees, that the lessors never having objected to the erection of permanent buildings they were barred by the principle of acquiescence from maintaining the suit. Their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that the defendants knew that they were holding for a definite term, that they knew that they were entitled to erect any building they liked on the site provided they restored the land to its original condition after the expiry of the term of the lease. In the circumstances it was held that the principle of acquiescence would not apply.

(1) 21 A. 496; 1 Bom. L. R. 400; 3 C. W. N. 502; 26 I. A. 58; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 523; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1022.

It appears to me that the principle of the decision of Beni Ram's case (1) applies with full force to the facts of the case before me. In this case, the parties who were in possession were the mortgagees. Under the law in force, namely, under the Transfer of Property Act, s. 76, it is the duty of the mortgagee when he takes possession of the mortgaged property to manage it as a person of ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own. This implies that a duty is cast on the mortgagee to see that the property is not lost by any encroachment. Further the same rule lays down that the mortgagee in possession is not to commit an act which is destructive or permanently injurious to the property. It cannot, therefore, be denied that the defendants so long as they were in possession as mortgagees, so to say, were trustees for the plaintiffs and were bound to protect the plaintiffs' rights. So long as the mortgagees were in possession, it cannot be expected that the mortgagors would be going about inspecting the land mortgaged in order to see that it has been well taken care of. The mortgage was for a definite period and during that period the mortgagees were entitled to use the land in any way they pleased provided they restored it to the same condition in which it was when the mortgage was made. No question of acquiescence in the circumstances can arise to bar the plaintiff's suit.

The cases cited by the learned Counsel for the respondents can easily be distinguished from the case before this Court. The decisions were given on the peculiar facts involved in them. In the case of Haji Syed Muhammad v. Gulab Rai (3), it was found that the plaintiff was not entitled to proprietary possession claimed by him but he had only a right of user over it. The defendant had raised the construction some two years before the institution of the suit. In the circumstances this Court refused to grant a mandatory injunction. In this case, the plaintiffs are tenants of the land and they are entitled to be put in physical possession of the same. In the case of Shama Charan v. Babu Lal Misr (2), the owners of the land lived within a few yards of the building and raised no opposition to the construction that was going on before their very face. In that case it might very well be said that the plaintiffs were bound to guard their own property and where it was encroached upon they were bound to tell the trespassers that they were under a mistaken idea that the land was theirs. In the case before this Court the defendants were bound to look after the interest of the plaintiffs and plaintiffs were under no obligation to look after their own property so long as the defendants were to do the same for them.

As regards compensation it has been held and I agree with the view that where immoveable property is trespassed upon, a money compensation is not the proper remedy to the plaintiff. This view was taken in the case of Jethalal v. Lalbhai (4) and in the case of Ganga Din v. Jagat Tiwari (5).

The result is that the plaintiffs' claim must succeed. I allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and decree the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout. I allow the defendants sixty days from this date to remove the materials. The plan prepared by the Commissioner B. Bahadur Lal will be made a part of the decree and will be taken as indicating the extent of the land encroached upon.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 84 OF 1924.
January 14, 1925.
Present:—Mr. Dalal, J. C.

RAM PHER—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
AJODHIYA SINGH AND ANOTHER——DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 14, applicability of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 45—Sale in favour of joint vendees—Pre-emption, suit for, against one vendee—Vendee, other, impleaded after expiry of limitation—Limitation, extension of—Suit, whether maintainable.

The Limitation Act must be taken to be exhaustive as regards extension of the period of limitation, and no equitable principle can be introduced which is not expressly recognised by the provisions of the Act. [p. 18, col. 2.]

Section 5 of the Limitation Act applies only to those proceedings which are specifically mentioned in that section, or to which the section may be made applicable by or under any enactment for the time being in force. A suit is not specifically mentioned in s. 5 nor are the provisions of that section made applicable to a suit by any enactment. The section has, therefore, no application to a suit. [ibid.]

Section 14 of the Limitation Act excludes time taken in a proceeding bona fide in a Court without jurisdiction against the particular defendant against whom the previous proceeding was taken. The provisions of the section cannot be availed of against a defendant against whom no previous proceeding was taken. [ibid.]

Where a sale is effected in favour of two vendees jointly and the sale-deed does not show the shares taken by the vendees in the property sold and no attempt is made to prove the share taken by each vendee, a suit for pre-emption against one of the vendees alone is not maintainable. The provisions of s. 45 of the Transfer of Property Act are not applicable to such a case. [p. 19, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 17th November 1923, confirming that of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 27th August 1923.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad for Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the appellant here, sued in the Trial Court for pre-emption of a certain property conveyed to two persons, Ajudhiya Singh and Sarju under a sale-deed, dated 27th February 1922. He instituted the suit on the 27th February 1923 against Ajudhiya alone. Proceedings were started and continued against Ajudhiya Singh and it was not till the 29th of May 1923 that the plaintiff discovered that Sarju was the other purchaser. On that date he applied to implead Sarju as defendant in the suit. On that date the suit as against Sarju was time-barred.

The Trial Court, whose decision was upheld by the lower Appellate Court, held that the suit was barred as against Sarju and that partial pre-emption cannot be claimed against Ajudhiya Singh.

In this second appeal argument was advanced that either under s. 5 or s. 14 or under the special circumstances of the case the period of limitation ought to have been advanced by the subordinate Courts. It is enough to say that s. 5 of the Limitation Act applies only to those proceedings which are specifically mentioned in that section or to which the section may be made applicable by or under any enactment for the time being in force, and that s. 14 excludes time taken in proceeding bona fide in Court without jurisdiction against the particular defendant. A suit is not specifically mentioned in s. 5 nor are the provisions of that section made applicable to it by any enactment. Section 14 will not be applicable because no proceeding was being taken in any Court against Sarju until the 29th of May 1923.

The learned Counsel quoted a Bench ruling of the Bombay High Court in Satyabhamabai v. Govind (1) in support of his contention that under the particular circumstances of the case extension of time may be granted independently of any Statute. In the present case the mistake of the plaintiff was due to an incorrect copy supplied to him by the Registration Department. It is not pleaded that the incorrect copy was supplied to him through any fraud of Sarju colluding with the officials of the Registration Office. In the Bombay case a general rule was enunciated that where the law creates a limitation, and the party is disabled to conform to that limitation without any default in him, and he has no remedy over, the law will ordinarily excuse him. The principle is founded on English rulings quoted by the learned Judges. I am not prepared to follow that rule unsupported by any other Indian decision. In my opinion the Limitation Act must be taken to be exhaustive as regards extension of the period of limitation, and no equitable principle can find a place there.

The appeal as against Sarju must be dismissed and I did not call upon the learned Counsel on the side of the respondents to answer this portion of the appeal.

As regards the suit against Ajudhiya Singh the learned Counsel for the appellant was correct in pointing out that this defendant did not raise any plea of non-joinder when he filed his written statement and that he was precluded in consequence from raising such a plea at a later stage of the litigation under r. 13 of O. I.

This point in his favour however does not carry the plaintiff far. Even if we hold that there was no plea of non-joinder, the Court can proceed under r. 9 which enjoins that no suit shall be defeated by reason of the non-joinder of parties and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. In the present case the difficulty is that the Court is not in a position to deal with the rights and interests of Ajudhiya Singh. Neither by evidence on behalf of the plaintiff nor by interrogatories issued to Ajudhiya has it been determined what rights and interests Ajudhiya Singh alone has in the property in suit. Support was sought of the provisions of s. 45 of the Transfer of Property Act and it was desired that this Court may hold that Ajudhiya and Sarju were interested in the property in equal shares. We however cannot take account of the second para. of this section until there is an absence of evidence. We must first consider the first para. that where consideration is paid out of a fund belonging to two vendees in common they are respectively entitled to interest in such property identical with the interest to which they were respectively entitled in the fund. This matter was capable of proof and the plaintiff ought to have led evidence or called upon Ajudhiya to declare what share he had in the consideration money. The plaintiff did nothing of the sort. It was through plaintiff's default that there was an absence of evidence. Under the circumstances, it cannot be concluded in his favour that the vendees are entitled to equal interest in the property. If he had made the necessary attempt to prove the different shares of the vendees and the vendees had failed to declare them, it might have been possible to give him benefit of the second para. of s. 45 of the Transfer of Property Act. In his statement dated 29th May Ajudhiya Singh definitely stated that Sarju and he jointly purchased the property. When the plaintiff desired a separate decree against Ajudhiya, that was his opportunity to question Ajudhiya what portion of the consideration money Rs. 1,450 declared by Ajudhiya to be the correct sale price was paid by him. When parties failed to carry on litigation in the Trial Court in the way they should, this Court will not be able to help them. The suit against Ajudhiya also, therefore, must fail for want of ascertainment of his share.

The learned Counsel for the respondent urged generally that the plaintiff was bound to sue for the entire property and quoted a Bench ruling of this Court in Mahabir Prasad v. Ram Jiawan Lal (2). I shall not discuss its applicability to the circumstances of the present case because in my opinion the occasion does not arise.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bankura, dated the 18th February 1922, modifying that of the Munsif, Khatra, dated the 20th August 1921.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs-respondents brought a suit out of which this appeal has arisen for confirmation of possession of a certain tank on establishment of title thereto as appertaining to their chak Keshabad or in the alternative for declaration of their right of easement for taking water from the said tank for irrigating their lands in that chak. The learned Munsif who tried the case dismissed the suit and found against the plaintiffs on both the points. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the Munsif as to the finding on the question of title but held that the plaintiffs succeeded in proving their alleged right of easement for drawing water from the tank for irrigation purposes.

Against this finding of the lower Appellate Court several objections have been taken. Firstly, it is urged that the plaintiffs and the defendants being tenants under the same landlord, no right of easement can be acquired by the plaintiffs against the defendants. This point was not raised in the pleadings in any of the Courts below and we have not sufficient findings as to enable us to examine this point.

It is next urged that there is no finding that the user by the plaintiffs of the water of the tank was open, peaceful, uninterrupted and as of right. There is no doubt that the judgment as recorded by the learned Subordinate Judge is not happily worded and is open to the criticism made by the learned Vakil for the appellants. But reading the findings of the learned Judge and his observations on the points raised before him we think that it will serve no useful purpose to remand the case back to him for inserting in his judgment words which are to be found in s 26 of the Indian Limitation Act. The findings of the learned Subordinate Judge are that according to the defendant's own witnesses there is a cut in the bank of the tank towards the plaintiff's chak which has existed for long over 20 years, that the plaintiffs have no other source of irrigation that it was absolutely necessary for them to take water from the tank for the purpose of irrigating their lands and that it may be presumed that they have been exercising this right for a considerable time. This conclusion, the learned Subordinate Judge draws from a certain solehnama between the parties filed in a criminal case. Taking into consideration these circumstances the learned Judge proceeded to examine the evidence adduced by the parties and observes that in the light of the above circumstances he prefers the evidence on the plaintiffs' side and holds that the plaintiffs have a right of easement over the tank and that the evidence of the defendants appeared to him to be very poor and unworthy of credit on this point On these considerations he found that the plaintiffs exercised that right for over 20 years ending within 2 years before suit. Then he refers to the evidence of one of the witnesses of the plaintiffs that there was a dispute between the parties about the ownership of the tank since 1305 and remarks that the dispute about the ownership of the tank did not necessarily indicate that there was a dispute over the plaintiffs' right to take water for irrigation. In the result he allowed the appeal and declared the plaintiffs' right of easement over the tank and ordered that the plaintiffs would be at liberty to take water from the tank in suit for irrigation of their lands in Keshabad chak whenever necessary by cutting an opening in the bank of that tank adjacent to that chak at the point marked B. There is a further direction that the plaintiffs should be bound to close up that opening after the necessary quantity of water has been drawn. These findings in our judgment amount to exercise by the plaintiff of this right of easement as of right for the period of 20 years uninterrupted and without obstruction. All the expressions used in s. 26, Limitation Act, have been judicially interpreted and it is now settled that in order to establish a right of easement it is enough for the plaintiff to prove that he has been exercising the right without interruption, without express or implied permission of the owner of the dominant tenement and without secrecy or stealth. The findings of the learned Judge amount to this that the right enjoyed by the plaintiff was an easement within the meaning of s. 26, Limitation Act, We think that this objection must be overruled.

The third point raised on behalf of the appellant is that the easement cannot be claimed over a property which is also claimed by the plaintiffs as belonging to them; or in other words, when the exercise of the right referable to the easement claimed is due to the assertion of a right of ownership in the property, the plaintiffs will not be entitled to claim easement over the property. This point has been set at rest by the Full Bench decision in the case of Narendra Nath Barari v. Abhoy Charan Chattopadhya (1) where it has been held that it is not inconsistent for the plaintiff to claim mourashi right in a property and in the alternative a right of easement over the same.

(1) 34 C. 51; 4 C. L. J. 437; 11 C. W. N. 20; 1 M. L. T. 364.

The fourth ground of attack is that the plaintiffs have failed to prove the user of the right claimed by them within two years of the institution of the suit. This objection is met by the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge which runs as follows:—"I also find that the plaintiffs exercised the right for over 20 years ending within 2 years before suit."

Lastly it is argued that the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court virtually dispossesses the defendants from the entire tank as the plaintiffs are entitled under it to use the water of the tank to the last drop. The plaintiffs claim the right to irrigate their lands by drawing water from this tank to irrigate their chak and that right has been found established by the lower Appellate Court. They are, therefore, entitled to draw so much water as is necessary for the purpose of irrigating the lands and no more. In this view of the plaintiffs' right the lower Appellate Court in its decree has ordered that the plaintiffs shall be bound to close up that opening after their necessity for water is over, whether the water of the entire tank would be necessary for irrigating the lands of the plaintiffs or a lesser quantity would be sufficient, it is impossible to judge. The decree as passed by the lower Appellate Court is explicit and there is no doubt with regard to this matter.

On the whole we think that the view taken by the lower Appellate Court must be upheld and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The cross-objection is not pressed and is accordingly dismissed.

Appeal and cross-objection dismissed.

Courts in India have to be careful to see that the process of the Court and the law of procedure are not abused by judgment-debtors in such a way as to make Courts of law instrumental in defrauding creditors, who have obtained decrees in accordance with their rights. [p. 22, col. 2.]

Where a Court passing a decree transfers it to another Court for execution under s. 39 of the C. P. C., and while the proceedings are being carried on in the Court of transfer, the judgment-debtor dies, the Court of transfer is not divested of jurisdiction over the execution proceedings by the death of the judgment-debtor. On the application of the decree-holder the Court of transfer, which is executing the decree, must issue a notice under O. XXI, r. 22 of the C. P. C. to the person against whom execution is applied for as legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor. Where such notice is issued and the person against whom execution is applied for acquiesces in the proceedings and submits to the jurisdiction of the Court of transfer by putting forward objections to the execution, the mere fact that no application has been made under s. 50 of the Code to the Court which passed the decree will not vitiate the proceedings. [p. 23, cols. 1 & 2.]

Paragraph 1 of Sch. III to the C. P. Appeal against an order of the Sub-Judge, Hardoi, dated the 22nd April 1924.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, H. D. Chandra and Krishna Bahadur, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Kuar Jang Bahadur, a judgment-debtor in various execution proceedings, has instituted four appeals Nos. 29, 30, 42 and 43 of 1924 against certain orders of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi passed during those execution proceedings. There is a considerable amount of confusion in the appeals because separate orders in separate execution proceedings have not been made the subject of separate appeals. There are three execution proceedings Nos. 174, 175 and 176 of 1916 pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi and Kuar Jang Bahadur's objections to the continuation of those proceedings were all dismissed, yet Appeal No. 29 has been filed with respect to the dismissal of objection in Execution Case No. 175 of 1916 only. The judgment-creditor in all the three execution proceedings is the Bank of Upper India in liquidation.

As to Appeal No. 30 the mistake is made of filing a joint appeal against two separate decree-holders, Jagat Narain minor and Munshi Lal.

Appeals Nos. 29, 42 and 43 raise one single question. We shall consider the facts of the case in which the decree-holder is the Bank of Upper India in liquidation.

The decree was passed on 29th April, 1916, by the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow against Raja Durga Prasad father of the appellant Jang Bahadur. It was transferred for execution to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi the same year under s. 39 of the C. P. C. The decree was one for sale on foot of mortgage and as the property sought to be sold was ancestral property the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi transferred the proceedings in sale to the Collector of Hardoi under s. 68 of the C. P. C. After this action was taken, Raja Durga Prasad died on 23rd April, 1920.

On 2nd June, 1920 the Bank applied to have the decree executed against the appellant Jang Bahadur. The application was one for substitution of names, but according to law the proper procedure was to apply for execution against the legal representative of the judgment-debtor. The provisions relating to substitution of names contained in O. XXII, do not apply to execution proceedings as laid down in r. 12 of that Order. Notice was issued to Jang Bahadur as required by O. XXI, r. 22 (1) (b), but after service Jang Bahadur made no appearance. Proceedings in execution were, therefore, taken against him by order dated 4th August, 1920. During those proceedings Jang Bahadur made various objections both in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and before the Collector. After these proceedings had continued for three and a half years Jang Bahadur applied to the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi on 10th April, 1924 for an order that all proceedings in that Court subsequent to the date of the death of his father were without jurisdiction and should be set aside. This prayer was refused by the Subordinate Judge by his order dated 22nd of April 1924 and the present Appeal No. 29 is filed from one of those orders.

It may be mentioned that the money due to the Bank at present is over 4 lakhs of rupees and since 1916 neither the appellant nor his father has made any payment. For one reason or another the sale of the property has been postponed. Now the appellant thinks that he has discovered means of avoiding payment altogether. The argument put forward on his behalf is that he was wrongly brought on the record by the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi who had no jurisdiction to do so, as under s. 50 of the C. P. C. only the Court which passed the decree can receive application for execution of the decree against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor. According to this argument the Court at Hardoi had no jurisdiction to receive such an application and take proceedings thereon and all proceedings should be stopped until a proper application for execution is made by the decree-holder in the Court having jurisdiction. The aim obviously is that when the decree-holder applies to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow objection will be made of the application being time-barred as having been made three years after the next previous application. Use is sought to be made of a Court of law to perpetrate scandalous injustice. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as far back as 1872 that the difficulties of a litigant in India commence when he has obtained a decree. Courts in India have to be careful to see that process of the Court and law of procedure are not abused by judgment-debtors in such a way as to make Courts of law instrumental in defrauding creditors, who have obtained decrees in accordance with their rights.

In our opinion we are safe from perpetrating any such injustice. The principal authority quoted on behalf of the appellant is the Full Bench ruling of the Madras High Court in the case of Swaminatha Ayyar v. Vaidyanatha Sastri (1). The facts of that case however were different from those before us. In the Madras case the judgment-debtor died before any application for execution was put in by the decree-holder after the transfer of execution. No execution proceeding was being carried on in the Court of transfer at the time of the judgment-debtor's death. Under those circumstances the Madras High Court held that the application to execute the decree against the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor lay in the Court which passed the decree and not in the Court to which the decree was transferred. In our case the proceedings were being carried on in the Court of transfer at the time of the death of the judgment-debtor. The rule properly applicable would be that of O.XXI, r. 22 where the Court executing the decree is directed to issue a notice to the person against whom execution is applied for on the death of the judgment-debtor. Such a distinction appears to have been in the mind of the learned Chief Justice if we study the observations at page 470* of the report. When the opinion of the Full Bench was conveyed to the Divisional Bench in that case they refused to consider the entertainment of the petition for execution by the Court of transfer as an irregularity because an objection was taken by the judgment-debtor to the application being entertained by that Court. In the present case no such objection was taken and in fact the judgment-debtor continued to make objections to execution submitting to the jurisdiction of the Hardoi Court. It is instructive to notice how a Bench of the Madras Court itself has distinguished the case in Swaminatha Ayyar v. Vaidyanatha Sastri (1) in Raghavachari v. Paramaswami Pillai (2). It was the judgment-debtor's legal representative who applied to the Court of transfer and desired it to hear his objections. The Madras High Court held that, in such a case the Court of transfer had jurisdiction to hear the objection and proceed with the execution. Obviously, therefore, the Madras High Court does not hold that the Court of transfer is divested of jurisdiction in the execution proceedings by the death of the judgment-debtor. They have formed an opinion as to the procedure to be adopted by the decree-holder in taking out execution proceedings against the legal representative of the judgment-debtor where the judgment debtor dies before any proceedings in execution are taken in the Court of transfer. When the judgment-debtor acquiesces in a different procedure and puts forward objections in the Court of transfer no case will arise of want of jurisdiction, but there would only be an irregularity of procedure curable under the provisions of s. 99 of the C. P. C.

Under the circumstances of the present case we are not required to dissent specifically from the ruling of the Madras High Court.

The case of Sham Lal Pal v. Madhu Suden Sircar (3) is in direct conflict with the Madras ruling and the Madras High Court specifically dissented from it. In that case also the judgment-debtor died before the judgment-creditor had taken steps for the execution of the decree against the judgment-debtor in the Court of transfer. The Judges of the Calcutta High Court pointed out that even assuming that an application under s. 234 (s. 50 of the present Code) to the Court which passed the decree was a necessary preliminary to proceedings under s. 248 (O. XXI of r. 22 of the present Code) the omission to make it was only an irregularity and under s. 478 (s. 99 of the present Code) the order of the Court of transfer was not such as should be reversed. In the present case there are no merits because it is not suggested that the legal representative of Durga Prasad was somebody other than the appellant, nor has the appellant been prejudiced by the application being made in the Hardoi Court as admittedly he resides within the jurisdiction of that Court. He himself submitted to the jurisdiction of the Hardoi Court for three and a half years. We have already pointed out that under the peculiar circumstances of the Madras case the Division Bench did not accept the plea of irregularity of procedure. It however did not lay down that the omission of an application under s. 50 to the Court which passed the decree can in no case be an irregularity capable of being remedied under the provisions of s. 99, C. P. C.

In the view we take it is not necessary to examine the other rulings quoted on behalf of the appellant:—Hira Chand Harjivan Das v. Kastur Chand Kasi Das (4), (2) 55 Ind. Cas. 812; 11 L. W. 173.

(3) 22 C. 558; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 372.

(4) 18 B. 224; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 657.

Seth Shapurji Nana Bhai v. Shankar Dat Dube (5), Tameshar Prasad v. Tahkur Prasad (6), Amar Chandra Banerjee v. Gur Prosunno Mukerjee (7).

Some of the cases relate to the transferee of a decree to which other considerations will apply as the case of a transferee is not covered by the provisions of O. XXI, r. 22. We have examined all these rulings but have nowhere discovered any definite pronouncement that at the death of a judgment-debtor the Court of transfer ceases to have jurisdiction. The Bomay High Court went so far as to hold that the application for execution against the legal representative was to be made to the Court which passed the decree, but the notice to the legal representative was to be issued by the Court of transfer. Obviously to give effect to the provisions of s. 50 several High Courts have held it desirable that the application for execution against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor should be filed in the Court which passed the decree, but this method is considered a method of procedure at a time when the jurisdiction of the Court of transfer continues and the Court of transfer is considered the proper Court to issue notice to the legal reperesentative and carry on proceedings in execution without a fresh order of transfer. According to their opinion, the only thing wanting in a case like the present was an application to the Court which passed the decree and even those Courts would have held under the circumstances of the present case that the omission was only an irregularity.

We dismiss the Appeals Nos. 29, 42 and 43 of 1924 with costs.

As regards Appeal No. 30 the facts are these. After the decrees of the Bank and other decree-holders were transferred to the Collector of Hardoi under s. 68, C. P. C., and the Collector was taking proceedings in execution in accordance with rules given in the Third Schedule of the Code, the execution of a money decree was transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi. In execution proceedings he ordered the appointment of a Receiver to take the annual income of the property and pay off these particular decree-holders. In our opinion such an order was contrary to the provisions of para. 11 of the Schedule which lays down that no Civil Court shall issue any process against property within the control of the Collector under s. 68 in execution of a decree for the payment of money. The appointment of a Receiver and the direction to him to collect the income of the property are processes of the Civil Court. Paragraph 1 of the Schedule which enunciates the powers of the Collector puts the Collector in charge of the income of the property as well as of the property itself because he has power to raise the amount of the decree by letting the property in perpetuity or for a term or by mortgaging the whole or part of the property. His powers over the income of the property cannot be interfered with by the Civil Court so long as the Collector is in a position to exercise the powers conferred on him by Sch. III.

The question, however, is whether we can interfere at this stage when the judgment-debtor has raised this particular objection a long time after the orders were passed for the appointment of a Receiver. When the judgment-debtor previously appealed against those orders to this Court he did not raise this particular objection. We think, therefore, that proceedings up to date cannot be vitiated and we cannot direct repayment of the money collected by the Receiver to the judgment-debtor. In fact the judgment-debtor has no right to receive the money. If any person has that right he is the decree-holder in execution of whose decree the property was placed under the control of the Collector to exercise powers under Sch. III of the Code. We shall not interfere with what has been done so far.

We think, however, that the Receiver should be removed from the date of our present order. Appeal is made only in one case and our order will, therefore, apply to that case alone, but we direct the Judge of the lower Court to pass similar orders in other cases. There is so much confusion that it is not possible to determine in which particular case the appeal is lodged. The Judge of the lower Court however is directed to pass orders removing the Receiver in the cases of both decree-holders Jagat Narain minor and Munshi Lal. We make no order as to costs of this appeal.

A suit under s. 92, C. P. Mr. P. V. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under s. 115, C. P. C., to revise an order passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Tinnevelly declaring that ad valorem Court-fee on Rs. 11,000 was payable on the plaint presented to him by the petitioner before me in this Court. The plaint was one under s. 92 of the Code, and in the plaint he asked that the defendants should be made to refund to the trust the sum of Rs. 11,000 at which figure he estimated the amount misappropriated by them. He also asked that certain properties in the possession of the defendants should be handed over to the new trustees to be appointed under the scheme to be framed by the Court, and these properties were valued at Rs. 90 at 5 times the annual assessment of the lands described in the schedule. The figure 11,000 was arrived at in this manner. He actually paid a stamp duty only of Rs. 10 on the plaint as for a declaration and urged that the other reliefs which he claimed in the plaint were not capable of valuation because he was not asking that the property should be handed over to himself and because he claimed no beneficial interest in those reliefs. The Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff was bound to pay Court-fees on those reliefs as they formed part of the subject-matter in dispute. It seems to me that this view is not correct. The plaintiff does not claim any beneficial interest in these sums, but only says that on going through the accounts a sum which he estimates at Rs. 11,000 would be found due by the trustees to the trust and that the trustees should be asked to make good to the trust itself that amount of money and hand over possession of the immoveable property. In such a case, we cannot treat those reliefs as being part of the subject-matter in dispute between the parties, they are merely ancillary reliefs. The case is covered by the ruling in Ramrup Das v. Sujaram Das (1). I respectfully follow the view taken in it by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court. No doubt, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, there is an observation in Srinivasa v. Venkata (2) that if damages on account of misappropriated moneys are claimed, Court-fee will have to be paid on such amounts. But these observations were unnecessary for the purpose of disposing of that case, and were only obiter dicta; and, therefore, I do not think that I am bound by those observations. It would be a hardship to worshippers who bring suits under s. 92 in order to see that the trusts are properly carried out and that the trustees do not misappropriate the moneys belonging to the trust or abuse the trust, to have to pay Court-fees upon such large sums of money.

(1) 7 Ind. Cas. 92; 12 C. L. J. 211; 14 C. W. N. 932.

(2) 11 M. 148; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 103.

It will practically prevent them from bringing such suits. I am, therefore inclined to think that this Court should take a lenient view as regards Court-fees with reference to claims of this sort. As it seems to me that the relief claimed clearly falls under Art. 17 (6) of the Second Schedule to the old Court Fees Act, which was in force when the plaint was filed, there is no reason why the plaintiff should not be allowed to file the plaint on a ten rupees stamp. The view taken by the Calcutta High Court in the case above quoted seems to me to be the proper view. My attention has been drawn to Umrao Mirza v. Jones (3), but that case was not one under s. 92 so far as can be gathered from the report. If it is supposed to lay down a rule which is in conflict with the ruling in Ramrup Das v. Sujaram Das (1) I think we should prefer to follow the later decision of the Calcutta High Court. Omrao Mirza v. Jones (3) was cited to the learned Judges in Ramrup Das v. Sujaram Das (1) as appears from the arguments of the Counsel before them, but no reference is made to it in the judgment. Thakuri v. Bramha Narain (4) has also been brought to my notice but it is easily distinguishable. In fact in that case the learned Judges held at p. 63 that Court-fee need not be paid upon any claim for damages as part of the account asked for under s. 92 and they distinguish the cases in Delroos Banoo Begam v. Ashgur Ally Khan (5) and Omrao Mirza v. Jones (3) already referred to. They, no doubt, say that if a prayer for an injunction against interference was added and if that is valued, Court-fee ought to be paid for it. Whether that portion of the decision is correct or not, it is not necessary for me to say, for there is no such claim put forward in this case. The Subordinate Judge has referred to 37 M. L. J. 447. But there does not seem to be any case in that report, having any bearing; there is clearly some error here. With reference to the new Court Fees Act, there is a clear ruling by Venkatasubba Rao, J., in Ramanuja Naidu v. Allagappa Chetty (6) in which he held in a case exactly similar to the present that a single Court-fee of Rs. 50 only need be paid. I should have been content merely to follow that case in deciding this case, had it not been for the fact that this case arises not under the new Act but under the old Act. It seems to me that the tendency has been in such cases to hold that a Court-fee of Rs. 10 is sufficient and the Legislature has now made it clear that extra Court-fees are not payable even though claims are made for accounts to be taken and for moneys to be paid by the defaulting trustee to the trust fund if he had misappropriated them. I hold that the Court-fee of Rs. 10 paid on the plaint is sufficient in this case.

It was also argued that whatever might be my opinion in the case, I should not interfere in revision as the parties have another remedy by way of appeal to the proper Appellate Court if the plaintiff refuses to pay the Court-fees and gets the plaint rejected. No doubt, there is such a remedy. But it seems to me to be a cumbrous remedy, for if the plaint is rejected he will have to pay the same stamp duty on appeal. It has been the practice of this Court to interfere in this class of cases in revision and set the matter right, so that no further trouble might arise. No conflict of opinion in this Court on this point has been brought to my notice, although it is true that the Patna High Court has taken a different view. In the case in Chandramani Koer v. Basdeo Narain Singh (7) the main argument was that the cursus curiæ of that High Court had been not to interfere under s. 115 in cases of this sort. But in this Court cursus curiæ has not been in that way at all. Therefore, the argument loses much of its force in this Court. It seems to me that it is open to this Court to interfere because the question is really one of jurisdiction as the plaint has to be rejected if the stamp duty is not paid. I am also of opinion that it is desirable that under s. 115, C. P. C. we should interfere and not leave the party to his remedy by way of appeal. I am, therefore, inclined to interfere under s. 115 in this case and I do so. The civil revision petition is allowed and the order of the Subordinate Judge is set aside and he is directed to take the suit on his file on the stamp of Rs. 10 already paid, and dispose of it according to law. Costs of this petition and costs in the lower Court will be dealt Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by manager—Benefit to family—Alienation, whether can be challenged.

Under the Hindu Law a transfer of family property can be made by the manager of the family either for legal necessity or for the family benefit. [p. 28, col. 2.]

Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonweree, 6 M. I. A. 373 at p. 423; 18 W. R. 81*n*; Sevestre 25*n*; 2 Suth. P. C. J. 29; 1 Sar. P. C. J. 552; 19 E. R. 147, followed.

Where by an alienation of family property it is intended to get rid of an estate which is inconveniently situated, which has no sir land attached to it, and which is not sufficiently profitable, and to substitute for it something that is likely to yield a larger income by an extension of the family business then being carried on, the transaction cannot be challenged. JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the sons of Narain, and seek to set aside a sale of certain ancestral property situated in the village Buzurgwar, which was effected by the latter in favour of Madho and others now represented by the defendants-respondents, on the 2nd of April 1910. The sale was effected for a consideration of Rs. 3,200 the whole of which was paid in cash to the vendor at the time of registration.

The allegation of the plaintiffs was that they were not bound by the sale inasmuch as it was effected for no legal necessity. The defendant vendees, however, contended that the property sold was situated at a considerable distance from the place where Narain was residing, that it yielded a very small profit to the family, and that the sale in question was effected in order to benefit the family by applying the proceeds to business which was likely to yield greater profit. The plaintiffs also asserted that the sale was effected without consideration and that the property sold was of greater value than that paid by the defendants vendees. These facts were, however, controverted by the defendants vendees.

The Court below found that the property in question was not of a larger value than that represented by the sale consideration paid by the defendants vendees, that the sale was effected for consideration and for the benefit of the family, and that the plaintiffs were consequently bound by it.

We have examined the evidence adduced in the case and are satisfied that the property sold yielded a very small profit to the family, and that owing to the distance at which it was situated, the family found some difficulty in managing it.

The property sold comprised a 5-annas 5-pies share in one of the mahals of Mauza Buzurgwar, which was situated at a distance of about 16 miles from Bardand where the family resided. The sale deed mentioned that the village was situated at a great distance from the family residence, that the vendor was unable to make suitable arrangements for its management and there was also a need for money to carry on business which could not have been obtained except by the transfer of the said property. The khewat for 1320*F.* filed shows that the mahal in which the property sold was situated yielded a gross rental of Rs. 345-14-6 per year (Ex. B), out of which Rs. 139 were payable as land revenue (Ex. 3). It is not clear whether the latter amount included the cesses payable on account of the estate. But even if it did include, the share sold yielded, roughly speaking, about Rs. 69 per year, which would in ordinary circumstances be barely enough for a family consisting of a father and two sons, with such other members as may have been dependent on them, for their support. It is not clear whether the family possessed at the time any other landed property. The evidence however, goes to show that they had a cloth business which was carried on in the name of Narain and his son Jagmohan, one of the present plaintiffs. Ram Deo states that in Sambat 1965 Baijnath and Nageshar had dealings with his shop in connection with the purchase of cloth, and that in Sambat 1965, which would correspond with the year 1908, there was a balance of Rs. 183 due by them under the previous account. Baijnath was the father of Narain. He had two sons Nageshar and Narain. Gauri Dat states that in Sambat 1966 Narain and Jagmohan took cloth from his shop and that there was an account in their names in his books. He further states that there were similar dealings in Sambat 1966-67 and that cloth worth Rs. 847-8-0 was purchased by them from him, out of which Rs. 671 were paid to him, and that in the following year, Sambat 1867-68, they again purchased cloth worth Rs. 1,125 from his shop, out of which Rs. 1,101-14-0 were paid by them. Gauri Dat is a wholesale dealer paying an income-tax assessed on an income of Rs. 18,400 per year, and his evidence, supported by the account books to which he refers and read with the statement of Ram Deo, leaves no doubt in our minds that there was a family business in cloth carried on at the time when the sale transaction in question was effected, and that Jagmohan was concerned in or jointly carried on that business with his father. Bandhu Lal, patwari of Buzurgwar, states that he was patwari of the village for the last 17 or 18 years and knew the plaintiffs to whose place of residence he used to go, and that the sale in question was effected by Narain for carrying on business in cloth which existed from before.

The Court below evidently thought that the business for which the sale was effected was a new business started by Narain. But that is not the effect of the evidence which has been adduced in the case.

The business was evidently a profitable business, for the Income-tax Register for 1918 goes to show that Narain was assessed at an income of Rs. 1 400 per year on his business besides house rent. It does not appear when Narain died and whether that business was continued after his death by his sons, namely, the present plaintiffs. But even if the business eventually failed, that would not affect the validity of the transaction which was entered into in 1910 for the purpose of disposing of property, which yielded a small profit and was difficult to manage and to apply the sale consideration to the extension of the existing family business. The business was not of a speculative nature and the subsequent failure of that business if it did fail affords no criterion for determining whether the transaction was originally a prudent transaction, which the manager of a Hindu family, and specially a father, was entitled to make for the family benefit.

Under the Hindu Law a transfer can be made by the manager of a family either for legal necessity or for the family benefit. In Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council said :—

"The power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own, is, under the Hindu Law, a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. But where, in the particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make, in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded."

In Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lal (2) and Mohanund Mondul v. Nafur Mondul (3) the same principle was extended to the case of sales. The decision in Krishna Chandra Chowdhury v. Ratan Ram Pal (4) does not apply, because no speculative development of the family estate or business was hereby intended. What was intended was to get rid of an estate which was inconveniently situated, which had no sir land attached to it and was not sufficiently profitable, and to substitute for it something that was likely to yield a larger income by an extension of family business then being carried on. The decision in Ganga Prasad v. Ram Sarup (5) and Krishnadhan Banerje v.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is a bataidar who has taken a lease of the defendants' land for a period of 10 years on terms set forth in the registered bataikhat dated 15th March 1918 of which Ex. A-1 is a copy. Plaintiff's case is that he cultivated the fields in the years 1918, 1919 and 1920 and had given the defendant No. 1 his share of the batai produce of those years. In spite of the fact that he had done the summer tillings for the year 1921, the defendant forcibly dispossessed him from the land and entered into possession in June 1921. Hence this suit was lodged in the year 1922 for recovery of possession of land for the unexpired term of the lease ending with 1928. The defence was two-fold, that plaintiff voluntarily and of his own accord relinquished the fields in suit, and that the defendant No. 1 entered into possession in exercise of the rights expressly reserved by the terms of the lease. The defendant No. 1 after such dispossession sub-let the land to defendant No. 2 but the latter remained absent despite due service and made no defence.

The Court of first instance held on the evidence that the plaintiff did not prepare the fields in suit in the year 1921 by making the summer tillings, that he did not sow cotton-seed in the fields in suit in 1921, that the defendant No. 1 did not forcibly dispossess him of the fields in suit and lastly that plaintiff surrendered his fields under circumstances pleaded by the defendant No. 1 and that plaintiff was, therefore, estopped from bringing the suit. In this view of the case the plaintiff's claim was dismissed without giving any adjudication as regards the second part of the defence, namely, the reservation of the right of re-entry under the terms of the bataikhat as entitling the defendant to resist possession. The appeal preferred by the plaintiff was dismissed by the Additional District Judge. Before him the question of the admissibility of the oral evidence to prove the alleged relinquishment of the lease-hold rights was raised. The Additional District Judge held that oral evidence was admissible to prove the surrender. The Additional District Judge fully realising the distinction made in the case of Kattika Bapanamma v. Kattika Kristnamma (1), as regards the admissibility or otherwise of evidence to prove an agreement to discharge as distinguished from the discharge itself, held that s. 92 of the Evidence Act did not bar the production of the oral evidence of a surrender or relinquishment. In this view he concurred with the finding of the First Court and held that plaintiff had surrendered his rights as a tenant under the lease as alleged by the defendant No. 1. The plaintiff has come up in second appeal. His contentions are that oral evidence was improperly admitted to prove the alleged relinquishment and that the plaintiff was entitled to continue in possession under the terms of the document and that defendants' possession was forcible and further that the decision was contrary to pleadings and evidence on record.

(1) 30 M. 231; 17 M. L. J. 30.

In my opinion neither of the Courts below seems to have grasped the real point which had to be decided in the case. According to the defendant the alleged talk of surrender took place in November 1920. The statement of the defendant is extremely vague on the question of the actual handing over of possession and the point of time when the land was actually surrendered or put into the defendant's possession. The whole of the evidence relates only to the conversation but not a single witness tells about the land having been actually delivered into the defendant's possession by the plaintiff in token of the alleged relinquishment or surrender. The evidence relied on as evidence of relinquishment or surrender of land is really no legal evidence of the surrender or relinquishment but it at the most proves a preliminary conversation about the readiness or agreement to make or take a surrender of the land. The finding that there was a relinquishment has been thus based on no legal evidence to that effect and does not bind this Court. The time of the alleged relinquishment is also quite unusual; October or November is ordinarily not the month when land would be surrendered; that is the very time when the cotton and juar crops are standing and bring income. It is very unlikely that the lands would be surrendered or at any rate made over in that month when the crops are on the land. It is held in Srinivasa Swami Aiyangar v. Athmarama Iyer (2), that a registered-deed has to be cancelled by a registered-deed and that evidence of an oral agreement to rescind it is shut out by s. 92 (4) of the Evidence Act. Even the conduct relied on as showing that they considered the registered transaction as at an end is equally shut out by the said section. Compare Mayandi Chetti v. Oliver (3). Here the plaintiff's conduct is just the other way. I, therefore, hold that the case has not been properly dealt with by the lower Courts and that no voluntary surrender is legally proved. The other pleas raised by the defendant have not been adjudicated upon. The case must, therefore, go back to the First Court for the decision of the issues left undecided. If as the result of the decision which may be arrived at by the First Court on the issues left undecided it is found that the plaintiff's lease could not be determined arbitrarily by the lessor, he will be entitled to a decree; but if the findings be that the defendant could at his option re-enter under the terms of the bataikhat then the further question whether such a term should or should not be enforced will naturally call for determination by that Court. If the Court holds that such a term is void or unenforceable the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree. The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the case remanded to the First Court with directions to dispose of the case with advertence to the above remarks. Costs throughout will abide the event. The plaintiff will get a refund of Court-fees in both the Appellate Courts as the decrees of both the Courts below are hereby set aside.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 60—Mortgage—Clog on equity of redemption, what amounts to—Usufructuary mortgage for 95 years—Covenant to pay interest after expiry of period, validity of.

Where a mortgage-deed is drafted with the intention that redemption of the mortgaged property should be practically frustrated, that is to say, made so difficult and so hedged about that there is no likelihood of its ever being redeemed, the covenants contained in the deed must be regarded as clogs on the equity of redemption and the mortgagor is entitled to be relieved from the operation of such covenants. [p. 31, col. 2.]

A usufructuary mortgage contained a stipulation that the mortgage would not be redeemed for a period of 95 years, and that in addition to the rents and profits of the property, the mortgagee would at the expiration of the period of the mortgage be paid interest at a certain rate along with the principal money:

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and Gadadhar Prasad, for the Appellants.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 20th of April 1897 Randhir Singh being then an occupancy tenant of a holding, mortgaged it usufructuarily by two documents of that date receiving Rs. 200, or its equivalent in value in respect of one mortgage and Rs. 500 in respect of the other. The mortgage for Rs. 200 was not to be redeemable for 95 years, the mortgage for Rs. 500 was not to be redeemable for 96 years, and to that there was added a stipulation that inasmuch as the usufructuary return was not sufficient to give the proper amount of interest on the outstanding money, there should at the expiration of the 96 years be paid with the principal sum, interest at the rate of four annas per cent. per mensem. A similar provision is to be found in the second deed. The figures of liability for interest at the end of 95 and 96 years which have been given to us are not disputed and amount to Rs. 1,940 and Rs. 485. The position, therefore, on the 20th of April 1897 was that the mortgagor bound himself not to seek redemption for periods of 95 and 96 years and further to be prepared at that time to provide sums respectively of Rs. 1,940 and Rs. 485 and Rs. 500 and Rs. 200 as well. Randhir Singh brought a suit for redemption and to that suit it was objected that the transaction was really a sale and inasmuch as an occupancy tenant was forbidden by law to sell his holding the parties had designedly cleaked the transaction in this mortgage form. Randhir Singh took the point that the documents were really mortgages and that he was entitled to redeem them disregarding the provisions as regards the 95 years and the 96 years. He seemed also to be of opinion that he could disregard the provision as regards the accumulation of interest because we are told that he tendered the sum of Rs. 200 and the sum of Rs. 500 before commencing the action. We have been shown, we believe, all the authorities bearing on this matter, and broadly they may be taken as falling under two heads. It appears that there is a consensus of opinion amongst all the Courts in India that if a period is fixed prior to the expiry of which redemption cannot be granted and that stipulation is assented to redemption cannot be granted before that period has in fact expired and the cases which have been cited to us were cases in which very long periods of years had been fixed. In one case a period of 150 years was fixed. Then there is another view of the law exemplified by the case of Sarabdawan Singh v. Bijai Singh (1). In that case there was a considerable period fixed, namely, 40 years. There was also an extraordinary provision, namely. that, unless the mortgage-money was tendered on a particular day, the mortgage would be irredeemable for a further period of 40 years. There was also an unjust and illegal stipulation that the mortgage should not be redeemed with borrowed money. Those being the main facts, this Court consisting of Mr. Justice Chamier and Mr. Justice Rafique had to decide what were the right principles to be applied in considering a case of this nature. Now there is no doubt that if the case under consideration (Rajai Singh v. Randhir Singh) were decided by English Law the plaintiff would have succeeded on the plain statment of the facts. That is evident from the way in which matters of this kind are treated in England as exemplified by the case of Morgan v. Jeffreys (2). In the 36 Allahabad case [Sarbadawan Singh v. Bijai Singh (1)] we see indications of the influence of English authorities and the head-note says: "A Court of Equity will not permit any device or contrivance designed or calculated to prevent or impede redemption, although it may be impossible to lay down any general rule as to what should not be regarded as an improper restraint or fetter on the right of redemption." Now the question that we have got to decide is this. We have got to look at the whole circumstances and to say whether this agreement was drafted with the intention that redemption of this property should be practically frustrated, that is to say, made so difficult and so hedged about that there was no human likelihood of its ever being redeemed. We do not propose to attempt what no Court has hitherto ever attempted, to define what circumstances generally will be deemed to be a clog or fetter on the equity of redemption. Each of these cases has to be looked at individully. Now, what are the matters which make both of these documents striking ones? The first is the enormously long period within which Randhir Singh was unable to tender the money and regain possession of his property. It was a period which was certainly to extend throughout the life of Randhir Singh and probably throughout the life of his son. Then as regards the question of interest; we believe that that stipulation was designedly drafted not because the mortgagee wanted any sum of interest paid into his hands, because if that had been his wish, he would have stipulated for an annual payment of interest so calculated as each year to reimburse him for his outlay; but we believe that it was drafted so that if anybody 95 or 96 years later came forward to redeem the property he would have met with a liability to produce a sum greater than the value of this property or any value it would ever be likely to reach.

It is to be noticed that there has been evidence that Rs. 700 was the full value of this property. If that be true anybody in the year 1922 would have to come forward with a sum more than three times the value of the property as it was in the year 1897. Under these circumstances we hold that there were two fetters, the length of time during which the redemption could not be had and the singular stipulation with regard to the payment of interest and the deferred date of such payment, which make it in our view inequitable that this transaction should be upheld in its literal terms. We consider it equitable and right that this suit should be decreed and that Randhir Singh shall have the opportunity of redeeming the property. We are in this view in agreement with the Munsif the lower Appellate Court and the Single Judge of this Court.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs and fees on the higher scale subject to the modification mentioned below.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji has asked us to define what we consider to be the proper terms on which redemption should be had. We are of opinion that redemption should be had only on tendering the two sums of Rs. 200 and Rs. 500 with interest calculated at the agreed rate of four annas per cent. per mensem in one case and Rs. 3 per cent. per annum in the other. Such interest to be calculated down to the date of tender by Randhir Singh.

Bengal Patni Taluks Regulation VIII of 1819, s. 11—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 25—Patni sale—Occupancy tenants—Purchaser, whether entitled to evict tenants.

The policy of the law at the time of the enactment of the Patni Regulation was to protect from eviction those actually on the land and cultivating it. [p. 33, col. 2.]

At the time of the enactment of the Patni Regulation occupancy tenants did not exist, those cultivating the lands were either khudkasht raiyats, that is, raiyats of the village cultivating the lands, or paikast raiyats who were cultivators who came from outside the village. Consequently, s. 11 of the Patni Regulation of 1819 extended protection to the only cultivating raiyats of the village then known, viz., khudkasht raiyats or resident and hereditary cultivators. Since the enactment of Patni Regulation another class of cultivating raiyats has grown up, whose occupancy rights after twelve years' possession are recognized and protected by the Bengal Tenancy Act. These tanants also are entitled to protection from eviction under s. 11 of the Regulation. [ibid.]

Per Chakravarti, J.—Section 11 of the Bengal Patni Taluks Regulation VIII of 1819 provides that the purchaser at a sale for arrears of rent under the Regulation should get the patni in the same condition which existed at the time of its creation. [p 34, col. 1.]

The substantive rights created in favour of the raiyats by the Bengal Tenancy Act do not in any way affect the provisions of the Patni Law. [p. 34, col. 2.]

The right of a patnidar is primarily to collect rents from raiyats and that right is in no way affected by s. 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [ibid.]

A raiyat with a right of occupancy now occupies the same position as a khudkasht raiyat and should, therefore, have the same protection as a khudkasht raiyat had when the Patni Regulation of 1819 was passed. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants against a decision of the District Judge of Nadia modifying a decision of the Subordinate Judge.

The suit out of which the appeal arises was for recovery of possession of certain land from the defendants. The plaintiffs purchased the land at a sale held under the Patni Regulations and their case was that when they went to take possession of the land they were resisted by the defendants and were compelled to bring the suit.

The case put forward by the defendants was that they or their predecessors-in-interest had been in possession of the land from before the Permanent Settlement or at any rate from before the creation of the patni and that they had been recognised as tenants in possession, that their holding was a raiyati holding of some 312 bighas together with some other lands lying to the east and west of the raiyati of 312 bighas which other lands they claimed as accretions thereto. A further contention was raised on their behalf that the plaintiffs were purchasers of a part of a patni but this contention has no force in view of the finding that the patni was of an 8-annas share. The claim to the lands lying to the east and west of the alleged raiyati holding of 312 bighas is untenable and cannot be maintained, as to these lands the defendants are clearly trespassers the land is outside their holding and is not as to any part thereof in the village of Mohisura as they contended and this claim must fail.

The dispute, therefore, narrows itself to a dispute as to that portion of the 312 bighas to which this suit relates.

On the facts as found the tenancy was created in 1298 (1891) after the creation of the patni and the main question which falls for our decision is whether the plaintiffs as purchasers at a patni sale under the regulations are entitled to eject the defendants or whether the defendants are entitled to remain on the land as tenants under the plaintiffs by virtue of their occupancy. The plaintiffs say that the defendants are not so entitled as they are not khudkasht raiyats or resident and hereditary cultivators who are the only persons protected on a patni sale by virtue of s. 11 of the Putni Regulations. The plaintiffs further contend that the holding is not raiyati but a tenure and that consequently even if rights of occupancy are protected the protection does not extend to the defendants who are not occupancy raiyats but tenure holders.

It is curious that if the plaintiffs' contention as to their right to evict is correct they have not been able to produce a single case in which in similar circumstances occupancy raiyats have been held liable to eviction.

The policy of the law at the time of the enactment of the Putni Regulations seems to have been to protect from eviction those cultivating the land; at the time of the enactment of the Putni Regulations occupancy rights did not exist, those cultivating the lands were either khudkasht raiyats, that is, raiyats of the village cultivating the lands; or paikast raiyats who were cultivators who came from outside the village. Consequently s. 11 of the Putni Regulations extends protection to the only cultivating raiyats of the village then known, namely, khudkasht raiyats or resident and hereditary cultivators. Since the enactment of these regulations another class of cultivating raiyats has grown up whose occupancy rights after 12 years' possession are recognised and protected by the Bengal Tenancy Act. This clearly shows that it has been the policy of the law throughout to protect those actually on the land and cultivating it.

Moreover, despite the findings of the two lower Courts that the defendants cannot rightfully claim to stand in the same position as the former khudkasht raiyats on the land if in fact they were khdkasht raiyats we do not think that the lower Courts have drawn the right legal inference from the facts found.

The evidence on the record to our mind establishes that the former tenants of the 312 bighas were khudkasht raiyats; we think, therefore, that the defendants may well claim to occupy the same position, despite the finding that their tenancy dates from 1891. It was we think a tenancy with the same incidents attaching thereto as formerly attached to the lands in the occupation of the previous tenants, that is to say we think upon the facts of this case the defendants can rightfully claim to be treated as khudkasht raiyats with the result that they are protected from eviction by the 3rd proviso to s. 11 of the Patni Regulations.

The claim that this is a tenure and not a raiyati holding is clearly not sustainable upon the findings of the Courts below.

The result is that the appellants cannot be evicted from any portion of the 312 bighas which forms their occupancy holding, possession of which they are entitled to retain upon payment of rent for the same to the respondents, but the appellants are not entitled to remain in possession of the other lands claimed in the suit which are outside the 312 bighas. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be varied accordingly. The appeal has succeeded in part and failed in part, so there will be no order as to costs.

And this order will apply in both the Courts below.

Chakravarti, J.—I agree with my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves in the judgment just delivered by him and wish only to add a few considerations in support of his view. On the main question raised in this appeal, section 11 of the Regulation VIII of 1819 really provides that the purchaser at a sale for arrears of rent under the Regulation should get the patni in the same condition which existed at the time of its creation. All interests created by the defaulter are intermediate between the interest of the zemindar who created the patni and the resident cultivators. The third clause of the section runs as follows: "Provided, nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to entitle the purchaser of a taluk or other saleable property intermediate between the zemindar and the actual cultivator to eject a khudkasht raiyat or resident or hereditary cultivators etc." This clause only indicates the limitations to the rights of the purchaser and makes it clear that the purchaser shall have no right to disturb the possession of a khudkasht raiyat. The rights of a putnidar are limited to a right to collect the rent from all raiyats; the knudkasht raiyats were the only cultivators who at the time, when this Regulation was enacted, enjoyed such rights: See s. 60, Regulation VIII of 1793, page 24 of Field's Introduction to the Bengal Regulations. The Act X of 1859 called the Rent Act for the first time created a class of raiyats with rights of occupancy, and in this class the old khudkasht raiyats were included; and the distinction between the khudkasht and paikast raiyats as mentioned in the Regulations was not recognised. This provision of the Rent Act was retained in Act VIII of 1869 and Act VIII of 1885 known as the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is argued with some plausibility that under s. 11 of the Regulation only the khudkasht raiyats were protected but not the raiyats with rights of occupancy. The right which the raiyats with right of occupancy enjoy under s. 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not available against a purchaser under the patni law on the ground that s. 195 of the Bengal Tenancy Act says that "Nothing in this Act shall affect...cl. (e) any enactments relating to patni tenures in so far as it relates to these tenures." This argument is unsound. The substantive rights created in favour of the raiyats by the Bengal Tenancy Act do not in any way affect the provision of the Patni Law. As I have indicated before, the right of a patnidar is primarily to collect rents from raiyats and that right is in no way affected by s. 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A raiyat called a khudkasht raiyat was protected from eviction by a purchaser under the Regulations, because such raiyats were not liable to eviction at the will of the zemindar. The raiyat with a right of occupancy now occupies the same position as a khudkasht raiyat. It seems, therefore, reasonable to hold that an occupancy raiyat now should have the same protection as a khudkasht raiyat had when the Regulation was passed. An illustration will show the absurdity of the contention that a purchaser at a patni sale should be entitled to subject an occupancy raiyat. A zemindar cannot now eject an occupancy raiyat except under the provision of s. 25. Suppose a zemindar grants a patni of the estate and the patni is sold under the Regulation, then, according to the argument of the respondent, the purchaser would have a right to eject the occupancy raiyats, right which, as I have shown above, the zemindar himself does not possess. This leads to a manifest absurdity. The patni sales are frequent, but it does not appear that the purchasers at the sales held under the Regulation have ever successfully established that right. The learned Vakils appearing on either side were unable to produce any direct authority on the point. This shows that such an extravagant claim was never put forward before.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated the 26th November 1923, in Civil Appeal No. 68 of 1923.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. L. Subhedar and K. M. Dharmadhikari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Gopiram, his son Udaram and nephew Jairam were the ostensible co-mortgagees under a mortgage-deed dated 7th May 1909 executed by the sons of one Shiva. I say ostensible co-mortgagees because the rights as mortgagees vested in the joint co-parcenary of which they were members, Udaram was one of such co-mortgagees. He alleged that there was a partition in the joint family and that at such partition the mortgage-deed in suit fell to his share. Accordingly he on 18th October 1919 instituted Suit No. 57 of 1919 in his own and sole name for enforcing the mortgage (Ex. III-D-1). His son Ballaram acted as his agent in the former suit. In answer to a defence of the defendants that the then plaintiff had agreed to purchase a portion of the mortgaged property, the said agent replied that he (meaning he himself) had offered to purchase but that the sale was not completed for want of the malguzar's consent (Ex. III-D-9) and added that the mortgage-deed had at the partition fallen to the share of Dhanaram and that the latter assigned the same to Udaram by an oral assignment. The defendants in that suit denied that Udaram could have any right to sue in the absence of a deed of assignment and pleaded want of knowledge as regards the alleged partition and assignment: (vide Ex. P-5). The question to be tried in that suit was whether there was a valid assignment of the rights of the mortgagees to Udaram alone by virtue of the partition, or partition and assignment by Dhanaram takan together. The Court called upon plaintiff to show authorities that he could maintain the suit on the mortgage sued upon and fixed the case for 30th January 1920 (Ex. III D-8); on that day plaintiff was absent though repeatedly called. Defendants were represented by their Pleader Mr. Dharmadhikari and denied the claim in toto and the Court consequently passed an order dismissing the suit in its entirety under O. IX, r. 8, read with O. XVII, r. 2, C. P. C., (vide Ex. III-D-2).

On 7th November 1922 the said Udaram and his three brothers and nephew Jairam jointly instituted the present suit on the basis of a copy of the mortgage (the original being filed in Suit No. 57 of 1919) and asserted a joint right of suit and said nothing as regards the partition or assignment or about the previous litigation except that they mentioned that the original mortgage-deed was on the record of the said suit. The defendants amongst other pleas raised by them contended that the present suit was not tenable in view of the bar created by the provisions of O. IX, r. 8, C. P. C. In support of this plea they filed the certified copies of the plaint, proceedings and order sheets in the former suit and contended that at the partition the deed in suit fell to the share of Udaram. The plaintiffs also relied on some of those proceedings. The plaintiffs have admitted in the present suit that there was a partition in the family and that each co-parcener's interest had become distinct and alleged that the mortgage-deed in suit fell to the share of Dhanaram, but there is no admission that he had assigned the same to Udaram orally. These pleadings gave rise to the following amongst other issues:—

(1) To whose share did the mortgage-deed in suit fall at the alleged partition?

(2) Was the old suit on the same mortgage dismissed under r. 8 of O. IX, C. P. C.? If so what is the effect of the said dismissal on the tenability of this suit?

It is sufficient that neither party relies upon the alleged oral assignment as giving Udaram the sole right to sue.

The Trial Court after a consideration of the evidence on record both oral and documentary held that the allegations contained in Udaram's plaint in the former Suit No. 57 of 1919 as per Ex. III-D-1 were true and have not been disproved by the only oral testimony of Dhanaram as P. W. No. 1 or by the plaintiffs' agent's former statement dated 29th January 1920 (Ex. P-5) recorded by the Judge in the former suit. This necessarily involved the position that Udaram alone was, by virtue of the partition admitted by him, entitled to sue on the mortgage and that the dismissal of his suit barred the present suit.

The plaintiffs' appeal to the District Judge was also dismissed with the remarks that full credence should be given to para. 4 of of the plaint (Ex. III-D-1) and that the subsequent pleadings that Udaram bought the deed from Dhanaram (Ex. P-5) and the oral testimony of Dhanaram was, undoubtedly, false. It was held that Udaram was the sole owner of the mortgage-deed and as his suit was dismissed, no further suit lies on the mortgaged-deed.

These findings are findings of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal. The plaintiffs complain that the burden of proving the specific allotment was on the defendants and that it was wrongly thrown on them. In my opinion the findings are supported by evidence proper for consideration and the plaintiffs cannot get out of them. I will concede that the initial burden was on the defendants to prove the specific allotment. The present plaintiffs did not make any admissions in the plaint about the fact of the partition but they subsequently admitted that there was a partition. So that, in place of the former joint and indivisible right of suit, there was substituted an individual right of suit of one or more co-parceners to whose exclusive share the mortgage-deed may have gone unless the mortgage rights were by common consent kept joint by all the tenants-in-common for enforcement for the common benefit of all of the co-parceners. That the deed was not reserved as common property is clear from the fact that even according to the plaintiffs' own admissions in the oral pleadings in the present suit the deed had become the exclusive property of Dhanaram at the partition which had taken place in 1910-11. The sole question, therefore, was whether the mortgage-deed was allotted to Dhanaram's share as alleged by the plaintiffs or to Udaram's share as alleged by the defendants. The initial burden being on the defendants to prove the allotment to Udaram's share their evidence must be considered first. In discharge of this onus they file the admission made by Udaram in the former plaint (Ex. III-D-1). This document being admitted in the pleadings by the plaintiffs the defendants' burden was lighter and they discharged it by their cross-examination of Dhanaram whom the plaintiffs put in as their own witness P. W. No. 1.

In view of the admission of Udaram contained in the plaint (Ex. III-D-1) the burden may also be said to have been shifted to the plaintiffs to disprove it [Sakha Ram v. Shri Ram (1).] The plaintiffs set themselves to the task of disproving it and examined Dhanaram as their witness to show that it was wrong but both the Courts hold that the evidence of Dhanaram was false and that the statement of Balaram dated 29th January 1920 Ex. P-5, was an afterthought. In arriving at these findings the Courts below have taken into consideration as they were legally entitled to take, several other circumstances and probabilities and have drawn inferences which were open to them to draw. I do not think that the appellants can complain of any misplacement of the burden of proof on them. Even if there be any misplacement I do not think that the ultimate decision in the case has been in any way affected thereby. In spite of the admission of Udaram, it was open to the present plaintiffs collectively to show that the deed had not fallen to his share, and thus get over the bar created by O. IX, r. 8, C. P. C., because the cause of action would in that case have been necessarily 'different' from the one sued upon in 1919: Compare Shankar Baksh v. Daya Shankar (2) and Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (3).

All that O. IX, r. 8, C. P. C., prohibits is the filing of a second suit on the same cause of action. Where there is even a slight discrepancy arising out of a single fact amongst the many other facts common to the two causes of action, that single fact alone makes them 'different' causes of action. Compare Mahadeo v. Nago (4). Here if the plaintiffs had succeeded in establishing that single fact, namely, the allotment of the mortgage-deed to the share of Dhanaram, they could certainly have been entitled to sue upon the mortgage and judgment could have been entered in favour of Dhanaram if he had been found entitled to the relief under the authority of the provisions of O. L., r. 4 (a) of the C. P. C.

The present suit could not have been defeated simply because other superfluous parties have been joined as co-plaintiffs here. I do not see any reason why Dhanaram alone could not have sued to enforce this mortgage by joining the other co-parceners as co-defendants in this suit (had the suit been so framed). Dhanaram was not a party to the former suit and had not admitted that he had assigned his rights to Udaram. It was open to him to establish here that the right to sue vested in him solely, and that Udaram's previous allegations that it vested in him by virtue of the alleged partition or the subsequent assignment was untrue. In other words, as explained in Umabai v. Bhavu Balvant (5), the misjoinder of plaintiffs in this suit to some of whom the relief claimed cannot be given, is a mere defect of form which is not fatal to the suit. But, inasmuch as the only circumstance on the strength of which the present suit could have been maintained and the bar created by the dismissal of the suit of Udaram got over, has not been established by the plaintiffs or any of them, here, the Courts below were right in refusing to enter judgment in favour of any of them. On the findings the only person in whose favour the judgment could have been entered was Udaram, but he was precluded from suing again on the same cause of action in view of O. IX, r. 8, C. P. C.

For all these reasons I uphold the decision appealed against and dismiss the appeal with costs. Costs in the lower Courts will be paid as already ordered.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL No. 26 OF 1923.

July 16, 1923.

Present:—Sir Lallubhai Shah, KT., Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Kemp.

AHMED SAHEB BAPU SAHEB KAFRE —DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

UBHAIYA HARSI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS —RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, proviso (3)—Agreement in writing—Condition suspending obligation, whether can be orally proved.

In answer to a suit on a promissory note the defendant pleaded that he had executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff and that the promissory note in suit was passed to secure the plaintiff against any claim that might be made by a prior mortgagee who had been paid off but from whom the defendant had failed to obtain a re-conveyance:

Held, that the alleged agreement was not one to postpone an existing liability, but amounted to a suspension of the obligation attaching under the note until the necessity for enforcing the indemnity arose and could be proved orally under proviso (3) to s. 92 of the Evidence Act. [p. 39, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Marten.

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ghasvalla, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Shah, Actg. C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Marten in a suit filed by the plaintiffs on a promissory note dated May 20, 1920, whereby the defendant promised to pay them Rs. 2,000 and interest thereon at the rate of one and a half per cent. per mensem. The consideration stated in the note is Rs. 2,000 borrowed in cash. The defendant admitted the note but denied receipt of any consideration from the plaintiffs for the promissory note. He further pleaded that the promissory note was passed in the following circumstances:—

"This defendant mortgaged his land known as 'bagicha' at Koli Kalyan to the plaintiffs by an indenture of mortgage dated May 17, 1920. The said land was formerly mortgaged by this defendant to Hakma Mota & Co., and subsequently redeemed by this defendant on payment of the mortgage moneys but through oversight the re-conveyance was not taken from the then mortgagees. In order to indemnify the plaintiffs against the claims of the said Hakma Mota & Co., this defendant executed the said promissory note dated May 20, 1922, at the plaintiffs' request, pending the execution of the reconveyance by the said Hakma Mota & Co., but no consideration was paid actually to this defendant by the plaintiffs. It was further arranged between the plaintiffs and the defendant when the promissory note was executed that the said promissory note should be returned to the defendant duly cancelled after the execution of the re-conveyance by the said Hakma Mota & Co., in favour of the defendant. As the re-conveyance has not yet been obtained the said promissory note could not be cancelled."

He also pleaded that the Court had no jurisdiction as the promissory note was passed at Kurla.

On these pleadings the following issues were raised:—

(1) Whether the promissory note was executed in Bombay as alleged in plaint and whether the Court has jurisdiction?

(2) Whether there was any consideration?

(3) Whether the promissory note was given by way of indemnity for a contingent liability which has now determined?

(4) Whether the promissory note was passed under the circumstances mentioned in para. 2 of the written statement, and, if so, whether any cause of action has arisen on it?

The learned Trial Judge came to the conclusion that the Court had jurisdiction even if the bond had been executed at Kurla. As regards the second issue, he found in the affirmative, and as regards issues Nos. (3) and (4) he held that oral evidence in respect of it was not admissible under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. As the execution of the note was otherwise admitted and as according to the case as made by the defendant there would be some consideration for the bond, he passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs as prayed.

In the appeal before us, no question has been raised as to the jurisdiction of the Court, and the finding on issue No. (1) must be accepted.

It is urged, however, with reference to issues Nos. (3) and (4) that the learned Judge was not right in excluding the evidence of the defendant in support of the pleas contained in those issues.

This point has been fully argued before us and several cases have been cited. It seems to me, however, necessary to bear in mind the plea put forward by the defendant and to see whether that is covered by any proviso to s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. If the plea of the defendant was merely that there was no cash consideration as stated in the bond, it seems to me that he would be clearly entitled to prove that under the first proviso to s. 92, because the plea of want of consideration is expressly mentioned in that proviso. In that case it would be open to the plaintiffs to show that there was cash consideration or that there was some other consideration. But the matter does not rest there. The plea put forward by the defendant in substance is that there was already a mortgage in favour of Hakma Mota & Co., that that mortgage was satisfied but no formal re-conveyance had been obtained from the mortgagee; that, on May 17, 1920, the defendant mortgaged the land in question to the present plaintiffs, that, on May 20, 1920, that is, three days after this mortgage, the promissory note in question was executed not for cash consideration as stated in the note but merely to indemnify the plaintiffs in case any claim was put forward by Hakma Mota & Co., in respect of this property; and that the promissory note was to be returned to the defendant duly cancelled after the re-conveyance from Hakma Mota & Co., in favour of the defendant was obtained by the defendant. As I understand this plea, it means in substance that there was no liability to arise under this promissory note unless and until any claim was made by Hakma Mota & Co., in respect of this property. In fact he pleads the existence of a separate oral agreement constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under the promissory note. If that is the true meaning of the defence made by him, it would clearly fall under proviso (3) to s. 92. Whether he will be able to establish this plea or not is quite a different matter; and even if he is able to establish that plea, whether it could be said that there was no consideration for the bond, is a matter upon which it is not possible to express any opinion at this stage. But after considering the arguments on either side, I have come to the conclusion that that really is the true meaning of the plea raised by the defendant.

Considerable stress was laid in the course of the argument on behalf of the respondents on the decision in Vishnu Ramchandra v. Ganesh Krishna (1). The learned Trial Judge has relied upon this decision in support of the view which he has taken. The distinction sought to be made before us between that case and the present was also pressed upon the attention of the learned Judge, but he did not think that such a distinction could be made. I think, however, that that distinction is a real one. In that case at page 1159* the learned Chief Justice, after referring to the observations of Mr. Justice Sale, observes as follows :

"Those remarks apply equally well to the case before us. It is not suggested that this promissory note was to have no force or effect at all until the plaintiff paid off the incumbrance. It merely provided that the promise to pay on demand was not to be enforced by suit until those incumbrances were paid off."

In the present case it is suggested, that the promissory note was to have no force or effect at all unless and until Hakma Mota & Co, made a claim against the plaintiffs. In the case cited above if it had been alleged that the promissory note was to have no force or effect at all until a particular condition was satisfied, it seems to me that it would have been difficult to take the case out of the scope of proviso (3) to s. 92. I admit that it is not always easy to determine whether a particular plea falls within the scope of a particular proviso to s. 92. In the present case also I do not say that the question is entirely free from difficulty; but after giving my best consideration to the point, I have come to the conclusion that the defendant is entitled to establish this plea under proviso (3). It seems to me that if he is able to make good his plea, it would mean that no liability arises under the promissory note until the condition precedent, viz., the making of a claim by Hakma Mota & Co., comes into existence. This view necessarily involves that the present finding recorded on issue No. (2) as to consideration cannot be accepted. That question must be considered in the light of the merits of the plea raised by the defendant in issues Nos. (3) and (4).

For these reasons I would allow the appeal, reverse the decree appealed from, and remand the case to the Trial Court for disposal on the merits.

Costs throughout in the Trial Court and in appeal to be costs in the cause.

Kemp, J.—Shortly put, the defence is that the promissory note in the suit was passed to secure plaintiffs-mortgagees against any claim that might be made by the prior mortgagees, Hakma Mota & Co., who had been paid off and from whom the defendant had failed to obtain a re-conveyance.

I am of opinion that this alleged agreement amounts to a suspension of the obligation attaching under the note until the necessity for enforcing the indemnity arises. I do not think it is an agreement to postpone payment of an existing liability but one by which the note is to have no legal effect until the eventuality to guard against which it was passed arises. Under the circumstances I think this alleged agreement may be proved under proviso (3) to s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. I am not at all sure that the agreement may not also be proved under proviso (2) of the same section. I admit the construction of the alleged agreement is not free from doubt.

But if the whole arrangement of the mortgage and the promissory note may, notwithstanding that the latter was passed some days after the former, be regarded as one agreement, part of which was in writing, e. g., the mortgage and the promissory note, then its terms may be proved without the application of s. 92 which only applies to an agreement in writing.

I do not think any difficulty on the question of stamp duty and its evasion necessarily arises because if the whole agreement is not in writing, there is no necessity for affixing a stamp to such documents as form part of it.

I think if such an agreement as the defendant alleges really exists, it would be very inequitable not to allow it to be proved.

The statement in the promissory note that the defendant has received in cash Rs. 2,000 is a mere recital which under the decision in Sah Lal Chand v. Indarjit (2) may be allowed to be contradicted by showing the real facts.

I agree with the order proposed.

Costs throughout in the Trial Court and this appeal to be costs in the cause.

Hindu Law—Alienation by step-mother of minor, validity of—Subsequent alienation by minor after attaining majority—Mortgage by step-mother, whether antecedent debt.

A previous mortgage debt, if it created a good debt due from the mortgagor, would be an antecedent debt which would bind the estate and could form the consideration of a subsequent alienation. [p. 41, col. 1.]

Anantoo Kalwar v. Ram Prasad Tivari, 78 Ind. Cas. 619; 46 A. 295; 22 A. L. J. 182; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 465; L. R. 5 A. 86 Civ. and Gauri Shanker Singh v. Sheo Nandan Misra, 78 Ind. Cas. 911; 46 A. 384; 22 A. L. J. 369; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 543; L. R. 5 A. 306 Civ., followed.

The ordinary rule of Hindu Law is that no relation, except the parents, is entitled as of right to the guardianship of a minor and failing the parents another relative must derive his authority from the Court. [ibid.]

Under the Hindu Law the right of a bona fide encumbrancer who has taken from a de facto manager a charge on lands created honestly for the purpose of saving the estate or for the benefit of the estate is not, provided the circumstances would support the charge had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager, affected by the want of union of the de facto with the de jure title. [p. 41, col. 2.]

A mortgage of property belonging to a Hindu minor executed by his step-mother who is not the de facto manager of the property is void, and cannot be subsequently ratified by the minor on attaining majority. If the minor subsequently alienates the property and the amount due under the mortgage executed by his step-mother is included in the consideration for the alienation, the amount represented by the previous mortgage cannot be regarded as an antecedent debt or as in any way justified by legal necessity. [ibid.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 5th May 1924, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Kaithal, District Karnal, dated the 27th August 1923.

Lala Hargopal for Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellants.

Dewan Mehr Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the minor sons of Mata Ram for a declaration that a mortgage by their father Mata Ram to the other defendants dated the 20th of August 1918 being of joint ancestral property was invalid against them and that the mortgagees were not entitled to take possession of the mortgaged property under a decree for possession which they had obtained against Mata Ram. The suit has been decreed by the lower Appellate Court and the mortgagees have appealed.

The ostensible consideration for the mortgage was:—

(1) Rs. 100, paid before the Sub-Registrar; and

(2) Rs. 800, due on a previous mortgage, dated the 9th of October 1906.

The lower Appellate Court has found that there was no necessity for the first item and that the previous mortgage of the 9th of October 1906 having been effected by the step-mother of Mata Ram purporting to act as his guardian, whereas she was not his legal guardian, was absolutely void. The learned District Judge also held that there was no evidence to show that this step-mother Musammat Dasodhan in mortgaging the property of her step-son acted for his benefit and further that even if this previous mortgage had been one by Mata Ram himself it was not a personal debt, and, therefore, could not be considered an antecedent debt in justifying a mortgage of the family property.

This last finding admittedly overlooked the latest ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Anantoo Kalwar v. Ram Prasad Tivari (1), according to which the previous mortgage, if it creatsd a good debt due from Mata Ram, would be an antecedent debt which would bind the estate. Vide Anantoo Kalwar v. Ram Prasad Tivari (1) and Gauri Shanker Singh v. Sheo Nandan Misra (2).

In second appeal it is argued that the former mortgage was not a void transaction and that it was accepted and ratified by Mata Ram when he transacted the second mortgage.

The first question is, whether the step-mother was a natural or in any way a legal guardian, and this must be answered in the negative. Two rulings have been cited by the learned Counsel for the appellants. The first is Tirumalai Muthuveera Paramasiva Venkitasami Naicker v. Muthusami Pillai (3), a Madras case, where the learned Judges held a debt to be valid which was contracted for the first defendant by his step-mother acting as his guardian. They observed that the question whether the step-mother was the natural guardian had not been very fully argued and they did not propose to express any opinion upon it, but since she was the sister of the first defendant's own mother they concluded that no valid objection could be raised on the ground that she was not entitled to act as his guardian. The second was a Nagpur case, Ganpat v. Firm of Bissessarlal-Govindram (4), where it was held that a step-mother was not a legal guardian, but that in that particular case she had actually been a de facto guardian. The ordinary rule of Hindu Law as stated in the text books is that no relation except the parents is entitled as of right to the guardianship of a minor, and that failing the father and mother another relative must derive his authority from the Courts. This is stated on page 283 of Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th Edition, and on page 461 of Mulla's Hindu Law, 4th Edition. It was emphasized in Thayammal v. Kuppanna Koundan (5), a decision of their own Court which does not appear to have been before the learned Judges who dealt with Tirumalai Muthuveera Paramasiva Venkitasami Naicker v. Muthusami Pillai (3).

There is no finding by the learned District Judge whether or not Mata Ram's step-mother transacted the mortgage as his de facto guardian. He held that even if she occupied this position the transaction would be absolutely void, but this conclusion was based on rulings which apply strictly and solely to Muhammadan minors. It was laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Hanoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (6), that under Hindu Law the right of a bona fide incumbrancer who has taken from a de facto manager a charge on lands created honestly for the purpose of saving the estate or for the benefit of the estate is not (provided the circumstances would support the charge had it emanated from a de facto and de jure manager) affected by the want of union of the de facto with the de jure title. Consequently I have looked into the evidence and I find no proof that Musammat Dasodhan, Mata Ram's step-mother was in fact the manager of his estate or the guardian of his person. The one witness of the defendant mortgagees about the alleged former mortgage is altogether vague on the point, and there is no evidence that Musammat Dasodhan ever held possession of, or had any dealings with, the property entered in the mortgage-deed beyond signing that deed, which, according to her own statement, she did under fraudulent coercion. The mortgage of 1906, therefore, was not one by a de facto guardian.

In view of the finding that it was not for the benefit of Mata Ram the transaction must be held to be void. It is argued that Mata Ram confirmed the mortgage afterwards, but if it was void from the very start there could be no ratification, and if ratification was possible the debt was not an antecedent one altogether independent of the mortgage of the 9th of October 1906, but came into being and was created at the time of that mortgage. I cannot assume that the learned Judge below, in holding that there was no evidence to show that Musammat Dasodhan's mortgage was for the benefit of her stepson, omittted to consider the facts that Mata Ram took no action to have that mortgage set aside and that in the second mortgage he admitted it.

There can be no interference with the decision of the lower Appellate Court that the mortgage-deed of the 9th of October 1903 did not create an antecedent debt which would bind the estate, and hence I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, rr. 4, 9—Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition, suit for—Father, whether competent to act as next friend of minor son.

A member of a joint Hindu family is competent to act as the next friend of his minor son in a suit for partition brought by him on behalf of himself and the minor inasmuch as the interests of the father and the minor in such a suit are identical and not adverse.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and under s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Sholinghur, dated the 18th January 1922, on I. A. No. 551 of 1921 in O. S. No. 85 of 1921.

Messrs. V. C. Seshachariar and K. V. Sesha Iyengar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. S. Govindachari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a suit had been brought by a member of a Hindu family on behalf of himself and his minor son for partition against his co-parceners; but, before the suit was ripe for hearing, matters were compromised between the plaintiffs and defendants and an application was made by the defendants to have the compromise recorded in Court and a decree passed in its terms. The question necessarily arose before the Munsif as to whether the compromise was beneficial to the minor or not, for, before the compromise can be enforced, when a minor is involved in the matter, the sanction of the Court is necessary. In the meanwhile, an application was made by the minor's maternal grandfather to have the father removed from his place as next friend of the minor and himself substituted in that position. That petition was also heard by the Munsif along with the petition to record the compromise. Some other petitions were also filed, but it is not necessary to refer to them at present. The Munsif, after a careful and elaborate enquiry, considered that the compromise was beneficial to the minor and that there was no necessity to remove the minor's next friend, his father, and to substitute his grandfather in his place, and he directed that a decree be drawn up in terms of the compromise between the parties. It is against the rejection of that application of the maternal grandfather to be made the next friend of the minor in these proceedings that this civil revision petition is filed.

The argument that has been urged before me is that the minor's father was not a proper next friend of the minor as his interest was adverse to that of the minor in the matter of the enforcement of the compromise, and, therefore, he should not have been allowed to continue as a next friend of the minor. This argument is put in a very ingenious way; first of all, it is said that this compromise amounted to a transfer of property because the compromise had been arrived at in a partition suit; that, it being a transfer, the interest of the father is opposed to that of the son as the property involved included both the father's and the son's shares; and finally that, as the father's interest was in conflict with that of the minor, he was not a proper next friend and, therefore, he should be removed. The fallacy of this argument is in supposing that the father has got any interest adverse to the minor in the suit. The father's interest and the minor's interest are exactly the same in the partition suit. If the minor was getting any property at all, the father will also get an equal share in that property himself. We may, therefore, take it that the father who is interested in securing his own share will be equally interested in securing the minor's share in the property. The argument, therefore, fails altogether that the father's interest is adverse to that of the minor.

The Munsif having found that the compromise itself was beneficial to the minor, a finding which I must accept in revision, there is no ground whatsoever for setting aside the minor's present next friend and introducing a new person in the shape of the maternal grandfather into the record. The petition, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

It may be observed that two preliminary objections were taken to the hearing of this petition, but I have not thought it necessary to consider those objections in the view I have taken of the merits of the case.

Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Necessity—Marriage of daughter.

The marriage of the daughter of a deceased Hindu is a duty cast on the estate of the deceased. Where the widow of the deceased has not in her hands enough money from her deceased husband's estate for the purpose of celebrating the marriage of her daughter, she is entitled to sell a sufficient portion of the estate of the deceased to provide funds for the marriage. Even though the widow has in her hands money of her own she is still entitled to employ the money of the estate for the purpose. She is not obliged to spend her own money and only to employ the money of the estate if her own is not sufficient. [p. 44, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiff sued for a declaration that a certain deed of sale executed on the 31st May 1922 by defendant No. 2 in favour of defendants Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 5 in the name of the defendant No. 1 for the sum of Rs. 1,400 was a fraudulent and collusive document, that it had been obtained by undue influence and had been made without any legal necessity, and was not, therefore, binding on the plaint, iff who is the reversioner of the son of defendant No. 2. The facts are as follows: Preonath De was married twice. By his first wife he had three daughters and one son. This son Upendra Nath died during his father's life-time leaving a widow but no issue. The plaintiffs are the children of the eldest daughter of the elder wife. Defendant No. 2 is the second wife of Preonath De. She had one daughter Natu Bala and one son Chandra Kanta who is now dead. The plaintiffs are now the reversioners to the estate of Chandra Kanta. The case of the plaintiffs is that the widow had no legal necessity to sell the property.

The case of the defendants is that the money was required for the marriage of her daughter. The Trial Court found for the plaintiff. It found that there was no legal necessity for the widow to sell the property. That the defendant made no proper inquiry to ascertain if there was any legal necessity to sell the property as there was no pressure on the estate. He found that the money was actually spent on the marriage of the daughter and the total amount spent on the marriage was some Rs. 3,000 or Rs. 3,500 of which Rs. 1,400 was raised by the sale of the property and the remainder must have come from the estate of Preonath. Why it must have come from the estate of Preonath is perhaps not very clear. He seems to have found that the sale was a genuine one for consideration. The defendants appealed to the District Judge who dismissed the appeal. He found that the money was spent on the marriage of the daughter but the marriage could have been performed without selling the property and so there was no legal necessity for the sale. Further that the defendants made no proper inquiries to ascertain if the money was really required for the marriage of the daughter of defendant No. 2. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

It is argued on their behalf that there is no evidence that there was any money in the hands of the widow that could have been used for the marriage of the girl. That the defendants did not know nor is there any reason why they should have known that the widow had sold her own ornaments to defray the marriage expenses. That the widow was quite justified in spending the sum that she did in order to secure a really suitable bridegroom for the girl. Even if the widow had in her hands some money she was not obliged to spend that money on the marriage unless it had come out of the estate. The only money in the hands of the widow was the money that she had realised from the sale of her own ornaments and she had no money in her hands derived from the estate of her deceased husband.

The respondent seems to argue, though I am bound to say that his contention on the point is not very clear, that as the widow had in her hands the money that she had realised from the sale of her own ornaments she was not justified in spending so much on the girl's marriage. The marriage of the other daughters of Preonath had been celebrated for a less sum viz., 800 and so the widow was not justified in spending more on this marriage.

Now what are the facts that have been found. The District Judge has found that the widow was not in affluent circumstances. That her monthly income would be quite insufficient to defray the marriage. Also that the defendant was short of funds because she sold her own ornaments. He held that the sum total spent was more than was required for the marriage and that the defendants did not make proper inquiries and so are not protected.

On these findings of fact I think that the appellant is entitled to succeed. The widow had in her hands no money from her deceased husband's estate that she could utilise for the marriage and it is not disputed that the marriage of the girl is a duty cast on the estate. Even though the widow had in her hands money of her own she would still be entitled to employ the money of the estate for this purpose. She is not obliged to spend her own money and only to employ the money of the estate if her own is not sufficient.

I do not think that there is any force in the argument that the widow has been extravagant in the way in which she has celebrated the marriage. The other girls were married before the war when the price of everything was much lower. At that time some Rs. 800 was expended on each marriage. Rupees 1,400 then cannot be considered as excessive at the present time. The widow is entitled to take this amount from the estate. If she was willing to spend some of her own money in excess of this amount there is nothing to prevent her from so doing. It does not appear that there was really any waste in the way the widow spent the money. The major portion of the money, viz., Rs. 2,101 was spent in the purchase of the bridegroom the widow being anxious and quite rightly to secure a well educated young man for her daughter who would be in a position to support his wife. The evidence would go to show that the young man is a well educated young man being a graduate of the Calcutta University and a B. L. It, therefore, follows that the sale was for legal necessity and is not liable to be set aside.

The appeal must, therefore, succeed and is decreed and the suit of the plaintiff must be entirely dismissed. The appellants are entitled to their costs in all Courts.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 51—Alienation by Hindu widow—Improvements by transferee—Transferee, whether entitled to value of improvements.

A person dealing with a Hindu widow would ordinarily be aware that she has only a life-interest, and he is expected to make enquiries, for instance, in the case of a mortgage, as to whether there is any legal necessity for the mortgage and any right in the widow to make the transfer. Section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to such a case. [p. 46, col. 2.]

Case-law referred to.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Kanhajya Lal, dated the 20th November 1923.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decision of a single Judge of this Court, who made an order that possession of a certain property could be recovered by the plaintiff, provided that the plaintiff made a payment of a thousand rupees on account of improvements made by the defendants during the subsistence of a certain lease. The position was this. The lessees had taken what was described as a permanent lease from Musammat Asmedh Kunwar. She was a Hindu widow, and the lessees may have believed that she having acquired the property from her father had a right to grant a permanent lease. The matter when enquired into in the lower Courts showed that if investigations had been made by the lessees they would have ascertained that the interest of Musammat Asmedh Kunwar was a life-interest only. On the death of Musammat Asmedh Kunwar this suit was brought for possession by the plaintiff (reversioner). The question now arises whether the lessees are entitled to receive from the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,000 which has been put as a fair figure for the improvements. Section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act IV of 1882 lays down the conditions under which improvements may be compensated for. The section is in these words:—

"When the transferee of immoveable property makes any improvement on the property believing in good faith that he is absolutely entitled thereto, and he is subsequently evicted.....the transferee has a right to require the person causing the eviction either to have the value of the improvement estimated and paid. ....."

The important words which have to be considered in connection with this case are, "believing in good faith that he is absolutely entitled thereto." If we had to construe this section without the aid of any authorities we should be inclined to say that the words "absolutely entitled thereto" meant a justified belief that he had the full proprietary right. In this case it is found that if the lessees had required Musammat Asmedh Kunwar to make clear to them the title under which she was acting, it would have been evident at once to them that on the death of the lady they were liable to be evicted. Indeed one may go further and say that even accepting the case as they themselves put it, they had no higher title than that of permanent lessees. In one or two decisions it has been stated in terms that s. 51 does not apply between landlord and tenant and that if there is any limitation of interest, the section does not apply. We might refer in passing to the case of Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Mukku Narsaya (1). A case very like the present was decided by the Madras High Court in 1914 and is to be found in Perumal Gramani v. Mohammad Kasim Sahib (2). There in terms it was decided that the right to claim compensation does not extend to the person who is aware that he has got merely a permanent right of occupancy in the premises but that the person must in good faith believe that he is absolutely entitled to the land in question. In that case there was a permanent lease of religious trust property and improvements having been affected and eviction having taken, claimed compensation was sought. It was decided that that case did not come within s. 51 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the case of Hans Raj v. Musammat Somni (3), Mr. Justice Lindsay and Mr. Justice Kanhaiya Lal had to consider this very case of a transfer by a Hindu widow, and there they took what, in our opinion, was the right ground. The transfer having been made by a Hindu widow those learned Judges decided that s. 51 of the Transfer of Property Act had no application because in the case of a Hindu widow a person dealing would ordinarily know that she had only a life-interest and that he ought also to be expected to make enquiries, for instance, in the case of a mortgage as to whether there was any legal necessity for the mortgage and any right in the widow to make the transfer. The same arguments which satisfied that Bench seem to us sufficient here, and we cannot indeed find any distinction to be drawn between this case of Hans Raj v. Musammat Somni (3) and the case under consideration by us. We think that in the circumstances this appeal must be allowed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court restored with costs and fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Grant by Government—Presumption of ownership—Burden of proof.

Merely because Government has issued a patta of certain land to some body there is no presumption that Government are entitled to the land of which they have purported to make a grant, and it is always for the grantee to make out that the grantor had a title to the property and was entitled to make a grant of it.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Anantapur, in A. S. No. 71 of 1921, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Anantapur, in O. S. No. 48 of 1920 (O. S. No. 710 of 1919 on the file of the District Munsif, Penukonda).

Mr. V. S. Narasimhachariar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Krishna Arya and Veeraraghavalu, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants Nos. 1, 5 and 6 are the appellants in this case. The suit was brought by the plaintiff to eject the defendants from a house-site. The plaintiff obtained a patta from Government on the 29th March 1917. Even at the time of the grant by Government, the defendants objected. The plaintiff went to a Criminal Court which dismissed the complaint on the ground that it was of a civil nature. The defendants pleaded that the suit site had been in the possession of themselves and their ancestors for a long time and the plaintiff could obtain no title to the suit land by the mere fact that Government issued patta in respect of that and that they did not trespass upon it recently. They also pleaded that a penalty was levied upon them by the Tahsildar for encroachment and that on appeal that encroachment fee was cancelled. The second issue in the case runs as follows:—Whether the said grant is not binding on the defendants and whether the site belonged to them. In my opinion this issue is not properly framed. Merely because Government have issued a patta to somebody, there is no presumption that Government are entitled to the land of which they purported to make a grant, and it is always for the grantee to make out that the grantor, Government in this case, has any title. The second issue should have run as follows:—Whether the said grant binds the defendants and whether the plaintiff is entitled to the suit site? The only difference in the frame of the issue is the change in the burden of proof. The onus lies on the plaintiff and not on the defendant. The District Munsif, however, found on this issue that the defendant and their ancestors had been enjoying the suit site for a long time and found the issue against the plaintiff and in favour of the defendants. On appeal the learned District Judge finds that the defendants have not made out a prescriptive title against Government. This finding assumes that the title of Government is either made out or admitted; but the title of Government has never been admitted or has never been made out in the case. The learned District Judge is no doubt right in saying that, as the issue stood, the burden of proof is on the defendants. But, as already pointed out, the issue is not properly framed; but it ought to be framed so as to throw the burden of proof on the plaintiff.

I, therefore, set aside the judgment of the District Judge and remand the suit for disposal according to law. The lower Appellate Court will now find if the plaintiff has made out the title of Government at the time of grant. Only if such a title is made out, the plaintiff would get any title under the issue of patta by Government. It must be remembered that the defendants were in occupation for a long time and that itself is prima faice evidence of their title; but, even if they have no title to the suit land, the plaintiff cannot succeed in this suit before making out the title of his grantor. Now that the form of the issue is changed, I think it ought to be open to both parties to adduce fresh evidence. The District Judge might either take it himself or direct the District Munsif to record the evidence and send it up.

The appellant will get a refund of the Court-fee paid for this appeal. Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Execution of decree—Decree against several defendants—Death of one defendant before decree, effect of—Decree, whether nullity—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 43.

Where a decree declares that the defendants are all jointly liable for the decretal sum, each defendant is liable by virtue of the provisions of s. 43 of the Contract Act for the whole debt, and it is open to the decree-holder to proceed against one judgment-debtor or all according as he pleases. The fact that one of the defendants happened to be dead at the time the decree was made does not affect the right of the decree-holder to recover the money in execution of the decree from all or any of the survivors.

Per Miller, C. J.—A decree passed against a deceased person is a nullity in so far as that deceased person is concerned. Where, however, one of several defendants happens to die before a decree is passed and no one is substituted in his place the whole decree passed in ignorance of his death is not a nullity. The decree is perfectly valid so far as the other defendants in the suit are concerned. [p. 48, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—The plaintiffs who had been the landlords sued the defendants who were 51 in number for the back rents of a mukarrari tenure. As the plaintiffs had at the time of the suit ceased to be the proprietors of the tenure they were not entitled to a rent decree within the meaning of the Tenancy Act. The defendant No. 9 Arjun Gir and defendant No. 15, Muhammad Yusuf Khan, did not file any written statements and on the 21st November 1921 the Subordinate Judge made a money decree with costs jointly against all the defendants. It now appears that at the time when the decree was made the defendant Muhammad Yusuf Khan was dead and when the plaintiffs applied for execution in the Court of the Subordinate Judge the defendant Arjun Gir raised an objection on the ground that as Muhammad Yusuf Khan was dead at the time when the decree was made the decree was a nullity not only against his heirs but against the other defendants in the suit. It was contended that the decree could not be executed.

The Subordinate Judge decided against the objector but on appeal the District Judge held that the whole decree was a nullity and that execution could not proceed.

The present second appeal has been filed by the plaintiffs and it is contended that the view taken by the learned District Judge is incorrect and that there can be no objection to the decree being executed against one or all of the defendants who were surviving at the time when the decree was made. Now there is nothing in the judgment of this Court in Jungli Lall v. Laddu Ram Marwari (1), upon which the learned District Judge relies which precludes the plaintiffs from executing the decree against the surviving judgment-debtors. Further the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to make a decree against the respondent and so long as that decree subsists he cannot be heard to impeach its validity. The decree declared that the 51 defendants were all jointly liable for the decretal sum. Therefore, under s 43 of the Indian Contract Act each defendant was liable for the whole debt and it was open to the plaintiffs, to proceed against one judgment-debtor or all according as he pleased. The fact that one of them happened to be dead at the time the decree was made cannot affect the right of the decree-holders to recover the money in execution from all or any of the survivors. What would have been the position if the decree-holders had sought to sell the entire tenure in execution is not a question that we are concerned with at the present moment. The appeal will succeed and be decreed with costs in this Court and in the Court of the District Judge.

Miller, C. J.—I agree. I merely wish to add as I was a party to the full Bench decision of Jungli Lall v. Laddu Ram Marwari (1), upon which the learned District Judge relied in support of the decision at which he arrived that that decision cannot be taken as an authority for the broad proposition which the learned District Judge appears to think it laid down. The only question in that case was whether the property of one of two defendants in the suit who had died before the decree was passed and against whom, before the decree was passed, the suit had abated, was liable to be taken in execution of that decree. It was contended on behalf of his representatives that the decree was a nullity in so far as the deceased was concerned. This Court accepted that argument and held that a decree passed against a deceased person was a nullity in so far as that deceased person was concerned but the Court never laid down the broad proposition that if one of several defendants happens to die before a decree is passed and no one is substituted in his place, the whole decree passed in ignorance of his death is a nullity even against the other defendants in the suit. I entirely agree with the judgment just pronounced by my learned brother.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 76 OF 1922.

October 13, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Devadoss.

MADAM PILLAI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

ATHINARAYANA PILLAI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 87—Pro-note executed by one person—Name of another person added as security—Pro-note, whether vitiated—Illegal contract.

No Court ought to enforce an illegal contract or allow itself to be made an instrument of enforcing obligations alleged to arise out of a contract or transaction which is illegal, if the illegality is duly brought to the notice of the Court and if the person invoking the aid of the Court is himself implicated in the illegality. If the contract in itself is illegal, the plaintiff would not be entitled to enforce his remedy against any one who is a party to the contract. But where the contract is legal and as evidence of the contract something illegal is done, it cannot be said that the whole contract is void. [p. 50, cols. 1 & 2.]

If after the execution of a negotiable instrument or any other document, the parties thereto alter it, such alteration does not vitiate the document; if, however, the alteration is made without the consent of the party against whom it is sought to be enforced, the document is vitiated. It is immaterial whether or not the alteration is beneficial to the person against whom the document is sought to be enforced. [p. 49, col. 1.]

Section 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act has reference only to an alteration after execution and has no application to anything done at the time of the execution. [p. 50, col. 2.]

First defendant executed a promissory-note in favour of the plaintiff and for the purpose of giving additional security to the plaintiff the name of the second defendant was added to the pro-note. It was found that there was no intention to cheat or to deprive second defendant of her property. In a suit to enforce the pro-note:

Held, (1) that the pro-note could not be enforced against the second defendant; [p. 50, col. 1.]

(2) that so far as the first defendant was concerned the pro-note was not vitiated inasmuch as no alteration had been made in the pro-note after execution and without the knowledge or consent of the first defendant; the pro-note itself was legal and was consequently enforceable against the first defendant. [p. 49, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, in Appeal Suit No. 35 of 1921, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tuticorin, in Original Suit No. 365 of 1919.

The Advocate General, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. V. Muthukrishna Iyer and A. Swaminatha Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit is on a pro-note alleged to have been executed by the 1st defendant's father and the 2nd defendant. Both the defendants pleaded that the note was a forgery. The District Munsif held that the note was a forgery, and dismissed the suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge of Tuticorin recorded a finding that the 1st defendant's father alone executed the pro-note and the 2nd defendant's mark was affixed to the note without her permission and dismissed the appeal on the ground that the note being a forged document so far as the 2nd defendant was concerned, it could not be enforced even against the 1st defendant. The plaintiff has preferred this second appeal. The learned Advocate-General for the appellant contends that the Subordinate Judge should have given a decree against the 1st defendant and that s. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act is no bar as the 2nd defendant's mark was affixed to the pro-note with the consent of the 1st defendant if not by him. His argument is that if the plaintiff and the 1st defendant agreed that the 2nd defendant's mark should be affixed to the pro-note there is no material alteration within the meaning of s. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. He concedes that if the 1st defendant had undertaken to be a party to the pro-note only in case the 2nd defendant was a party thereto, and if the plaintiff had forged the signature of the 2nd defendant, then he could not get a decree against the 1st defendant, for the contract was that the 1st defendant should be a party to the transaction only in case the 2nd defendant was also a party. Where a person enters into a contract on the stipulation that some one else also is a party thereto, it is unenforceable against him if the other person who was to have been a party is not a party thereto. In this case if the agreement was that the 1st defendant's father should execute it, the failure of the 2nd defendant to execute the pro-note would stand in the way of the plaintiff enforcing his remedy under the pro-note against the 1st defendant.

It cannot be said in this case that there is a material alteration within the meaning of s. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act; for, under the section a negotiable instrument is void if there is any material alteration without the consent of the party against whom it is sought to be enforced unless the alteration was made to carry out the common intention of the original parties. If, after the execution of a negotiable instrument or any other document, the parties thereto alter it, such alteration does not vitiate the document; but it does if the alteration is made without the consent of the party against whom it is sought to be enforced. It is immaterial whether or not the alteration is beneficial to the person against whom it is sought to be enforced.

In Gour Chandra Das v. Prasanna Kumar Chandra (1) it was held that the introduction of the names of two persons into a document after it was executed without the consent of the executant vitiated the document. As observed by the learned Judges: "The test is not necessarily, however, whether the pecuniary liability of one of the parties has been increased by the change; it is of no consequence, whether the alteration would be beneficial or detrimental to the party sought to be charged on the contract. The important question is whether the integrity and identity of the contract has been changed."

Mr. Muthukrishna Iyer who appears for the respondents supports the judgment of the lower Court on the ground that if a document is a forgery it could not be enforced against any of the parties thereto and urges that s. 87 can only apply to a document which has been properly executed and not to a document which in its inception is a forgery. His argument is that if the plaintiff and the 1st defendant's father agreed that the 2nd defendant's signature or mark should be forged, the whole document is a forgery and cannot be enforced against the 1st defendant, though he was consenting party to the forgery. He relies upon the observation of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Iyer in Amirtham Pillai v. Nanjah Goundan (2): "A material portion of the promissory note being a forgery, it seems to come within the principle of the decisions which hold that a material alteration invalidates the whole note." This observation is only obiter for in that case, it was intended that two persons should be jointly liable on a pro-note and the finding was that the 1st defendant did not join in its execution. The Subordinate Judge's decree against the 2nd defendant was reversed by the learned Judge on the ground that "the 2nd defendant could not be made liable as he agreed to be liable only if the 1st defendant was jointly made liable." In C. R. P. No. 601 of 1912, the District Munsif found that of the three alleged executants only two signed the pro-note and the 3rd executant's signature was not genuine and gave a decree only against the two executants. Miller, J., relying on Gour Chandra Das v. Prasanna Kumar Chandra (1) reversed the decree and dismissed the suit on the ground that there was a material alteration which nullified the instrument. The respondent was not represented in the High Court in that case. These two cases are distinguishable from the present on two grounds:—

(1) there was no finding that the executants either consented or were parties, to the affixing of the signatures of the persons who did not join in the execution of the pro-notes;

(2) it was assumed that there was an agreement that all the persons whose names appeared on the promissory notes should join in executing it.

If the two learned Judges intended to lay down the broad proposition that where a document is alleged to be executed by two persons, if the signature of one of them is found to be a forgery, it is enforceable against the other irrespective of the knowledge and intention of the parties, with all respect, I am unable to agree with them.

(1) 33 C. 812; 3 C. L. J. 363; 10 C. W. N. 783.

(2) 23 Ind. Cas. 464; 26 M. L. J. 257; 15 M. L. T. 204; (1914) M. W. N. 250; 1 L. W. 243.

If in this case the intention of the plaintiff and the 1st defendant's father was to deprive the 2nd defendant of her property or to proceed against her alone it might be said that the plaintiff and the 1st defendant conspired to deprive the 2nd defendant of her property by the commission of an offence, namely, forgery. If such an intention is found as a matter of fact the suit pro-note would be unenforceable even against the 1st defendant for as observed in Scott v. Brown (3), "no Court ought to enforce an illegal contract or allow itself to be made the instrument of enforcing obligations alleged to arise out of a contract or transaction which is illegal, if the illegality is duly brought to the notice of the Court, and if the person invoking the aid of the Court is himself implicated in the illegality." Where the primary intention is not to cheat or to deprive the 2nd defendant of her property but where her name is introduced for the purpose of giving an additional security to the plaintiff, I do not think the plaintiff should be denied his remedy against the 1st defendant.

Mr. Muthukrishna Iyer contends that it is opposed to public policy to allow the plaintiff to get his remedy against one executant when he was a party to the forgery by which he sought to make a person, not a party to the document liable on it and relies upon Holman v. Johnson (4). In that case Lord Mansfield held that the plaintiff who was a party to an illegal or immoral contract was not entitled to get back the money paid under an illegal contract. The learned Lord observed: "If, from the plaintiff's own stating or otherwise, the cause of action appears to arise ex turpi causa, or the transgression of a positive law of this country, there the Court says he has no right to be assisted."

But the case has no application to the present, for here the contract itself was not an illegal or immoral one. It was an ordinary loan transaction evidenced by a pro-note. But to evidence the loan or as part of the contract itself the pro-note was executed; and in executing it the mark of a person not a party to the document was forged. If the contract in itself is illegal, the plaintiff would not be entitled to enforce his remedy against any one who is a party to the contract. But where the contract is legal, and, as evidence of the contract, something illegal is done it cannot be said that the whole contract is void. In the absence of any finding that the contract evidenced by the pro-note was for the purpose of cheating or depriving the 2nd defendant of her property, the contract cannot be said to be invalid. If the intention and object of the plaintiff and the 1st defendant were to deprive the 2nd defendant of her property, the contract evidenced by the promissory note would be illegal. But where the plaintiff lends money to the 1st defendant's father and asks for additional security and the 1st defendant's father forges the mark of the 2nd defendant with the consent and approval of the plaintiff, it cannot be said that the whole transaction is void.

Granting that s. 87 applies to such a transaction, isasmuch as the alteration was made with the consent of the executant, the document is not void. But I hold that s. 87 has no application to a case like this, as it has reference only to an alteration after execution and not anything done at the time of the execution.

In this view the decree of the Subordinate Judge so far as the 1st defendant is concerned cannot be supported. I reverse his judgment, and give a decree against the 1st defendant with interest at 6 per cent. on 923 as per date of plaint, but as the plaintiff was a party to a forgery I disallow his costs throughout.

It is not necessary in the view I have taken, to consider the argument of the learned Advocate-General that his client is entitled to sue on the original cause of action. Even if he is entitled to sue on the original cause of action, considering the conduct of the plaintiff, I am not prepared to give him leave to amend his plaint and sue on the original cause of action. The second appeal is not pressed against the 2nd defendant and it is dismissed with her costs.

This second appeal having been set down to be spoken to this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.--The decree is against the assets of the father in 1st defendant's hand.

ABDUL RAHMAN SON OF ISMAIL—PETITIONER—APPELLANT

ABDUL RAHMAN SON OF ZAHURI—PLAINTIFF AND Qazi MUHAMMAD AMIR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), ss. 19 to 27—Government of India Act, 1915, (5 & 6 Geo. V, c. 61), ss. 79, 107—Letters Patent (All.), cl. 11—Local Legislature, powers of legislation of, extent of—Municipal election—Election tribunal, creation of, whether ultra vires—Election tribunal, whether subordinate to High Court—Appeal, Reference, Superintendence, powers of—Election dispute, decision of—Jurisdiction of Courts—Procedure.

The language of s. 79 of the Government of India Act, conferring Legislative power on a Local Legislature, is very wide. Such Legislatures have been given a general power to make laws for the peace and good government of the territories for the time being constituting the province; and this power includes the power to direct that disputes of a particular kind shall be decided in a particular way and before a tribunal specially created for the purpose. The provisions of the U. P. Municipalities Act, therefore, which provide a special Court or tribunal for the exclusive trial of election cases are not ultra vires of the U. P. Local Legislature. [p. 52, col. 1.]

The right of appeal is not an inherent right of the subject but only exists where it is expressly conferred by a Statute. [p. 53, col. 2.]

The term "Civil Courts" in cl. 11 of the Letters Patent of the Allahabad High Court was not intended to cover a tribunal created under a particular Statute for a particular purpose, for instance, the election tribunal created under s. 22 of the U. P. Municipalities Act. Nor is such an Election Court subject to the "superintendence" of the High Court within the meaning of that expression in cl. 11 of the Letters Patent. [p. 54, col. 1.]

There is a radical difference between a right of appeal and a power of reference. A right of appeal is a right conferred on the suitor. The power of reference is a power vested in the Court. It lies in the sole discretion of the Court to exercise such power or not to exercise it. An appeal pre-supposes a decree or order already passed against which the appeal is directed. The power of reference is exercised while the case is still pending in order to enable the Court to arrive at a correct decision. [ibid.]

However widely a power of superintendence may be construed, it does not extend to conferring a right of appeal in cases where an appeal is expressly barred by Statute. [p. 54, col. 2.]

The whole scheme of ss. 19 to 27 of the U. P. Municipalities Act implies an intention that the election of any person as a member of a Board shall only be challenged by an election petition presented in accordance with the Act. The enquiry held by the Commissioner is not a mere summary enquiry subject to the result of a suit. The Commissioner is armed with all the powers of a Civil Court and his decision is intended to be a final settlement of the question in dispute. [p. 55, col. 1.]

Where a Statute which creates a right also prescribes a specific remedy with respect to that right a person aggrieved is limited to the remedy so prescribed. [ibid.]

Case-law discussed.

First appeal from a decree of the Commissioner, Agra Division, dated the 3rd July 1923.

Mr. Gopinath Kunzru, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment relates to three connected appeals which have been laid before a Full Bench because of the extreme importance of the questions involved. The appeals challenge the validity of certain sections of the U P. Municipalities Act. All three arise out of a contested election for seats on the Municipal Board of Muttra which was held in the early part of 1923. There were four candidates for three seats. A poll was held and the appellant Abdur Rahman son of Ismail was one of the persons declared to be elected. Section 22 of the U. P. Municipalities Act, 1916, provides a special tribunal for the decision of disputes arising out of a Municipal election. Under the provisions of that section the respondent Abdur Rahman son of Zahuri presented a petition against the election of the appellant, urging that it was vitiated by various corrupt practices. This petition was heard and determined by the Commissioner as an Election Court under the provisions of the Act. The Commissioner upheld the petition, unseated the appellant, and under the powers vested in him by s. 25 declared the respondent duly elected in his place. The appellant Abdur Rahman son of Ismail presented a petition for review to the Commissioner under s. 23 (2) (f) and that application was rejected. He then filed the present appeal from the Commissioner's decision to this Court, notwithstanding the fact that by s. 23 (2) (e) of the Act it is declared that there shall be no appeal from the Commissioner's order either on a question of law or fact and that no application in revision against or in respect of that decision shall be entertainable. That appeal is First Appeal No. 455 of 1923. Besides filing this appeal he also filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Muttra for various reliefs the principal of which were a declaration that he had been duly elected as a member of the Municipal Board and an injunction to restrain the respondent from acting as such member.

After that suit had been filed he applied for an adjournment which was granted on condition of paying Rs. 125 costs of the adjournment to the opposite party. He failed to pay these costs and his suit was dismissed for default, an application for further time being rejected. He subsequently applied to the Subordinate Judge for restoration of the case and that application was rejected.

He has now filed First Appeal No. 165 of 1924 from the order dismissing his suit for default, treating that order as a decree and has also filed a first appeal from the order refusing to restore the suit. The latter appeal is First Appeal from Order No. 77 of 1924. The appellant was doubtful whether his relief lay by way of appeal or by way of application for restoration and to be on the safe side pursued both remedies.

The grounds of appeal in Appeal No. 455 of 1923, which is the principal appeal, so far as it is necessary for us to consider them, are :—

1. That it is ultra vires of the U. P. Local Legislature to appoint any Court or tribunal for the trial or the exclusive trial of election cases or to appoint the Commissioner as the election tribunal.

2. That at any rate it is ultra vires of the U. P. Local Legislature to take away or restrict in any manner the powers of appeal or revision of this Court and to make the decision of the Commissioner final.

The plea that it is ultra vires of the Local Legislative Council to create a Court for the decision of election cases or indeed as the appellant's learned Counsel argued for any purpose whatsoever does not require any lengthy discussion. It is admitted that the words conferring legislative power on a Local Legislature under s. 79 of the Government of India Act, 1915, are very wide. That Legislature has been given a general power to make laws for the peace and good government of the territories for the time being constituting the province. The only limitation imposed on the extent of this power is that the Legislature must not make any law affecting any Act of Parliament. For certain kinds of legislation the previous sanction of the Governor-General is required, though failure to apply for previous sanction is by sub-s. (5) of s. 79 cured, if the Act when passed is duly assented to by the Governor-General in pursuance of the Act. No question of assent arises in this case. The previous sanction of the Governor-General was obtained to the passing of the U. P. Municipalities Act, and that Act was duly assented to by the Governor-General after it was passed. If a wide general power to legislate for the peace and good government of the province does not include a power to devise means for deciding on the validity of a disputed election to a seat on a Municipal Board, it is difficult to know what it does include.

The appellant's learned Counsel laid stress on the difference between the language of s. 79 and that of s. 65 of the same Act, which provides for the Legislative power of the Governor-General in Legislative Council. He argues that because the words "for all persons, for all Courts and for all places and things" contained in that section are not reproduced in s. 79, it follows that the Local Legislature has no power to legislate for any Court. He might equally have argued from the omission of the words "for all persons" that the Local Legislature has no power to pass laws affecting any person. The words "to make laws for the peace and good government of the territories for the time being constituting that province" have been given a very wide construction in various cases, not only with reference to India but also to other portions of the Empire where similar words occur [cf. Ashbury v. Ellis (1)]. The Local Legislature has in a number of instances both under the Indian Councils Act of 1861 and under the Government of India Act created tribunals for particular purposes or excluded the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in particular cases. The enactments containing these provisions have repeatedly come before the Courts, and it has never hitherto been suggested that there was any doubt as to their validity. Village Courts were created by an Act of the Local Legislature in 1892.

Special Judges to adjudicate on the indebtedness of encumbered proprietors were appointed under the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act of 1903; and under the Bundelkhand Land Alienation Act of the same year the enforcement of certain classes of decrees was taken away from the Civil Courts and vested in the Collector. The Oudh Civil Courts Act has been twice amended by the Local Legislature. If the Local Legislature has no power to create Courts it can equally have no power to modify the constitution or powers of Courts already existing. Finally by a Local Act of 1920 Village Panchayats were established and were vested with both civil and criminal powers.

Other instances might be given from other provinces, but these are sufficient to show that the power which is now challenged has been exercised and treated as valid by the Courts through a long series of years. We have no doubt whatever that a power to make laws for the peace and good government of the province includes a power to direct that disputes of a particular kind shall be decided in a particular way and before a tribunal specially created for the purpose.

The appellant's main argument, however, was that the provisions of ss. 19 to 27 of the U. P. Municipalities Act derogate from the powers conferred on the High Court at Allahabad by cl. 11 of the Letters Patent and are, therefore, invalid. He originally suggested that they were invalid as interfering with the prerogative of the Crown, but in view of the fact that the amendment of s. 84 of the Government of India Act, 1915, effected by the Government of India Act, 1916, expressly provides that no law of a Local Legislature shall be invalid solely because it affects the prerogative of the Crown, and that by s. 2 of the latter Act this amendment was made retrospective, that position could no longer be maintained and he has frankly abandoned it. He has, however, argued that the powers of the High Court under the Letters Patent are declared by s. 106 of the Government of India Act, 1915, and that any attempt by a Local Legislature to derogate from those powers is an infringement of an Act of Parliament and, therefore, invalid under the express provisions of s. 79 (4) of the Government of India Act, 1915. It is unnecessary to consider this position because it is quite clear that the legislation which is impugned in no way interferes with the powers of the High Court under the Letters Patent. Clause 11 of the Letters Patent runs as follows:—

"And we do further ordain that the said High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces shall be a Court of Appeal from the Civil Courts of the North-Western Provinces, and from all other Courts subject to its superintendence, and shall exercise appellate jurisdiction in such cases as are subject to appeal to the said High Court by virtue of any laws or regulations now in force."

The appellant wishes to treat the words "shall be a Court of Appeal from the Civil Courts of the North-Western Provinces" as meaning that an appeal shall lie from any order passed by any Civil Court. This is an untenable position. It was held as far back as 1820 that the right of appeal is not an inherent right of the subject but only exists where it is expressly conferred by Statute [King v. Henson (2)]. That view has been more than once affirmed by the Privy Council, e.g., Minakshi Naidu v. Subramanya Sastri (3) and Rangoon Botatong Company v. Collector, Rangoon (4). The words cited lay down that the High Court is to be the supreme appellate tribunal (subject of course to any further appeal which may be allowed to His Majesty in Council) from the Civil Courts of the province and from the Courts under the superintendence of the High Court, and the concluding words of the clause state the cases in which an appeal can be brought. It is pointed out that no provision was made in cl. 11 for rights of appeal which might be thereafter conferred. This was probably considered to be sufficiently provided for by cl. 35 which makes the Letters Patent subject to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council. In the Letters Patent of the more recent High Courts the omission has been supplied by the insertion of the words "or as may after that date be declared subject to appeal by competent legislative authority." It may be added that the appellant's argument breaks down at the outset unless the term "Civil Courts" used in the Letters Patent can be held to include such a Court as that created by s. 22 of the U. P. Municipalities Act. It is not strictly necessary to decide the point but in the opinion of the majority of us these words were never intended to cover a tribunal created under a particular Statute for a particular purpose.

There is equally little foundation for the contention that the Commissioner sitting as an Election Court is subject to the superintendence of this Court. The power of superintendence rests on s. 107 of the Government of India Act, which extended it to all Courts subject to the High Court's Appellate Jurisdiction. There is no other provision of law to which appeal can be made as conferring a power of superintendence in this case. It is very difficult to argue that the Election Court is under the Appellate Jurisdiction of the High Court when the Act which creates it expressly declares that there shall be no appeal from any of its decisions. The appellant relies on the fact that by s. 23 (e) of the Municipalities Act the Commissioner is empowered to refer a question of law to the High Court. He relies on expressions in certain decisions which speak of a power of reference as being a modified form of Appellate Jurisdiction, e. g., Sheo Nandan Prasad Singh v. Emperor (5). With all respect to the learned Judges who are responsible for these decisions there is a radical difference between the two things. A right of appeal is a right conferred on the suitor. A power of reference such as is given in this case is a power vested in the Court. It lies in the sole discretion of the Court to exercise it or not to exercise it. An appeal presupposes a decree or order already passed against which the appeal is directed. The power of reference is exercised while the case is still pending in order to enable the Court to arrive at a correct decision. It is beside the mark to urge that when a reference is made the Court making it is bound to abide by the decision of the Court of Reference. This is merely the natural corollary of allowing a reference. It would be absurd to ask the highest Court in the province to adjudicate on a question of law if the Court which made the reference were to be at liberty to disregard the decision. In the case of In re Rattansee Purshottum (6), the Bombay High Court held that it had no revisional jurisdiction over the proceedings of the Consular Court of Muscat, even though it was obligatory on the Consul to refer his proceedings for the order of the High Court in certain cases. A familiar illustration of the power of reference is that contained in the Kumaun Rules. Under r. 17 of those Rules the Local Government can refer for the opinion of this Court any final decision of the High Court of Kumaun; but this certainly does not make either the Local Government or the Kumaun Courts subject to the superintendce of this Court.

It was further argued that if the Commissioner as an Election Court sanctions a criminal prosecution for perjury or a kindred offence an appeal might lie to this Court under s. 476B of the Cr. P. C. It has already been held by this Court in Ram Nath v. Emperor (7) that no revision lies from the Commissioner's order in such a case. Whatever doubts may be entertained as to whether the Commissioner acting as an Election Court is a Civil Court within the meaning of cl. 11 of the Letters Patent he is certainly not a Civil Court within the meaning of the C. P. C. or of s. 476 of the Cr. P. C.

Even, however, if a power of superintendence existed this would not suffice to give a right of appeal such as is claimed in this case. However widely the power of superintendence may be construed it clearly does not extend to conferring a right of appeal in cases where an appeal is expressly barred by Statute.

It is hardly necessary to consider the last portion of cl. 11 of the Letters Patent. No such things as Municipal elections were known in the province at the time when the Letters Patent were issued, so the right of appeal now claimed clearly had no existence.

In support of the two remaining appeals it is argued that even if ss. 19 to 27 of the Municipalities Act are valid they do not exclude the right of suit. Section 9 of the C. P. C. declares that Civil Courts shall have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature except suits of which their cognis-ance is either expressly or impliedly barred. It is quite true that it is not stated in so many words that here shall be no right of suit. It is also true that in two places in the Act, ss. 164 and 321, there are provisions expressly barring the right of suit in particular matters. But the whole scheme of ss. 19—27 clearly implies an intention that the election of any person as a member of a Board shall only be challenged by an election petition presented in accordance with the Act. The inquiry held by the Commissioner is not a mere summary inquiry subject to the result of a suit. The Commissioner is armed with all the powers of a Civil Court and his decision is intended to be a final settlement of the question in dispute.

The ordinary rule is that where the Statute which creates the right also prescribes a specific remedy the person aggrieved is limited to the remedy so prescribed. As this Court observed in Sham Lal v. Bindo (8) with reference to a similar contention under the Guardians and Wards Act a separate suit, if permitted, might result in two opposite decisions equally final and equally binding one declaring an election valid and the other declaring it invalid. The matter was well put by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chief Justice of Bombay High Court in Bhaishanker Nanabhai v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay (9):—

"But under s. 33 the Chief Justice has jurisdiction to determine the validity of a contested election, and so he is the tribunal appointed by the Act for that purpose.

"But where a special tribunal, out of the ordinary course, is appointed by an Act to determine questions as to rights which are the creation of that Act, then, except so far as otherwise expressly provided or necessarily implied, that tribunal's jurisdiction to determine those questions is exclusive.

"It is an essential condition of those rights that they should be determined in the manner prescribed by the Act to which they owe their existence. In such a case there is no ouster of the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts, for they never had any; there is no change of the old order of things a new order is brought into being."

The case of Ashby v. White (10) which is the foundation of the judgment in Municipal Board of Agra v. Asharfi Lal (11) relied on by the appellants has no application here. In that case Ashby, as a burgess of the borough of Aylesbury, was awarded damages on the ground of awrong done to him by the refusal of the defendants to allow him to record his vote at a parliamentary election. The judgment of Chief Justice Holt which was affirmed by the House of Lords, was based on the principle that where a legal right has been infringed the law must provide a remedy, and the only remedy open to the plaintiff was by means of an election at law. That case cannot be cited as an authority for the proposition that a right of suit must lie in all cases notwithstanding that a special remedy is provided by Statute.

We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that there is no right of suit in the present case.

These findings are sufficient for the disposal of all three appeals. We may note in conclusion that one contention of the appellant was that the respondent was illiterate and, therefore, ineligible for election. This was no part for the appellant's original case before the Commissioner though it was pressed on the application for review. The respondent was present in the Court and it was found on examining him that he can both read and write Urdu. The appellant's case is in fact like a house of cards which collapses at whatever point it is touched.

For the reasons already given we dismiss all three appeals with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale. In F. A. No. 455 of 1923 we allow a special fee of Rs. 200, the receipt of which has been certified.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 1st of February 1923.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that this case has been rightly decided in the Courts below. The decision, no doubt, has been on technical grounds, but as the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has observed, the law of pre-emption is a highly technical law.

The suit for pre-emption which was filed by two plaintiffs Umar Daraz and his minor son Rafiq Ahmad, failed on the ground that Umar Daraz, being a person who was entitled to bring a claim for pre-emption with regard to the sale in question, associated in his claim his minor son, who had no such interest as entitled him to claim pre-emption. In fact the Courts below have treated the son as a stranger and consequently applying the law, which has always been followed in this Court and as it has been expounded in Bhawani Prasad v. Damru (1), they have dismissed the suit.

When the case came up here, Mr. Haidar, who appears on behalf of the appellants, in order to cure the defect in the suit, has asked us to remove the name of the minor Rafiq Ahmad from the appeal and allow the appeal to be continued only by the first plaintiff, Umar Daraz.

To begin with, the mere removal of Rafiq Ahmad's name from the array of the appellants will not cure the defect in the suit. Again we do not think we are entitled to resort to any powers of amendment which we have under the C. P. C. in order to allow an amendment in a case of this kind when the rule of law is that it is fatal for a plaintiff in a pre-emption suit to associate with him in that suit any person who is not entitled to pre-emption. We may refer in this connection to the case reported as Bhupal Singh v. Mohan Singh (2).

(2) 19 A. 324; A. W. N. (1897) 72; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 12.

We have not so far touched on the facts but they are very simple. The property which was sold under the sale-deed in suit consisted of two items, namely, some land in a village called Karondi and some other land in a village called Wahabpur. The first plaintiff lives in Karondi and has a share in that village. By virtue of his being a co-sharer in the village he had no doubt a right of pre-emption so far as Karondi was concerned.

In Wahabpur it appears that some time before the sale sought to be pre-empted was carried out, a share had been acquired by Umar Daraz in the name of his minor son Rafiq Ahmad. Rafiq Ahmad's name appears in the khewat of Mauza Wahabpur while the name of Umar Daraz does not. But in the witness-box Umar Daraz himself admitted that his son Rafiq Ahmad was a mere benamidar for him. So far as the property in Wahabpur is concerned he stated distinctly that it belonged to himself and that he had bought it with his own money. As the Wahabpur property was purchased when Rafiq Ahmad was six years of age, it is not the least likely that Rafiq Ahmad had the money to purchase this property. On the facts, therefore, as admitted by the first plaintiff himself he is out of Court. He has associated with him in this suit for pre-emption, his son Rafiq Ahmad who, for the purposes of this case, must be treated as a stranger. Mr. Haidar who has argued the case on behalf of the appellants has referred us to a ruling of the Oudh Court to be found in Abdulla v. Wahid-un-nissa (3). There the Oudh Court refused to follow the law as laid down in Bhawani Prasad v. Damru (1). It is to be noted here that pre-emption cases in Oudh are dealt with under the special provisions of the Oudh Laws Act and in any case we must follow the decision of our own Court. So far as we are aware this case of Bhawani Prasad v. Damru (1) has been consistently followed here The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, which will include fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Held, that the purchase operated to discharge the mortgage and that the mortgage suit ought to be dismissed. [p. 58, col. 2.]

On the date fixed for the hearing of a suit the defendant's Counsel applied for an adjournment and on the adjournment being refused he stated that he had no instructions and the Court thereupon passed an ex parte decree against the defendant. Defendant made an application to set aside the ex parte decree, but the application was rejected. On appeal :

Mr. T. K. Rangaswamy, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought the suit to enforce two mortgages which he alleged were executed by the first defendant in favour of certain third parties from whom he obtained assignments of those mortgages. The first defendant filed a written statement denying that any part of the sum of Rs. 31,921-7-8 for the recovery of which the suit was filed, was due and making various charges of gross fraud against the plaintiff. On the 6th of August 1922 the case came on for hearing when the first defendant's Vakil applied for an adjournment on certain grounds to which we shall presently refer, but the adjournment was refused. The Vakil then said he had no instructions and the Subordinate Judge passed an ex parte decree for the sum claimed against the first defendant. We are not concerned with the other defendants ; but we may mention that the second and third defendants were impleaded as subsequent mortgagees and that the 9th defendant obtained an assignment subsequent to the suit of the second defendant's mortgage. The first defendant has filed this appeal.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswamy Iyer, the Vakil for the plaintiff-respondent has taken an objection in limine to the maintainability of the appeal. He contends that his client has become the purchaser of the first defendant's interest in the property and that as the effect of it would be that besides being a respondent his client takes also the place of the appellant, the appeal cannot go on and must be dismissed.

Before examining the contention, we shall first deal with the appeal as if no such event has taken place. The present suit was filed on the 10th of December 1919 and during its pendency, the plaintiff purchased in Court auction held in execution of a money decree passed against the first defendant, the right, title and interest of the first defendant in the suit properties. The purchase by him was on 3rd of March 1921. The first defendant thereupon made an application to the District Munsif's Court, Kumbakonam which held the auction, to set aside the sale on certain grounds. This application was pending on the 6th of August 1921 when the present suit came on for hearing. The first defendant's Vakil applied for an adjournment on the ground that he was led to believe that the suit would not go on till the petition to set aside the sale was finally disposed of, that, as a matter of fact, the application before the District Munsif's Court came on for hearing on the 3rd of August 1921, but was adjourned to the 31st of August in order that the parties might take the necessary steps to get the application transferred to the Sub-Court, Kumbakonam, so that the suit and the application might be heard together, and that for these reasons his client who was ready to proceed with the suit on previous occasions had not taken the necessary steps to be ready with her evidence on that day. The first defendant was not in Court, the Judge refused the application for adjournment and passed an ex parte decree. The first defendant thereupon made an application to set aside the ex parte decree. That application was again refused. The first defendant has not only filed an appeal against the decree itself (A. S. No. 343 of 1921), but she has also filed an appeal against the order refusing to set aside the ex parte decree (A. A. O. No. 137 of 1922). We are clearly of the opinion that the Subordinate Judge ought to have granted the adjournment prayed for. The Vakil for the plaintiff as well as the Vakil for the 1st defendant gave evidence when the application to set aside the ex parte decree was heard and the first defendant's Vakil deposed that the Vakil for the plaintiff had represented to the Court at a previous hearing that the suit might be adjourned pending the disposal of the execution application in the District Munsif's Court. This statement was, no doubt, denied by the plaintiff's Vakil. But without deciding which of the two conflicting versions is correct, we are satisfied that the defendant's Vakil bona fide believed that the case would not be heard on the 6th of August and had sufficient grounds for entertaining the belief. When the petition to set aside the sale was taken up on the 3rd of August 1921 by the District Munsif, it is clear that it was adjourned to the 31st August in order to enable the parties to get the petition transferred to the Sub-Court. Whether this suggestion regarding the transfer emanated from the first defendant's Vakil or was made by the Court is immaterial. These facts show that the first defendant could have honestly and bona fide come to the conclusion that it was not necessary to be ready to proceed with the case on the 6th of August. If nothing further has transpired we would have no hesitation in reversing the decision and remanding the suit for trial.

But Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer contends that inasmuch as he himself became the purchaser of the equity of redemption the appeal must be dismissed. The Court sale was on the 3rd of March 1921; it was confirmed by the Munsif on the 25th October 1921. It is unnecessary to refer to the subsequent history of this dispute, for it is sufficient to say that the result of all that happened was, that the confirmation made by the Munsif was allowed to stand. Order XXI, r. 92, C. P. C., says that where an application to set aside a sale is made and disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale and thereupon the sale shall become absolute. Under s. 65 of the Code where immoveable property is sold in execution of a decree and such sale has become absolute, the property shall be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the time when the property is sold and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute. The property, therefore, became vested in the plaintiff on the 3rd of March 1921. Now let us see, what the argument of Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer leads to. He says that his client became the purchaser of the first defendant's interest and the appeal should be, therefore, dismissed. In other words, he says that his mortgage has become satisfied, by reason of the purchase. The logical deduction from this would be, that if on the 3rd of March 1921, his mortgage became satisfied and he had no claim to prosecute, the suit ought to have been dismissed on the 6th of August 1921 when the Sub-Judge delivered judgment. The plaintiff contends that during the pendency of the suit as the result of an event that happened, the mortgagor's interest in the property passed to him which operated to discharge the mortgage and, in our opinion, the result of this contention will be not that the appeal but that the suit itself should be dismissed. When the plaintiff comes to the Court and says his claim has been satisfied we have no alternative, but to dismiss his suit. That is what had happened here, and the only course open to us is to allow the appeal and dismiss the suit. We must here observe that the plaintiff states that he has entered into some arrangements with the defendants Nos. 3 and 9 and does not desire to have in this suit any relief against them.

In these circumstances, however, we make no order as to costs, but as the 1st defendant has filed the appeal in forma pauperis we direct that the Court-fees payable to the Government shall be paid by the plaintiff and the first defendant in equal moieties. The reason for making both the parties bear equally the said Court-fee is this. We cannot now assume that the allegations made by the defendant in her written statement are true and that the suit at its very inception was bad nor can we assume that the plaintiff purchased the interest of the first defendant in the suit properties with a view to stifle her defence. Though we are allowing the appeal, we cannot, in the circumstances, adjudge the plaintiff liable for the entire amount of the Court-fees payable to the Government.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mukerji.

GAJRAJ SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

Co-sharers—Joint possession, decree for.

Where a party is entitled to joint possession, he should be granted the relief, and to entitle him to it, it is not necessary that he should have been in possession before and should have been dispossessed later on. But from this it does not follow that in every case where there are joint claimants and joint owners it is the duty of the Court to grant a decree for joint possession. In certain cases a Court would be entitled to refuse a decree for joint possession, for instance, where a co-sharer has been in peaceful possession of certain plots of land as his khudkasht for a number of years before the suit is instituted, the other co-sharers will ordinarily be not entitled to a decree for joint possession.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 27th October, 1922.

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Appellants.
Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is connected with S. A. No. 95 of 1923. The facts of the two cases out of which these connected appeals have arisen are practically the same.

An occupancy tenant Bhagwanta Singh died before the year 1884. On his death Bhagwan Singh the predecessor-in-title of the respondents, took possession of the holding. There was a litigation between him and the widow of Bhagwanta, Musammat Newasi, which ended in a compromise effected on the 17th of June 1884. By that compromise the widow really handed over the entire holding to Bhagwan Singh. Later on, the daughter of Bhagwanta Singh brought a suit of her own, but it was held that the compromise held good during the lifetime of her mother. Musammat Newasi died in April 1910. Some time after, her daughter brought another suit to recover the holding, but she was again unsuccessful. After that suit had been dismissed, the two suits out of which these appeals have arisen were brought by co-sharers of the mahal against the descendants of Bhagwan Singh for obtaining joint possession over the holding. Let it be mentioned here that Bhagwan Singh was and the respondents are also co-sharers in the village. The defence was that the respondents were co-sharers in the village and were in peaceful possession, and the plaintiffs, whose title to the land was not denied, were not entitled to obtain joint possession, though they might sue for partition, or for profits.

The Court of first instance gave a decree for joint possession, but it made it clear that that decree did not entitle the plaintiffs to obtain physical possession by ousting the respondents from any portion of the plaint land. Both the plaintiffs filed appeals. The learned Subordinate Judge who heard them found no reason to grant a decree for joint possession. He held that, although the learned Munsif had pointed out that the decree for joint possession did not really mean anything but a declaratory decree, yet, having regard to the peculiar features of the people of the district, it would be in the interest of the parties themselves not to grant an ambiguous decree but a pure declaratory decree. Evidently the learned Subordinate Judge means that as soon as the plaintiffs come to know that they have got a decree for joint possession, they would ignore the word "joint" and understand that they have been awarded possession to the extent of their share and would then use force to obtain actual physical possession on the spot.

In this Court it has been urged that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong, and the appellants are entitled to a joint decree.

Reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellants on the case of Jagan Nath Ojha

v. Ram Phal (1). In this case it was held that, where a party is entitled to joint possession, he should be granted the relief and to entitle him to it, it is not necessary that he should have been in possession before and should have been dispossessed later on. This remark was made in view of the fact that for some time it was thought improper to grant decrees for joint possession unless a party who had been in such possession had been ousted. In the case before their Lordships a lady, who was the owner of a certain zemindari share, died and the parties to the suit became entitled to that share. The defendants alone were in possession, and the plaintiffs, who were as much entitled to the share as the defendants, asked for joint possession. The learned Judges held that, in the circumstances joint possession might be decreed. They, however, did recognize the fact that in certain cases a Court would be entitled to refuse a decree for joint possession, and they cited the cases of Watson and Company v. Ramchund Dutt (2) and Bhola Nath v. Buskin (3) as instances, in which the prayer for joint possession had been properly refused. The learned Judges expressed their dissent from the case quoted by the learned Subordinate Judge, namely, Phani Singh v. Nawab Singh (4).

There cannot be the least doubt that the ruling in Jagan Nath Ojha v. Ram Phal (1) still holds good and is binding on me. But the question is whether in the circumstances of this particular case, I should grant a decree for joint possession or should content myself with the decree for declaration which the lower Court has granted. Apart from the fact that, in my opinion, too, the learned Subordinate Judge was right in his remark that, having regard to the nature of the population of the district of Jaunpur, it was expedient that there should not be given any ambiguous decree, I am clearly of opinion that this particular case is covered by the cases which were distinguished by the learned Judges in the case in Jagan Nath Ojha v. Ram Phal (1). I have already pointed out that the case before their Lordships was that of a share in a zemindari. Possession over such a property does not necessarily mean physical possession over all the lands comprised in the share. In this particular case the subject-matter of dispute consists of a few particular plots of land. These lands are in the actual cultivation of the defendants-respondents. They have been in possession thereof as tenants till the widow of Bhagwanta Singh died. They obtained possession to start with as relations of Bhagwanta Singh, the original tenant. But since the death of the widow of Bhagwanta Singh, they have been in possession as zemindars, and they resisted the suit of Bhagwanta Singh's daughter as such. Thus the defendants had been in peaceful possession of the lands as their khudkasht for well nigh twelve years before the present suit was instituted. As co-sharers jointly owning the lands the defendants are as much entitled to cultivate these particular plots as the plaintiffs themselves. The case is, therefore, parallel to the cases of Watson and Company v. Ramchund Dutt (2) and Bhola Nath v. Buskin (3) quoted above. In the former case the defendants were peacefully cultivating the lands in respect of which the relief was asked for. In the latter case certain co-sharers had granted a lease without the consent of the plaintiff co-sharer, and the lessee was in peaceful physical possession of the lands in respect of which the lease had been granted. Their Lordships of the Privy Council and this Court refused to grant a decree for joint possession.

It is no doubt the case that the C. P. C., as it was enacted in 1882 did not provide for the execution of a decree for joint possession and the Code of 1908 does provide a mode as to how a decree for joint possession is to be executed. But from this it does not follow that in every case where there are joint claimants and joint owners it is the duty of the Court to grant a decree for joint possession.

In my opinion the decree of the Court below is not only expedient but right in law. I dismiss the appeals with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER No. 51 OF 1923.

November 20, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Suhrawardy and Mr. Justice Cuming.

AMULYA RATAN BANERJI AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—APPELLANTS

BANKU BEHARI CHATTERJI—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 183—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 22, 23 "Revivor", what amounts to—Transmission of decree, order for, whether revivor—Dismissal of execution application for default—Notice of assignment and substitution.

An order directing the transmission of a decree is an administrative act which does not judicially determine the enforcibility of the decree. Neither an application for transmission nor an order for such transmission does, therefore, amount to a "revivor" within the meaning of Art. 183 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 62, col. 1; p. 63, col. 2.]

In order to constitute a "revivor" within the meaning of Art. 183 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, there must be a determination, either in express terms or by implication, that the decree is still capable of execution. An order dismissing an application for execution for the decree-holder's default does not amount to a "revivor" of the decree. [p. 63, col. 1.]

The mere issue or service of a notice under O. XXI, r. 22 of the C. P. C., is not sufficient to declare that the decree is capable of execution so as to constitute "revivor" within the meaning of Art. 183 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. A further order by the Court under r. 23 of O. XXI is necessary for the purpose of determining that the decree may be executed or is capable of execution. [p. 63, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Hooghly, dated the 1st of December 1921.

Mr. S. C. Maiti, Babu Apurba Charan Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a proceeding in execution of a decree passed in the Original Side of this Court. It is necessary to give a short history of the litigation. The decree was passed on the 25th July 1904. In 1905, it was transmitted to the Hooghly Court for execution which ended on the 16th November 1905, according to the Court below, but on the 20th January 1906 according to the certificate issued by this Court and printed at page 34 of Part II of the paper-book. On the 19th November 1917 the respondent-decree-holder again applied for execution and notice was served upon the appellants on the 19th December 1917 and the execution case was struck off on the 21st December 1917 with a remark "dismissed for want of prosecution." The application for the present execution was presented on the 7th February 1921 and it was prayed that certain properties belonging to the appellants' father might be attached in execution of the decree. The appellants who are the present judgment-debtors raised various objections to the execution of the decree. The learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below overruled all those objections and held that the decree was capable of execution and ordered attachment of some of the properties mentioned in the application for execution and released some other properties holding that they were not in the occupation of the judgment-debtors.

The judgment-debtors have appealed and two points have been taken by them. They urge, in the first place, that the execution is barred by limitation under Art. 183 of the Second Schedule to the Limitation Act of 1908; and, in the second place, it is contended that the decision of the Court below that the properties which it has ordered to be attached as belonging to the appellants' father is wrong. There is also a cross-objection by the respondent with reference to the properties released by the lower Court.

We have heard both the parties on the first question raised in the appeal, namely, that of limitation and we think that this plea ought to succeed. We do not think it necessary to enter into the second point raised before us. The learned Subordinate Judge has, according to both the parties, misconceived the facts of this case so far as they relate to the objection on the ground of limitation. He has further fallen into error in confusing the provisions of Arts. 182 and 183 of the Limitation Act; or, in other words treated the expression "step-in-aid of execution" as used in Art. 182 as co-extensive in meaning with the term 'revivor' under Art. 183. He found that the execution case of 1905 was finally dismissed on the 16th November 1905. The second execution case of 1917 was started on the 19th November 1917 and so the execution of 1917 was clearly barred by limitation. But as the decree-holder applied to the High Court for transmission of the decree to the Court at Howrah in October 1917, which act of the decree-holder the learned Judge considers to be a step-in-aid of execution he holds that the execution in 1917 was not barred by limitation. He has not considered whether the present execution was affected by limitation. Both sides have been unable to support the reasoning of the learned Subordinate Judge. The appellants do not challenge the execution in 1917 because it appears from the documents filed in the case that the previous execution was finally disposed of on the 20th January 1906. But their main contention is that the execution taken in 1917 did not operate as a revivor within the meaning of Art. 183, Limitation Act and that the execution taken in 1921 (the present execution) was beyond 12 years from the date of the last effective execution and, therefore, barred. That Article provides a period of 12 years within which execution should be taken of a decree or order of any Court established by Royal Charter in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction; and the time is to be reckoned from the date when a present right to enforce the judgment, decree or order accrues to some person capable of releasing the right. There is no dispute that the right to execute the decree accrued immediately it was passed, namely, in July 1904. The first execution was disposed of finally in January 1906 and the present execution was started in 1921. It is plain that the present execution is barred by limitation unless the respondent succeeds in proving that some act done by him in the meantime by operation of law constituted revivor within the meaning of that Article. The respondents' case is that the proceeding taken in connexion with the execution in 1917 did operate as revivor. It is, therefore, necessary to examine closely the whole proceedings. On the 19th November 1917 the decree-holder filed an application for execution in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Hooghly in which he prayed that the present appellants might be substituted in place of Hira Lal, the original judgment-debtor who had died before that date and also for further execution. On that application notices were issued upon the present appellants under O. XXI, r. 22, cls. (a) and (b), C. P. C., as the application for execution was made more than one year after the date of the decree and also because it was prayed that the appellants might be substituted in place of the deceased judgment-debtor. The notices were served on the appellants on the 19th December 1917. There is no evidence that any further step was taken in the matter till the 21st December 1917 on which date an order was passed which is entered in the certificate of execution as "dismissed for want of prosecution on the 21st December 1917." The actual order that was passed has been placed before us by the respondent. It is in the following words: 21st December 1917. Notice has been duly served and proved by an affidavit. No further steps taken to-day. Execution "case is dismissed for want of further prosecution." We have, therefore, two circumstances to take into consideration in determining whether the execution proceedings of 1917 amounted to a revivor. The first is the application to this Court made in October 1917 for transmission of the decree to the Hooghly Court; and the second is with reference to the notice on the appellants under O. XXI, r. 22, C. P. C. The learned Vakil for the appellants has argued that none of these circumstances would amount to revivor within the meaning of Art. 183 of the Limitation Act; and he has relied on the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Chutterput Singh v. Sait Soomari Mal (1). We think that this contention ought to prevail. The learned Counsel appearing for the respondent has not questioned the proposition of law that an application for transmission of decree does not operate as revivor within the meaning of Art. 183 though it may be a step-in-aid of execution under Art. 182; but he has maintained that service of notice under O. XXI, r. 22, C. P. C., operates as revivor of the decree under Art. 183. He has further contended that the order passed by the Court on the 21st December 1917 dismissing the execution case for want of prosecution virtually implies that the decree was capable of execution and, therefore, it was an order by the Court determining that the decree is enforcible. This latter argument may be summarily dismissed. The definition or explanation of 'revivor' is to be found in certain observations made in the case of Kamini Debi v. Aghore Nath Mookerjee (2) and adopted by the learned Chief Justice in his judgment in the Full Bench case. The dictum is to the following effect: "The essence of the matter is that to constitute a revivor of the decree there must be expressly or by implication a determination that the decree is still capable of execution and the decree-holder is entitled to enforce it." It must, therefore, be taken as settled that in order to operate as revivor there must be a determination either in express terms or by implication that the decree is still capable of execution. We are unable to go the length of holding with the learned Counsel that an order dismissing a proceeding can imply that the decree is capable of execution. In the present case the appellants did not appear after the service of the notice under O. XXI, r. 22. But supposing that they had appeared and objected to the execution on the ground that the decree was barred by limitation, it would not be consonant with common sense holding that the objection of the judgment-debtor that the execution was barred by limitation was impliedly overruled and the decree was held capable of execution. To give such an interpretation to these words is to hold that an order dismissing a case or a proceeding may in some cases be tantamount to decreeing it.

The next question relates to the effect of service of notice under O. XXI, r. 22. This point was, no doubt, not directly under consideration in the Full Bench case of Chatterput Singh v. Saita Soomari Mal (1), but it was observed in the course of the judgments delivered by the learned Judges, and we think rightly held, that it would not constitute revivor. In that case an application for transmission of the decree was made before the Registrar of this Court under a certain rule framed in the Original Side of the Court. By virtue of that rule the Registrar issued notices on the judgment-debtors under O. XXI, r. 22. It was held in that case that the Registrar had no jurisdiction to issue the notices under that order. It was also held that even if the notices were rightly issued by him, the mere service of notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was not sufficient to revive the decree. We have, however, a direct authority on this point in the case of Monohar Das v. Futteh Chand (3). That case is sought to be distinguished on the ground that no notice was served in that case. That circumstance, in our opinion, makes no difference. As has been pointed out by Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the Full Bench case the provisions of O. XXI, r. 22 clearly indicate that the mere issue or service of notice under that rule cannot be sufficient to declare a decree capable of execution so as to constitute revivor under Art. 183, Limitation Act. The object of that notice is to invite the person on whom it is served to show cause on a date to be fixed why the decree should not be executed against him. The absence of any objection on his part or his non-appearance would not amount to a determination that the decree is enforcible. A futher act has to be done by the Court and it must be at the request of the decree-holder and that is mentioned in r. 23 of that Order. It runs as follows: "Where the person to whom notice is issued under the last preceding rule does not appear or does not show cause to the satisfaction of the Court why the decree should not be executed, the Court shall order the decree to be executed." This further order is necessary for the purpose of determining that the decree may be executed or is capable of execution. Admittedly no such order was passed in this case. We are accordingly of opinion that the mere issue and service of notice under O. XXI, r. 22 do not amount to a revivor of the decree.

The other ground on which revivor was claimed in the Court below was the transmission of the decree. The learned Counsel for the appellant, it will be observed, has not pressed this point, but there is sufficient authority for the proposition that it does not. It is said to be an administrative act which does not judicially determine the enforcibility of the decree. This was a point which was directly in issue in the Full Bench case of Chutterput Singh v. Sait Soomari Mal (1), where it has been held following the case of Suja Hussein v. Monohur Das (4) that an application for transmission of a decree is not an act that revives a decree within the meaning of Art. 183, Limitation Act. In this view of the law we hold that the view taken by the Court below that execution is not barred by limitation is wrong.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the lower Court allowing execution to proceed against all the properties except properties Nos. 1 to 11 of the Schedule should be set aside and the execution case dismissed with costs in both Courts. The cross-objection has not been pressed and it is accordingly dismissed. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at five gold mohurs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 88—Occupancy tenant, whether entitled to plant trees—Trees planted on occupancy holding, whether can be alienated—Appeal, second—Inference of law from admitted facts, whether can be questioned.

Trees are mere improvements, but an occupancy tenant cannot plant trees on his holding without the consent of the zemindar. Even when he plants trees with the permission of the zemindar he is not entitled to sell them. [p. 65, col. 2.]

Where a grove is planted on an existing occupancy holding the character of the holding is not thereby affected and the tenant is not entitled to mortgage or sell the trees. [ibid.]

Where an inference of law drawn by a lower Appellate Court from admitted facts is erroneous, it is liable to scrutiny by the High Court in second appeal. [p. 65, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 31st of January 1923.

Messrs. P. N. Sapru and K. N. Laghate, for the Appellant.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this second appeal is what is the character of the grove in suit and whether the same is saleable in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by the respondent No. 1 against one Toria's widow, the defendant No. 2.

The plaintiff's case was that he was the zemindar and lambardar of the village, that Toria was an occupancy tenant of 8 and odd bighas of land within his zemindari, that the grove in question was a part of Toria's said occupancy holding, that Toria made a simple mortgage of the grove in favour of the respondent who obtained a decree for sale, that Toria died and his widow re-married, that the widow was ejected from the entire holding except the grove and that the grove was excepted from the ejectment suit because the plaintiff was in possession of the same. The plaintiff asked for a declaration that in execution of the decree obtained by the respondent the grove was not liable to be sold.

The Court of first instance decreed the suit, but the learned District Judge on appeal has reversed the decree and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

In this Court it is urged that the lower Court was wrong in law in coming to the conclusion that the grove was not saleable.

The learned District Judge has not found whether the grove was planted on a portion of an existing occupancy holding or whether the grove was planted on a piece of land expressly leased to Toria or his ancestor for the purpose of planting a grove. He said that there was no evidence on the point. The appellant's contention is that the learned Judge has overlooked the admission of the parties and the actual evidence that is there on the record. I have accordingly looked into these matters and have come to the conclusion that the grove was planted on a plot of what was already an occupancy holding of Toria or his ancestor. Briefly the reasons are these.

In paragraph 1 of the plaint the plaintiff stated that Toria was an occupancy tenant of 8 bighas and 17 biswas of land. This statement was admitted in paragraph 1 of the written statement. In paragraph 2 of the plaint the plaintiff expressly stated that during the subsistence of the occupancy tenancy Toria planted mango trees on the plot in question. The respondent stated as to this paragraph of the plaint that it was not admitted "as set forth." He added that on the other hand the grove was planted by the ancestors of Toria. Although the respondent stated that the statement in paragraph 2 of the plaint was not admitted as set forth he made no statement in the 'additional statements' contained in the written statement to show that the land was taken by Toria's ancestor for the express purpose of planting a grove. Indeed, this was not a part of the respondent's case at all. The respondent was examined in the Court below and he stated that the grove in question stood in the occupancy holding of Toria. In addition to these pleadings and statement of the respondent there is the evidence of the patwari and other documentary evidence to show that the grove has all along been treated as a portion of the occupancy holding.

Then the fact is that the grove was planted on a portion of an occupancy holding.

The learned District Judge thought that, although he did not find that the land had been obtained for the express purpose of planting a grove, he had sufficient material before him to find that the grove had been planted in such circumstances as to entitle the tenant Toria to mortgage the trees. On behalf of the respondent it has been contended that this is a finding of fact. But I cannot agree with this contention. If the learned District Judge had not stated the admitted facts from which he drew his inference, the matter might have been different. If from admitted facts, his logical inference, which is an inference of law and not of mere fact, be wrong it cannot be claimed from his finding the immunity from scrutiny by this Court. The learned Judge drew the inference that the trees had been planted with the permission of the zemindar from the fact that the wajib-ul-arz of the year 1268 contains certain provisions. I shall consider the provisions later on, but I am not at all disposed to differ from him in this that the grove must have been planted with the zemindar's express or implied permission. The very fact that the grove was allowed to stand and the zemindar did not contest the right of the tenant to plant the trees would go to show that he was agreeable to the planting of the trees. Then the learned Judge infers from the entries in the wajib-ul-arz that there was a grant of a permission to the planter of trees to transfer the grove. The wajib-ul-arz relating to the trees planted by tenants is to the following effect. It states what particular groves planted by tenants stood at its date in the village. Against the list of these trees occurs the remark that the rents paid for those groves were entered in the jamabandi and the planters had a right either to cut or to sell the trees. Then comes a statement that in future tenants would be entitled to plant trees only with the permission of the zemindars. Now, it is nobody's case that the grove in question finds a mention in the wajib-ul-arz of 1268*F*. The statement, therefore, contained in the wajib-ul-arz that particular tenants had a right to sell or cut their trees do not apply to any of the trees in suit. The provision that tenants would be entitled in future to plant trees with the zemindar's permission does not, by any stretch of reasoning, amount to a grant by the zemindars a right to occupancy tenants to sell trees standing on the occupancy holding. Under the present law (Tenancy Act, 1901) trees are mere improvements. But an occupancy tenant cannot plant trees without the consent of the zemindar. Under the old law also trees could be planted on occupancy holdings by the tenants with the permission of the zemindars. But I am not aware of any rule of law by which the tenant could sell the trees which he planted with the permission of the zemindars on his occupancy holding. The provisions of the wajib-ul-arz, therefore, do not justify an inference that the implied permission of the zemindar to plant trees gave, by itself, to Toria a right to mortgage them. The next matter on which the learned Judge has relied is the fact that in the ejectment suit brought against Toria's widow the grove was not included. But the plaint did mention the grove and the statement was made that the grove was in the occupation of the zemindar himself. It was not the case that the grove was omitted from the suit for ejectment simply because it had ceased to be a part of the occupancy holding. It is clear, therefore that the learned Judge had no material whatsoever from which to draw the inference that the character of occupancy holding had changed by mutual agreement between Toria and the landholder and what was once part of an occupancy holding had become a separate tenure, viz., a grove-holder's tenure.

The finding being that the grove was planted on an occupancy holding, the character of the holding would continue. This was held by a Single Judge of this Court and his decision was upheld by two other learned Judges of this Court [see the case of Daya Kishen v. Muhammad Wazir Ahmad (1).] The learned District Judge has relied on the case of Jalesar Sahu v. Raj Mangal (2). In that case Walsh, J., summarised the existing law and on the facts found came to the conclusion that the original occupancy holding had been converted into something else, viz., a grove-holder's tenure. The learned District Judge thought that the materials before him were sufficient to justify him to come to a conclusion that the character of the original holding had been changed. But he came to that conclusion on facts from which the inference he wanted to draw could not be drawn.

(2) 63 Ind. Cas 137; 19 A. L. J. 616; 43 A. 606.

If the grove stands on an occupancy holding and is a part of it, it follows that Toria had no right to make a simple mortgage of it. The mortgage was indeed made before the passing of the Tenancy Act of 1901. But the mortgage is a simple one. If the mortgage had been with possession the mortgagee would have been entitled to continue in possession till the mortgage was redeemed. But those considerations do not arise here. The result is that the plaintiff-appellant must have his declaration that Toria had no right to make the mortgage and the grove is not saleable in execution of the decree which the respondent obtained against the defendant No. 2.

I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance. The appellant will have his costs throughout and the costs will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

SHAMSHER BAHADUR SINGH—PLAINTIFF AND CHAUHARJA SINGH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Mortgage by co-parcener—Minor co-parcener, whether bound by mortgage—Previous mortgage by father, paid off by subsequent mortgagee, effect of.

Plaintiff was a minor co-parcener in a joint Hindu family. His mother, acting in the capacity of his guardian, joined with his uncle in executing a mortgage of family property. The mortgagee redeemed a previous mortgage on the property which had been effected by the father of the minor. In a suit by the minor it was held that the mortgage executed by his mother and uncle was not binding on the minor, and it was not shown that the money borrowed under the mortgage effected by the minor's father, which had been paid off by the subsequent mortgagee, was borrowed for any legal necessity or to satisfy any antecedent debt :

Held, that the minor was not liable for the amount of the mortgage-money due under the mortgage effected by his father which had been paid off by the subsequent mortgagee. [p. 67, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeals against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 8th October 1923, preferred against that of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 3rd April 1923.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for Respondent No. 1.

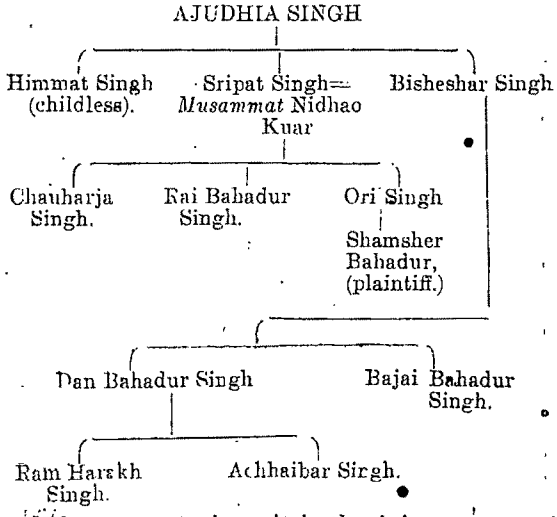
JUDGMENT.—These are the appeals by the defendant No. 1, Partab Singh, in a suit for possession by the plaintiff-respondent, Shamsher Bahadur Singh, of certain shares in three villages Kachhaura, Nekha and Resulpur, Pargana Baraunsa, in the District of Fyzabad. The following pedigree will elucidate the facts of the case:—



The property in suit is the joint ancestral property. The plaintiff and the defendant No. 2, Chauharja Singh, owned one-half undivided share in the same and the present suit is to recover that share.

On the 14th June 1916 Chauharja Singh and the plaintiff's mother acting in the capacity of his guardian mortgaged the property in suit under a deed of that date and the mortgage was made irredeemable for a term of 50 years. The consideration for the transfer was stated to be a sum of Rs. 2,000. The plaintiff seeks to avoid this mortgage. The Courts below have rightly treated as an alienation made by the manager of the family, Chauharja Singh and have tested its validity from that point of view. The lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the mortgage fails altogether and in consequence of this finding has granted a decree for possession to the plaintiff-respondent.

When these appeals first came before one of us for decision they were referred to a Bench of two Judges as involving points of general importance. Since then, however, their importance has vanished on account of the authorized report of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (1) having been received.

The appeals were argued with admirable fairness by Mr. Muhammad Wasim on one side and Mr. A. P. Sen on the other with the result that only one small point remains in controversy which we are called upon to determine.

The invalidity of the mortgage of the 14th June 1916 is accepted and it is also accepted that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for a half share as he has claimed. The sole ground urged in support of the appeal is that the plaintiff should be put on terms by being directed to pay a sum of Rs. 541 to the defendant-appellant. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent accepts the contention in respect of Rs. 416 but disputes his client's liability for the additional sum of Rs. 125. This is the only point for decision in the appeal.

It appears that on the 24th July 1913 Ori Singh, the father of the plaintiff, executed a deed of mortgage in respect of two plots of land in favour of one Munni Singh in consideration of a loan of Rs. 100. The mortgage was usufructuary and the mortgagee was consequently put in possession. The property was admittedly the joint family property. It is proved that the defendant-appellant redeemed this mortgage on payment of Rs. 125. This amount of money he now claims. We are of opinion that he is not entitled to get it. It is not shown that Ori Singh borrowed this money for any legal necessity or to satisfy any antecedent debt, nor is any such necessity recited in the mortgage of the 14th June 1916. There is also no independent evidence of any representation as to such necessity made by Ori Singh and accepted in good faith by the creditor.

The result is that we allow these appeals, set aside the decree of both the Courts below and grant a decree to the plaintiff in terms of his plaint provided he deposits in Court within six months from this date the sum of Rs. 416 to the credit of the defendant-appellant, Partab Singh. In the event of default the suit shall stand dismissed. In either case having regard to the circumstances of the case we direct that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

But it is open to the parties to a C. I. F. contract to substitute by agreement a delivery order for a bill of lading. Such a variation, however, does not affect the essentials of a C. I. F. contract so as to relieve the seller from the obligation of tendering a policy of insurance to the buyer. [p. 69, col. 2.]

The documents must be tendered as soon as possible after the seller has destined the cargo to the buyer. If there is a mail, the seller must transmit the documents by mail. The contract is performed in fact, and the date of its performance is the date, when the documents would come forward, the seller making every reasonable effort to forward them. In case of non-delivery, the contract is broken at the time when the documents ought to have been tendered, and not when the goods arrive, and damages must be estimated accordingly. [ibid.]

Bindell Brothers v. E. Clemens Horst Co., (1911) 1 K. B. 214 at p. 220; per Hamilton, J., and on Appeal (1911) 1 K. B. 934 at p. 952 per Kennedy, L. J., approved in (1912) A. C. 18; 81 L. J. K. B. 42; 17 Com. Cas. 55; 105 L. T. 563; 12 Asp. M. C. 80; 56 S. J. 50; 28 T. L. R. 42, relied on.

Where in a contract for the sale of goods, the buyer clearly shows his intention not to be bound by and to repudiate the contract, it amounts to a breach of the contract. In such a case the seller may treat the notice of intention as inoperative, in which case he keeps the contract alive for the benefit of the seller as well as his own; or, he may treat the repudiation as a wrongful putting an end of the contract, and may at once bring his action as on a breach of it. In the latter case, the repudiation operates as a waiver of conditions precedent to be performed by the seller; the buyer cannot, after repudiation, set up as a defence to the action for damages that the goods were not in conformity with the contract. Nor can he, in the case of a C. I. F. contract, raise the defence that the seller had not the proper documents to tender. But the repudiation which absolves the seller from the performance of conditions precedent must have been made before the due date for the performance of the contract. This date, in the case of a C. I. F. contract, is the date on which the documents ought to have been tendered. A repudiation made after that date does not operate as a waiver of the performance of conditions precedent on the part of the seller. [p. 70, col. 1.]

Frast v. Knight, (1872) 7 Ex. 111 at pp. 112, 113; 41 L. J. Ex. 78; 26 L. T. 77; 20 W. R. 471, and Braithwaite v. Foreign Hardwood Co., (1905) 2 K. B. 543; 74 L. J. K. B. 688; 92 L. T. 637; 10 Com. Cas. 189; 10 Asp. M. C. 52; 21 T. L. R. 413, relied on.

A buyer who rejects goods on a wrong ground is not thereby precluded from relying on a valid ground which in fact exists. Thus a buyer under a C. I. F. contract who refuses to take delivery on the ground that the goods are of an inferior quality is not precluded from proving at the trial of the action that the proper documents were not tendered to him by the seller. To constitute a repudiation, one of the parties to the contract must make quite plain his intention not to perform the contract. [ibid.]

Consorzio Veneziano Di Armanento E. Navigazone v. Northumberland Shipbuilding Co., (1919) 88 L. J. K. B. 1194; 121 L. T. 628, relied on.

Incidents which are impliedly contained in a written contract, whether by construction of the terms or by implication of law, cannot be varied by extrinsic evidence. [p. 70, col. 2.]

Evidence of former transactions between the same parties can be received for the purpose of explaining the meaning of the terms used in their written contract, where such meaning is doubtful; but not where the meaning is plain: nor is it admissible to enlarge or vary the terms of the contract. [ibid.]

Evidence of the course of previous dealings between the parties to show that though the contract between the parties was on C. I. F. terms the buyer was not entitled either to a bill of lading or to a policy of insurance, and was bound to pay against the delivery telegram, is inadmissible under s. 92 of the Evidence Act, as its effect would be to vary the incidents of a C. I. F. contract. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—[After dealing with the facts and contentions of the parties his Lordship proceeded:—]

Under an ordinary contract on C. I. F. terms the seller has, "firstly, to ship at the port of shipment goods of the description contained in the contract; secondly to produce a contract of affreightment, under which the goods will be delivered at the destination contemplated by the contract; thirdly, to arrange for an insurance upon the terms current in the trade which will be available...to the buyer; fourthly, to make out an invoice as described by Blackburn, J. in Ireland v. Livingston (1) or in some similar form and finally to tender these documents to the buyer so that he may know what freight he has to pay and obtain delivery of the goods, if they arrive, or recover for their loss if they are lost on the voyage." Biddell Brothers v. E. Clemens Horst Co. (2).

The bill of lading represents the goods in law and in fact and its possession places the goods at the disposal of the purchaser, Bowen, L. J. in Sanders v. Maclean (3) said:—

"A cargo at sea while in the hands of the carrier is necessarily incapable of physical delivery. During this period of transit and voyage, the bill of lading by the law merchant is universally recognised as its symbol, and the indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading operates as a symbolical delivery of the cargo. . . . . it is a key which in the hands of a rightful owner is intended to unlock the door of the warehouse, floating or fixed, in which the goods may chance to be."

The common law drew a distinction between bills of lading and other documents of title, for while a transfer of a bill of lading was always held to operate as a delivery of the goods, a transfer of the delivery order or a dock warrant operates only as a token of authority to take possession and not as a transfer of possession: M'Ewan v. Smith (4); Blackburn on Sale, p. 302. This distinction still remains, except in cases under the Factors Act in England, and in cases under ss. 108 and 178 of the Contract Act in India. But though this is the case, it is open to the parties to a C. I. F. contract to substitute by agreement a delivery order for a bill of lading. Such a variation, it has been held does not affect the essentials of a C. I. F. contract so as to relieve the seller from the obligation of tendering a policy of insurance to the buyer: In re Denbigh Cowan & Co. and Atcherley & Co. (5).

The goods comprised in a C. I. F. contract must also be covered by an effective policy of insurance; an open cover taken out by the seller protecting all goods shipped by him is not sufficient: Manbre Saccharine Co. v. Corn Products Co. (6). The policy must be tendered even if the goods arrive safely: Orient Co. v. Brekke (7).

A C. I. F. contract is not a mere sale of documents. It is still a contract for the sale of goods, though it is to be performed by transfer of proper documents: Karberg & Co. v. Blythe Green, Jourdain & Co. (8) and Johnson v. Taylor Brothers & Co. (9). The documents must be tendered as soon as possible after the seller has destined the cargo to the buyer. If there is a mail, the seller must transmit the documents by mail. The contract is performed in fact, and the date of its performance is the date when the documents would come forward, the seller making every reasonable effort to forward them. In case of non-delivery, the contract is broken at the time when the documents ought to have been tendered, and not when the goods arrive, and damages must be estimated accordingly: Sharpe & Co. v. Nosawa & Co. (10). The buyer is bound to pay on tender of the shipping documents, and he is not entitled to refuse payment until he is given an opportunity for inspecting the goods: Biddell Brothers v. E. Clemens Horst Co. (2).

A good deal was said on both sides as to the rule of "anticipatory breach" in its relation to C. I. F. contracts. It is now elementary law that where in a contract for the sale of goods, the buyer clearly shows his intention not to be bound by and to repudiate the contract, it amounts to a breach of the contract: Indian Contract Act, s. 120. In such a case the seller may treat the notice of intention as inoperative, in which case he keeps the contract alive for the benefit of the seller as well as his own; or, he may treat the repudiation as a wrongful putting an end of the contract, and may at once bring his action as on a breach of it: Indian Contract Act, s. 39; Frost v. Knight (11). In the latter case, the repudiation operates as a waiver of conditions precedent to be performed by the seller; the buyer cannot, after repudiation, set up as a defence to the action for damages that the goods were not in conformity with the contract: Braithwaite v. Foreign Hardwood Co. (12), nor can he, in the case of a C. I. F. contract, raise the defence that the seller had not the proper documents to tender. But the repudiation which absolves the seller from the performance of conditions precedent must have been made before the due date for the performance of the contract. This date, in the case of a C. I. F. contract, is the date on which the documents ought to have been tendered. A repudiation made after that date does not operate as a waiver of the performance of conditions precedent on the part of the seller.

I now proceed to examine the contentions of the parties by the light of the principle set forth above.

It was admitted by the plaintiffs that there was neither a bill of lading nor a policy of insurance in the present case. To get over the difficulty caused by the absence of these documents, Counsel for the plaintiffs sought to prove that by the usage of the trade in Bombay, delivery telegrams passed from hand to hand by endorsement and delivery as did bills of lading and also that telegrams intimating that a specified shipment was insured was treated as a policy of insurance. But as no such usage was pleaded and no issue was raised upon it, I did not allow evidence to be led of the alleged usage.

The plaintiffs also offered to prove that though the contract was a C.I. F. contract the defendants had on previous occasions paid the price against delivery telegrams only. This was objected to by Counsel for the defendants and I held that it was inadmissible. No doubt evidence of former transactions between the same parties can be received for the purpose of explaining the meaning of the terms used in their written contract where such meaning is doubtful but not where the meaning is plain nor is it admissible to enlarge or vary the terms of the contract. To admit it in the latter case would be to contravene the provisions of s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872: Haji Mahomed Haji Jiva v. Spinnar and Co. (13), Ford v. Yates (14) and Bourne v. Gatliff (15). In Ford v. Yates (14) there was a written contract for the sale of hops. The contract did not specify any time for payment of delivery. Such a contract imports by construction of law a sale for ready money. Evidence was tendered to show on behalf of the buyers that by the usual course of dealings between the parties, the price was not payable until after six months from the date of sale, but it was held that the evidence was inadmissible. This case is an authority for the proposition that incidents which are impliedly contained in a written contract, whether by construction of the terms or by implication of law, cannot be varied by extrinsic evidence: Leake on Contract, 6th Edition, p. 122. In the present case the plaintiffs sought to rely on the previous course of dealings to show that though the contract was on C. I. F. terms, the defendants were not entitled either to a bill of lading or to a policy of insurance and that they were bound to pay against the delivery telegram. This would be to vary the incidents of a C. I. F. contract, and the evidence would, therefore, be inadmissible under s. 92. But though the plaintiffs were not allowed to lead this evidence their Counsel brought out in the cross-examination of the defendant what the course of dealings between the parties was. The defendant said that on previous occasions he paid the price against delivery telegrams but he added that he did not pay until after he had examined the goods. Even, if, therefore, the evidence was admissible it would not help the plaintiffs. I, therefore, hold that the defendants were not bound to pay against the delivery telegram.

But it was contended for the plaintiffs that the defendants did not at any time object to pay on that ground, that the only ground on which they refused to pay was that the goods were of inferior quality and that they could not be allowed at the hearing of the suit to raise that objection. I do not think there is any substance in this contention. A buyer who rejects goods on a wrong ground is not thereby precluded from relying on a valid ground which in fact exists. Thus a buyer who refuses to accept further deliveries on the ground that his sub-purchaser would not take them owing to previous commitments is not precluded from proving at the trial of the action that the goods were not of the contract description: Taylor v. Oke & Rancoroni and Co. (16).

It was also urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that the defendants repudiated the contract by their letter of December 13, or, in any event, by their letter of December 19, and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, absolved from proving that they were ready and willing to perform their part of the contract. I do not think that either of these two letters amounts to a repudiation of the contract. Atkin, L. J., in Consorzio Veneziano Di Armanento E. Navigazione v. Northumberland Shipbuilding Co. (17) said:—

"A repudiation has been defined in different terms, by Lord Selborne as an absolute refusal to perform a contract, by Lord Esher as a total refusal to perform, by Bowen, L. J., as a declaration of an intention not to carry out the contract when the time arrives, by Lord Haldane as an intention to treat the obligation as altogether at an end. All these definitions come to the same thing, and make it clear that to constitute a repudiation one of the parties to the contract must make quite plain his intention not to perform the contract."

To the same effect are the provisions of s. 39 of the Indian Contract Act. That section provides that "when a party to a contract has refused to perform, or disabled himself from performing his promise in its entirety, the promisee may put an end to the contract, unless he has signified, by words or conduct his acquiescence in its continuance." The defendants did not by their letter of December 13, refuse to perfrom the contract in its entirety. They only asked for a survey to enable them to take immediate delivery. Nor did the letter of December 19, amount to a total repudiation of the contract. But even if it did, the repudiation was after the breach of the contract on the part of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs ought to have tendered a bill of lading and a policy of insurance long before December 19, and failure to do so amounted to a breach of the contract on their part. Moreover, if there was a repudiation, the plaintiffs did not accept it as a breach of the contract until December 20 when they threatened to sell the goods. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs were not absolved from tendering the proper documents. It does not make any difference that payment was to be made before delivery. In either case they must show that they were ready and willing to perform their part of the contract. This it was impossible for them to do as they had neither a bill of lading nor a policy of insurance.

There is yet another ground on which the defendants rely. They say that though the plaintiffs received the survey report on December 7 or 8, it was not shown to them until after the institution of this suit, and that they were not bound to pay unless it was shown to them. I think there is considerable force in this contention. The contract being on C. I. F. terms, the buyers were bound to pay against the documents even before the arrival of the goods, and the report was a sort of guarantee that the goods shipped were contract goods. The report was to be considered as final until the arrival of the goods. After their arrival it was open to the buyers to make their objection as to the quality of the goods provided the objection was raised within twenty-four hours after they were landed. The plaintiffs alleged that they showed the report to the defendants on December 15 or 16, and they called their manager Chunilal to prove it. Chunilal said in his evidence that on December 15 or 16 some one on behalf of the defendants came to inquire about the goods, when he showed him the survey certificate. He was asked in cross-examination why it was that this interview was not referred to anywhere in the correspondence, to which his only answer was, "Because I took it that the defendants would make the payment." The defendant denied in his evidence that he sent any man to the plaintiffs' office on December 15 or 16. I do not believe Chunilal, and I accept the defendants' evidence. I hold that the survey report was not shown to the defendants before the suit was filed. Chunilal admitted that the defendants were entitled to see it before they made the payment. As it was not shown to the defendants, they were not bound to pay for the goods.

I dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

An objection to the validity of a decree cannot be entertained by an Executing Court. [p. 72, col. 2.]

An Act cannot affect the validity of a decree passed before it came into operation, nor can an Act be made applicable to the case of such a decree, simply because an application for its execution is made after the commencement of the Act. [p. 73, col. 1.]

The rights of an ordinary tenant in sir land held by him remain unaffected by the accrual of the occupancy tenant right in the sir land under s. 45 (1) of the C. P. Tenancy Act. [ibid.]

The occupancy rights in sir land of the original proprietor are compatible with the existence of ordinary tenants on the same land. [ibid.]

In other words sir rights and occupancy rights may often exist side by side. [ibid.]

The Tenancy Act contemplates leases to ordinary tenants of sir lands apart from transfers of the kind provided for in s. 45 (1), which applies only to leases or other transfers of proprietary rights in sir fields and does not apply to agricultural leases which do not affect the proprietary rights and, therefore, do not require Deputy Commissioner's sanction. A "lease," within the meaning of the Explanation to s. 45 of the C. P. Tenancy Act, is a transfer of only the proprietary rights in the sir lands and does not as such require the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—The only question which I am called upon to decide in this appeal is whether the decree dated 30th September 1919, passed on the basis of the lease dated 7th January 1913, in Civil Suit No. 14 of 1916 has become incapable of execution because the judgment-debtors have become ex-proprietary occupancy tenants of the sir fields and the decree-holders, the landlords thereof, by virtue of the final decree for foreclosure dated 20th November 1918, passed in favour of these very decree-holders in another suit based on a mortgage of 1909. That was Suit No. 24 of 1915 decided on 7th January 1916 and the final decree for foreclosure was passed in it on 20th November 1918, and possession of the proprietary rights was lost by the judgment-debtors on 27th July 1919, in execution of the decree. It is admitted that the mortgage was without the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner and consequently on a foreclosure taking place on its basis the judgment-debtors lost their rights to occupy sir lands as proprietors, and at the date of such loss, became occupancy tenants of the sir lands under s. 45 (1) of the Tenancy Act, 1898.

The suit which the decree-holders instituted for recovery of possession of the sir lands (for 20 years) on the basis of the said lease dated 7th January 1913, was filed on 14th September 1916, and was still pending at the date of the foreclosure on 20th November 1918 and even when possession of the proprietary rights was lost by the judgment-debtors under the aforesaid foreclosure decree. The decree enforcing the sub-lease being passed on 30th September 1919, i. e., subsequently to the final foreclosure decree dated 20th November 1918 cannot be said to have become incapable of execution by reason of the foreclosure, because the loss caused by foreclosure and the accrual of occupancy tenant right was not subsequent but prior in point of time to the date of the decree sought to be executed. No question of the decree being rendered incapable of execution by the accrual can, therefore, be said to arise strictly speaking in this case. The objection urged really speaking amounts to an objection to the validity or the passing of the decree itself because it challenges the very foundation of the decree. Surely such an objection, as held by me in Bihari- singh v. Newalsingh (1), cannot be enquired into by the Executing Court. Both these decrees were, however, passed before the new Tenancy Act came into operation on 1st May 1920. The new Act could not, therefore, be applicable to this case, simply because the application for the execution of the decree dated 30th September 1919 was made after the commencement of that Act. The new Act could not effect the validity of the decree passed before the date of its coming into operation. So the case has to be decided with reference to the provisions of the old Tenancy Act of 1898.

Sub-section 5 of s. 45 of the Tenancy Act of 1898, which must govern this case, declares that the rights of an ordinary tenant in the sir lands held by him remain unaffected by the accrual of the occupancy tenant-right under sub-s. 1 of the said section. In Dhondba v. Vishwanath (2), Ismay, J. C., observed that sir rights and occupancy rights may often exist side by side. In Gopikisan v. Kulpat (3) Batten, A. J. C., while meeting the objection that there cannot be an occupancy tenant and an ordinary tenant of the same lands observed at page 172* as follows:—

"This no doubt is the ordinary rule. But sub-s. 5 of s. 45 shows that the occupancy rights in sir land of the original proprietor, which s. 45 is designed to protect, are compatible with the existence of ordinary tenants on the same land."

He ultimately held in that case that "By reason of sub-s. 5 of s. 45 of the C. P. Tenancy Act, the relations between the proprietor and the ordinary tenant of sir land are not altered when the proprietor becomes the occupancy tenant of the sir land under sub-s. (1) of the section; the ordinary tenant, does not become a sub-tenant and is liable to ejectment, by the ex-proprietary occupancy tenant, on the ground specified in sub-s. (c) of s. 69 of the Act."

It is argued on behalf of the appellants that the lease is a transfer of the proprietor's right to occupy sir land as a proprietor and, therefore, required the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner for its validity. The contention, therefore, is that the lessees could not claim to deprive the lessors of their right to cultivate the sir land as an ex-proprietor. If the Explanation given at foot of s. 45 of the Act of 1898 be looked at, this argument appears at first sight to be plausible, because it says "For the purposes of this section a transfer includes a mortgage and a lease." In view, however, of the express reservation of the rights of an ordinary tenant of sir land made in s. 45 (5), and of the interpretation put upon the word 'lease' as used in the Explanation by Batten, A. J. C., in Bhagirathi Bai v. Anyaji Kunbi (4), it is clear that the Tenancy Act contemplates leases to ordinary tenants of sir lands apart from transfers of the kind provided for in s. 45 (1) which applies only to leases or other transfers of proprietary rights in sir fields and does not apply to agricultural leases which do not affect the proprietary rights. If this contention of the judgment-debtors appellants were upheld, it would go not only against the clear import of the lease deed but also against the spirit of the section and the interpretation put upon it. It would further restrict the scope and operation of the decree passed in the present case, and to entertain it would at this stage, be beyond the jurisdiction of the Executing Court which has to execute the decree as it is. The judgment-debtor's contention, therefore, that the lease is a transfer of only the proprietary rights in the sir lands and the decree, therefore, clothes the decree-holders with only that right and not also with the right to cultivate sir lands, is untenable. The decree dated 30th September 1919, directs delivery of possession of the sir fields Nos. 80 and 102 to the respondents from the beginning of the agricultural year next following, and entitles them to hold such possession for a period of 20 years as lessees. This necessarily gives them cultivating possession of the land in fulfilment of their leasehold rights and they must, therefore, be put in such cultivating possession of the lands covered by the decree.

The appellants' further contention that as soon as the decree dated 30th September 1919 was passed they became the ex-proprietary occupancy tenants of the land on the date of that decree by virtue of that decree as if the proprietary right in the sir was lost only that day and not before, and that they cannot, therefore, be ousted from possession by execution of that decree, needs no separate treatment in the view I have taken above.

The argument based on the wording of s. 49 of the new Tenancy Act of 1920, and the lapsing of the tenant-right provided for in sub-s. 1 of that section and the effect of the saving clause inserted in sub-s. 3 of that section as regards certain documents referred to therein raised a very difficult question of law. The point is not quite so clear and settled as it is thought to be by the respondents' Counsel. Although had the matter come to me on the regular side, it may have been open to me to discuss it independently, unfettered by the interpretation upon the new section by this [illegible] other decided cases: Hindusingh v. Mangal (5) and Champalal v. Kunjilal (6) I no not think I need or can decide that question in connection with an appeal arising out of the execution of a decree passed before the new Act came into force, for the simple reason that the Executing Court cannot go behind the decree. The question how for a document of lease creating a tenant-right for a longer term than 5 years, registered after 21st October 1898, and before 1st May 1920, is saved from the operation of s. 49 of the new Act, need not, therefore, be decided for the purposes of this appeal.

The decree as it stands must, therefore, be executed by the Executing Court. All that I need say in order to leave no room for ambiguity hereafter is that the new Tenancy Act recognises in s. 3 only three classes of tenants. There is no such class as "ordinary tenant." Consequently who-[illegible] an ordinary tenant under the old Act became entitled to be classed as an occupancy tenant and the present decree-holders who had become under the terms of the lease ordinary tenants of the sir lands became entitled to be classed as occupancy tenants for the term of their lease, under the rights declared by the decree. But s. 37 of the new Act intervenes and brings "a person who holds sir land as a tenant" in the category of "a sub-tenant" so that the judgment-debtors who had become the ex-proprietary occupancy tenants by the decree-holders instead of being called ordinary tenants of the sir land became liable under the new classification to be called "sub-tenants" entitled to hold on the terms agreed upon between them and their judgment-debtors and declared by the decree. The judgment-debtors became their landlords so far as the sir lands were concerned by the operation of the law.

Here the decree gives the decree-holders the right to hold possession for 20 years as lessees, which, as I interpret the word, means "sub-tenants," with effect from 1st May 1920, and further directs them to pay the rent of the land for that period; so the decree-holders will be cultivating the land as sub-tenants of the judgment-debtors and paying the rent of the land in that capacity to themselves as the proprietors of the holding which must continue to stand in the name of the judgment-debtors as the occupancy tenants thereof. The occupation of the land as also the payment of rent thereof by them to themselves shall be deemed to be the occupation and payment by or on account of the judgment-debtors, so that the latter could not be sued for recovery of rent, by them, in their capacity as proprietors and landlords of the village or patti in which the holding is situate and no decree for ejecting them from the land could be obtained by them. As the law has carved out in favour of the judgment-debtors the status of an ex-proprietary occupancy tenant and as the result of the working out of the rights created by the mortgage and the lease has been to vest the proprietary rights absolutely, and also the cultivating rights in the sir land for a term of 20 years from 1st May 1920, in the same persons, namely, the present decree-holders, I thought it necessary to make this position clear, in order that advantage may not be taken hereafter of getting the lands recorded as the proprietor's own sir or home-farm lands freed of the ex-proprietary occupancy tenure exsisting in the name and for the benefit of the judgment-debtors. This will necessarily mean that the ex-proprietary occupancy tenant-right, which entitles the judgment-debtors to enjoy the present actual cultivating possession of the sir lands, being subject to the rights created by the them under a prior valid sub-lease granted by themselves to the decree-holders, shall remain in abeyance during the whole term of 20 years ending with the end of the agricultural year 1939-40 on 30th April 1940, and that the same would be enforcible at their instance as against the decree-holders on the expiry of the aforesaid period of the sub-tenancy. The deed of lease declares that the lease shall determine on 1st June 1932 but that date must be considered to be superseded by the express directions contained in the decree that the 20 years' period shall be counted from 1st May 1920. The decree whether right or wrong must be executed as it is. With these remarks, I dismiss the appeal with costs. Costs in the Courts below will be paid as already ordered.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION No. 365 OF 1921.

March 22, 1923.

PERCY FISHER—DEFENDANT.

Negligence—Invitee, duty towards—Injury by dog—Damages.

A man has a right to keep a fierce dog for the protection of his property, but he has no right to put the dog in such a situation, in the way of access to his house, that a person innocently coming for a lawful purpose may be injured by it. [p. 78, col. 1.]

Plaintiff went to the defendant's house on lawful business, and not finding any servant or any other means of announcing her visit, to the defendant proceeded towards the dining room door with the intention of entering that room and waiting there till the defendant came to her. Before she could enter the room she was bitten by a ferocious dog that had been chained behind the door. She sued the defendant for damages:

Held, that the plaintiff was in the position of an invitee and defendant was guilty of negligence in keeping a fierce dog in the room at a time when it was possible that a person coming to him on lawful business might go to the room, and that, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for the injury done to her. [p. 78, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.—[His Lordship after dealing with the facts of the case proceeded:—] Now coming to the main question of negligence. First of all, I may refer to the general statement of the law by Tindal, C. J. in Sarch v. Blackburn (1):—

"If a man puts a dog in a garden, walled all around, and a wrong-doer goes into that garden, and is bitten, he cannot complain in a Court of Justice of that which was brought upon him by his own act..... Undoubtedly, a man has a right to keep a fierce dog for the protection of his property, but he has no right to put the dog in such a situation, in the way of access to his house, that a person innocently coming for a lawful purpose may be injured by it." And the law is similarly stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. I, Art. 818, page 375. The case just cited also deals with the point of a notice being put up where a dog was kept, and it was held that it was not enough since the person bitten might not be able to read. That of course is not in point here, except that the same thing applies in regard to the defendant's shouting. The mere fact of his shouting would not be enough, if it was not actually heard by the person to whom the shout was addressed. The plaintiff undoubtedly was going to the defendant's on a lawful business and at a reasonable hour, and there is clear authority for saying that she was in the position of an "invitee" as the law phrases it. On this point it is enough to refer to Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXI, Art. 655, at page 388, and to the case of Pritchard v. Peto (2). That was the case of a person going to collect a debt at another's house, and it was there held that he was an invitee. Coming to the law applicable in a case like the present, it seems to me that there is no better statement of the principles applicable than the law laid down in the leading case of Indermaur v. Dames (3). That no doubt primarily deals with what are called "trap cases," but a case like this is really on all fours. Putting a dangerous dog behind the door in a room is just as much a trap to an innocent passer-by as if there were a hole or man trap which might cause him injury. This particular passage in Mr. Justice Willes' judgment is referred to by Lord Atkinson in Fairman v. Perpetual Investment Building Society (4) as one which has for the last fifty-six years been accepted as a full and accurate statement of the law. It runs as follows:—

"The class to which the customer belongs includes persons who go not as mere volunteers, or licensees, or guests, or servants, or persons whose employment is such that danger may be considered as bargained for, but who go upon business which concerns the occupier, upon his invitation, express or implied. And, with respect to such a visitor at least, we consider it settled law, that he, using reasonable care on his part for his own safety, is entitled to expect that the occupier shall upon his part use reasonable care to prevent damage from unusual danger, which he knows or ought to know, and that where there is evidence of neglect the question whether such reasonable care has been taken, by notice, lighting, guarding, or otherwise, and whether there was contributory negligence in the sufferer must be determined by a Jury as matter of fact."

Accepting that as the law applicable, really there are three subsidiary questions. First, did the plaintiff herself use reasonable care, or, in other words, was she in any way guilty of contributory negligence? Secondly, did the defendant use care against the unusual danger which he knew or ought to have known of? That involves the third question, whether he knew of the danger, a point which I have already found in the affirmative. So really the main question boils down to this, whether the limits of the invitation to the plaintiff to come to the defendant's premises were exceeded or not. Thus, as stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXI, Art. 657, page 390:—

"The liability of the occupier is only commensurate with the extent of the invitation. Where, therefore, the occupier of premises has placed a notice warning persons of the existence of danger, and a person disregards the notice, or the circumstances show that the limits of the invitation have been otherwise exceeded, the liability is limited in a corresponding degree, and if the invitee wanders about in such a way as to be unable to see if there is danger or not, or if he knows of the danger and undertakes the risk, the occupier of the premises is not liable."

Now, in the present case I have held that the plaintiff did not actually go into the dining-room, but, on the other hand, according to the plaintiff's own case in the plaint and on the facts as I hold them she did turn and move from this door window towards the dining-room with the object of entering that room, and, therefore, to that extent the question does arise, whether the circumstances are such that the limits of the defendant's invitation were exceeded. I think that is the clearest way to put the point of law that arises. Now, I am far from saying that different views might not be taken of that point. But the consideration that I have given to the subject has clearly led me to the view that it cannot be said that those limits were exceeded. Mr. Binning for the defendant contended that the plaintiff had no business to go anywhere beyond the part of the varandah opposite the steps and the centre door of the defendant's sitting room. That, I think, is a position which is not justified by the circumstances in this particular case. Admittedly there was no servant on duty to whom the plaintiff could apply in order to obtain an interview with the defendant. The defendant's own evidence is that all the servants were given leave to go away temporarily from about six in the evening, and it is also admitted that when Mrs. Fisher called for a servant after she had taken the plaintiff into her bed-room, there was some delay in the servant arriving. Then again, as Mr. Campbell pointed out, there was no bell or knocker provided, by which a visitor could obtain attention without moving from a position opposite the steps. It is the case of both sides that there was a screen in front of this general sitting room which was used as a sort of club by people coming there to play cards and billiards, and it is certainly reasonable that the plaintiff should hesitate to go into that particular room; nor do either the defendant or his wife say that she should have done so. What Mrs. Fisher says is that the plaintiff should have called out or knocked at the door, or otherwise done something to get a servant or draw attention to her having come. But she did what I think was quite natural; she went to one of the side door windows and looked in, and even according to the defendant's case, she managed by that means to attract attention. The verandah was not screened off in any way it was quite open; so that it is not a case where it could be said that there was a clear indication to a visitor that he or she should not go behind the screen put there. And it seems to me that the invitation given to the plaintiff as an invitee would certainly extend to her going to the door window where she did go. Then going a step further, was she justified in going towards the dining-room door with the intention of entering it and there waiting until the defendant came? Here again two views are possible, but I think that the circumstances are such that the plaintiff might reasonably consider herself entitled to go and wait in the dining room. No chairs, so far as the evidence shows, were provided in the verandah ; she might have had to wait for a very considerable time so far as she knew, and there was no other room available for her to wait in. It was at an hour when the dining room would not be wanted for meals or for other purposes, so that her presence might be regarded as an undesirable intrusion. The plaintiff is a lady of a similar social standing, so far as I am aware, to that of the defendant and had herself been previously taken into this room ; having regard to the ordinary social amenities which govern Europeans of the class to which the parties belong, there was good reason for her thinking that the defendant would have no objection to her waiting there. But for the fact of this dog being there, I have not the slightest doubt that the defendant really would have had no objection whatever to her going into the room. There is no suggestion that she went there with any dishonest or malicious purpose, and as a lady who had come there on lawful business, I am prepared to hold that she was justified in desiring to go into that room and wait. But as a matter of fact in this particular case she did not actually enter the room, so that her position is stronger than that relied upon by the defendant. Other reported cases necessarily have different facts from those of the present case, but I think there are clear authorities in support of the view I take. It will suffice to refer to two cases. In Butts v. Goddard (5) the plaintiff, a needlewoman on lawful business, entered certain premises otherwise than by the usual entrance. When she got through the outer door she came to a landing having offices on both sides. Crossing the hall she reached the folding door with fluted glass on the top so that she could not see through. She pushed this open and immediately came upon a flight of steps leading down to a cellar. She fell and had injuries. She brought an action to recover damages, and Manisty, J. in summing up (according to the report in this case) says :—

"The Jury would have to deal with the fact whether she was reasonably right in that impression (that she was entering in at the proper door). If they thought that the defendants had these premises, and had them so that a person might reasonably suppose he should go in there, then an invitation was held out to go there, and the defendants were bound to have that access reasonably safe."

The Jury found for the plaintiff. That is a case where it certainly might have been contended that the plaintiff had no business in entering by the door she did. I think also that the case of Stiles v. Cardiff Steam Navigation Co. (6) although it is not quite on all fours with the present case, is one that supports the view that the mere fact of the plaintiff going beyond the actual entrance to the defendant's house is not enough to bar her claim.

Again, take a case like that of Walker v. The Midland Railway Company (7) where an inn-keeper was held not to be under a duty to his guests to keep those places safe where visitors are not entitled to go, and where they cannot be reasonably expected to go by mistake : thus where there was a well-lighted and properly indicated lavatory accommodation it was held that a guest, who went about looking for the lavatory in the dark through a service-room, and was injured, could not recover damages. That case is of course a very different one to this, but it may be noted that the view that the plaintiff could not recover in that case was dissented from by two of the Law Lords as against the majority of three. The Earl of Selborne in his judgment held that the general duty of an innkeeper must be limited to those places into which guests may reasonably be supposed to be likely to go in the belief, reasonably entertained, that they are entitled or invited to do so ; and I mainly refer to that case because it shows that this question of reasonable belief can legitimately be taken into consideration in a case of this kind. I hold that, apart from any express invitation, there was in the circumstances of this case an implied invitation or permission by the defendant to the plaintiff to enter this particular dining-room. That being so, there can, I think, be no doubt that he did not exercise reasonable care to prevent damage from the unusual danger afforded by the presence of the dog. There was no guarding of the room by a servant, no notice about the dog being there, and bad lighting. I think the dog, to use the words of the defendant in one of his letters, "pounched upon" her, without her being able to see it before it actually attacked her. It is true that the defendant shouted out, but that shout was not heard by the plaintiff and in any case was too late.

Then as regards the question whether there was contributory negligence by the plaintiff, that has in fact not been urged by defendant's Counsel and there is no evidence to show she did not exercise reasonable care in proceeding along the verandah. No doubt, it was not fully lit, but (so far as the evidence goes) there was sufficient light for the plaintiff to be justified in walking towards the dining room as she did, being unaware that this dog was there on guard. The defendant was no doubt entitled to keep his dog there on guard to protect his property, as he says he did, but he was certainly negligent in allowing this to be done at the time when it was quite within ordinary possibilities that a visitor like the plaintiff coming to him on business might go to that room. He could not reasonably assume that the only persons who would go there would be thieves, or servants or others whom the dog knew and would not attack.

On the issues raised I answer as follows:—(1) Whether the plaintiff was bitten in defendant's verandah or in his dining-room? Answer. In the verandah, but near the dining room door. (2) Whether the plaintiff had been authorised by the defendant to enter the dining-room on this occasion? Answer. There was no express authorisation, but the circumstances were such as to give an implied invitation to the plaintiff to enter. (3) Whether the dog was ferocious? Answer. The dog was ferocious to this extent that it was apt to bite human beings when chained and on guard as he did in this case, and the defendant was aware of the danger arising therefrom. (4) Whether there was any negligence on the part of the defendant? Answer. Yes.

The only remaining issue is the fifth, whether the plaintiff is entitled to any and if so what damages? On this point Mr. Binning for the defendant did not contest the plaintiff's claim in regard to charges for her going to Kasauli for anti-rabis treatment and for the Ayah that she engaged to attend to her at about that time. There is also the authority of the case of Prakash Kumar Mukerji v. Harveys (8) for holding such charges in a case like the present to be reasonable. The expenses in question are sufficiently proved to amount to Rs. 538-14-0 as stated in Ex. C to the plaint. To this should be added the expenses incurred in connection with the Ayah, whom plaintiff says she engaged for six or seven days and to whom, she paid Rs. 2 per day. Then also, I think may be added minor expenses not specifically mentioned, so that the total may be taken to be Rs. 600. The plaintiff says that she had to incur medical expenses afterwards in consulting no less than six doctors, whose charges amount to Rs. 370. But I am not satisfied that those charges can be properly allowed as damages naturally arising from dog bite, for there is no evidence given by any of the doctors in question to justify the Court in holding that proved. The only thing that does help the plaintiff on this point is the certificate of Dr. Nunan given on February 8, 1923, Ex. I, and his testimony that the present condition of her left thigh is due to the dog bite. But, on the other hand, the plaintiff is able to go about her ordinary business and has in fact got a Government appointment, and I cannot say that there is sufficient evidence to show that these expenses were due mainly to the dog bite. I think any such compensation would more properly come under the general discretion which the Court has to award the plaintiff damages, under the general head of pain and suffering. In such a case it is obviously impossible to assess the plaintiff's loss at a precise money value, and the only limit which is imposed is that the amount shall not be unreasonable. There is no doubt that the plaintiff has suffered considerably, but on the other hand the Court must be careful not to award an excessive amount, having regard to the defendant's means. I allow another Rs. 600 under this head which I think will suffice to compensate the plaintiff. The result is, I pass a decree in plaintiff's favour to recover Rs. 1,200 as damages from the defendant with costs of the suit and interest on judgment at six per cent.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1491 OF 1922.

November 18, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ramesam.

THE BOMBAY, BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY LTD., —DEFENDANT No. 2—APPELLANT

FIRM NATTAJI PRATAPCHAND—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Railway Company—Risk Note Form "B"—Suit for damages for loss of goods—Burden of proof—Duty of Company—"Wilful neglect," meaning of—"Robbery," whether theft—Loss occasioned by failure of guard to stop train—Liability of Company.

In a suit to recover damages for the loss of goods consigned to a Railway Company for carriage under Risk Note Form "B" the onus lies on the plaintiff to prove that the loss was due to theft or to the wilful neglect of the Company's servants. The Company must give prima facie or formal evidence that so far as they know, the Company or its servants through whose hands the goods have passed are not keeping back the goods. For this purpose they must tender their servants for cross-examination, and it is for the plaintiff, if he can, to prove by such cross-examination wilful neglect of, or theft by, the railway servants. It is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that there is no other possible explanation for the loss. It is enough if the facts proved strongly preponderate in favour of the theory which fixes the Company with liability. [p. 80, col .2; p. 81, col. 2.]

Negligence is really the absence of such care as it was the duty of the defendant to use. [p. 81, col. 1.]

The word "wilful" ordinarily implies nothing blameable, but merely that the person of whose action the expression is used, is a free agent, and that what has been done arises from the spontaneous action of his will. [p. 81, col. 2.]

The word "robbery" in Risk Note Form "B" is equivalent to theft. [p. 80, col. 2.]

Where the loss is found to have been due to the failure of the guard to stop the train, after he had noticed that the doors of the wagon containing the goods were open, the Company must be held to have been guilty of "wilful neglect". [p. 81, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in Appeal Suit No. 148 of 1921, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Bezwada, in Original Suit No. 166 of 1920.

JUDGMENT.—Ten bales of yarn were consigned on behalf of the plaintiff at Sidhapur Railway Station on the B. B. & C. I. Railway to Bezwada. Only nine bales were delivered at Bezwada. The suit is for the price of the missing bale. The plaintiff got a decree against the B. B. & C. I. Railway, Co., and the Company files the second appeal.

The facts so far as they appear from D. W. No. 2 (which was accepted by the Courts below) may be stated. The wagon (No. 7365) containing the ten bales passed through Dadar Junction (the junction connecting the B. B. & C. I. Railway and the G. I. P. Railway) when it was checked and the goods found correct. From there the train passed ex Waribunder to Kalyan. There was shunting at Matunga on the way. The seals of the wagons were intact then. The train next stopped at Kurla for shunting. It also stopped at Galeopoor, Thana and Mumbra. When the train got in motion at the Mumbra Station, the Guard (D. W. No. 2) noticed the doors of two wagons (No. 7365 and another) open. But the train was not stopped. It next reached Kalyan where he reported the matter. D. W. No. 5 took up the matter and reported to the Assistant Station Master (D. W. No. 1) and the shunting Master (D. W. No. 4). They got the wagon re-sealed and the wagon was shunted to the tranship shed. D. W. No. 3 checked the contents of the wagon and found one bale missing. As I understand the evidence of D. W. No. 2, there was nothing wrong with the wagon until the train left Mumbra Station.

The Risk Note Ex. I is in the Form B. Under it the Company is not liable except "for the loss of a complete consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of a consignment due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants, transport agents or carriers employed by them before, during and after transit over the said railway or other railway lines working connection therewith or by any other transport agency or agencies employed by them respectively, for the carriage of the whole or any part of the said consignment provided the term "wilful neglect" be not held to include fire, robbery from a running train or any other unforeseen event or accident." The question of burden of proof was very much discussed before me. On this point I agree with the observations of Macleod, C. J., and Crump J. in G. I. P. Railway v. Himatlal Jagjivandas (1). "In this country a Railway Company should produce before the Court for examination those of their servants who were in a position to be acquainted with the facts relating to the disappearance of their customer's goods' (at page 354*). "The onus lies upon the plaintiffs to prove that loss was due to theft by or to the wilful neglect of the Company's servants" (at page 352*). See also Narayana Iyer v. South Indian Railway Co., Ltd. (2) and East Indian Railway Company v. Nathmal Behari Lal (3). There is often a difficulty in proving wilful neglect because the only evidence of wilful neglect is the evidence which can be extracted in cross-examination from the witnesses for the defence." [B. B. & C. I. Railway v. Dayaram Bechardas (4)]. This conclusion seems to be in accordance with common sense and sound principles of law. It is also in accordance with the conclusion in Ghelabhai Punsi v. East Indian Railway Co. (5), East Indian Railway Co. v. Firm, Kishen Lal Tirkhamal (6) and East Indian Railway Co. v. Jagpat Singh (7). I observe that the conclusion of Daniels, J., in East Indian Railway Co., v. Firm, Kishen Lal Tirkhamal (6) was arrived at after relying on Secretary of State for India v. Firm Jiwan and Abdullah (8) where Lindsay, J., held that the Company is not liable if the case is one of deterioration of the goods and the plaintiff can recover for 'loss' only if they are lost by the Railway Administration and not following Hill, Sawyers and Company v. Secretary of State (9) and distinguishing Smith Ltd. v. Great Western Railway (10) similar reasoning about 'loss' was used by Page, J., in East Indian Railway Co. v. Jagpat Singh (7). In the Bombay case [G. I. P. Railway v. Himatlal Jagjivandag (1)] the case of Smith Ltd. v. Great Western Railway (10) was applied to Risk Notes in Form-B. On the question as to whether plaintiff can recover only for goods lost by the Company or recover for deterioration of goods I agree with the decision of this Court in Madras and Southern Maharatta Railway Co. v. Mattai Subba Rao (11). But, I do not quite see how the question as to what kind of loss plaintiff can recover for, has any bearing on the question what the Company must prove and what the plaintiff must prove. The case in Ghelabhai Punsi v. East Indian Railway Co. (5) rests on Curran v. Midland Great Western Railway Co. of Ireland (12) the weight of which is somewhat shaken by Smith Ltd. v. Great Western Railway (10). Possibly they are distinguishable. It seems to me that the Company to whom the goods are delivered must give prima facie or formal evidence that, so far as they know, the Company or their servants through whose hands the goods passed are not keeping back the goods, which is at least a possibility. [See East Indian Railway Co. v. Firm Sukhdeo Das Gobardhan Das (13)]. For this purpose, they tender their servants for cross-examination and it is for the plaintiff, if he can, to prove by the cross-examination wilful neglect or theft by the railway servants.

In the present case I am glad to say that the conduct of the Company is perfectly straightforward and they complied with the requisites of G. I. P. Railway v. Himatlal Jagjivandas (1) by examining D. Ws. Nos. 1 to 5. The plaintiffs have been able to elicit by the cross-examination of D. W. No. 2 that there was neglect of the guard in not stopping the train. As the door was found open as soon as the train started, the bale would have been probably found on the line and there is little scope for 'theft in the running train." I assume robbery in the Form B is equivalent to theft, [Great Indian Peninsular Railway Co. v. Firm Bhola Nath Debi Das (14)]. The facts in B. B. & C. I. Railway v. Daya ram Bechardas (4) are different. There it was found that a thief could enter either while the train was standing there (Narbada bridge Cabin) or while the train was approaching the Narbada bridge and that it was pitch-dark night and the train would be going very slowly before reaching the station. Here the loss was in the morning before 9 A. M. and the probability of a thief stealing a bale of yarn is far less on the facts. The question is one of fact and as I think the inference of the Courts below is right, I accept their finding that the loss was due to the neglect of the guard in not stopping immediately he saw the doors open. Mr. Numbiar argued that this conduct does not amount to wilful neglect. In Forder v. Great Western Railway Co. (15) there was no neglect. The consignment of sheepskins was placed in truck of wood chips, but there was no notice to the Company of the nature of the consignment. The case of Buckton & Co. v. London and North Western Railway (16) is also peculiar. It was held that sending a wagon of three ton capacity though asked to send a wagon of five ton capacity on account of a mistake did not amount to wilful neglect. It was believed by the defendants' foreman that the wagon was a wagon of a capacity of five tons. It had been standing between two wagons belonging to other Railway Companies which were five ton wagons and it was believed to be of the same strength and capacity. I do not see how these cases can help the appellant.

The case in Waklein v. L. & S. W. R (17) is a case of collision and Pomfret v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry. Co. (18) is a case under Workman's Compensation Act. In Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Co. (19), Willes, J. at page 612* said: "Confusion has arisen from regarding negligence as a positive instead of a negative word. It is really the absence of such care as it was the duty of the defendant to use. A bailee is only bound to use the ordinary care of a man, and so the absence of it is called gross negligence. Gross, therefore, is a word of description, and not a definition, and it would have been only introducing a source of confusion to use the expression 'gross negligence,' instead of the equivalent, a want of due care and skill." In In re Young and Harston's Contract (20) Bowen, L. J., said: "The term 'wilful default' is not a term of art, and to pursue authorities with a view to defining for all time what is its meaning in a contract like this appears to me to press citation far beyond the point at which it ceases to be useful:..... The other word which it is sought to define is 'wilful.' That is a word of familiar use in every branch of law, and although in some branches of the law it may have a special meaning, it generally, as used in Courts of Law, implies nothing blameable, but merely that the person of whose action.....the expression is used, is a free agent, and that what has been done arises from the spontaneous action of his will." Similar remarks are used about 'wilfully neglecting' by Lord Coleridge, C. J. [Reg. v. Downes (21)]. I think wilful neglect has been proved in this case. I think on the facts, the Courts below were right in thinking that the loss is probably due to it. It is not necessary to show that there is no other possible explanation for the loss. It is enough if "the facts proved strongly preponderated in favour of the theory" which fixed the Company with liability [Central India Spinning and Weaving Co. v. G. I. P. Railway Co. (22)].

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s. 80—Settlement entry recording villagers' right—Suit for cancellation of entry, whether maintainable—Order passed by Settlement Officer—Presumption—Burden of proving contrary—Order not produced—Presumption, whether arises.

A suit for the cancellation of the Settlement entry of a mouza in respect of the right, recorded therein of the villagers, to water their cattle at the plaintiff's tank, and for an injunction against the villagers to prevent their doing so is maintainable under s. 80 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act. [p. 82, col. 1.]

Every order passed by a Settlement Officer must be presumed to have been passed after due enquiry, and the burden of proving that it was not so passed lies on the person who alleges it. [p. 82, col. 2.]

Where, however, the order has not been produced, no presumption arises as to whether it does or does not contain any reference to any particular matter as being passed after enquiry. [ibid.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 20th December 1923, in Civil Appeal No. 6 of 1923.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is one of limitation. The plaintiff-respondent who is the malguzar of Mouza Basipur, in the Bhandara District, sued the Secretary of State for India and the villagers of Chirchalbandh for cancellation of the Settlement entry of Basipar, in respect of the right, recorded therein, of the Chirchalbandh villagers to water their cattle at the plaintiff's tank, and for an injunction against the said villagers to prevent their doing so. The Secretary of State did not defend the suit. The First Court dismissed the suit on the ground that it was not maintainable under s. 80 of the Land Revenue Act, and was also barred by limitation. On appeal the Additional District Judge, Bhandara, set aside the decree of the First Court and remanded the suit for a decision on the merits, holding that the suit was maintainable under s. 80, and that the suit was not barred by limitation.

The defendants make this second appeal, and the only point taken is one of limitation, namely, that the suit is barred under s. 80 of the Land Revenue Act. Section 80 of the Land Revenue Act provides that any person aggrieved by any order or entry under certain sections, mentioned, may institute a suit in the Civil Court, within one year from the date on which the assessment is offered to the proprietor, to have such order or entry cancelled or amended, and subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order or entry shall be conclusive.

It is contended that the present suit is barred by limitation, admittedly not having been brought within one year from the date of the assessment being offered to the proprietor on 29th November 1919, while the suit was brought on 13th May 1921. The learned Judge of the first Appellate Court has held that the suit is governed by sub-s. (2) of s. 80, which provides that "nothing in sub-s. (1) shall apply to a person whose right was not expressly considered and decided by the Settlement Officer." Unfortunately, neither party has produced the order of the Settlement Officer on which the village wajib-ul-arz is presumably based.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that under s. 78 of the Land Revenue Act the duty cast upon the Settlement Officer is of ascertaining and recording the custom in each village, and it is to be presumed that he performed his duty and that he held an enquiry. It is admitted that both parties, plaintiff and defendants, were present when the Settlement Officer made his enquiry in the village. Both the Courts below have held on the evidence that no enquiry was made with reference to this particular custom, with which we are now concerned, namely, the right of the villagers of Chirchalbandh to water their cattle in the village tank of Basipar belonging to the plaintiff. This is a finding of fact. Of course, there were many other matters, into which the Settlement Officer had to enquire in making a settlement, and in the absence of any order of the Settlement Officer stating that he had made an enquiry on the spot into this particular custom, I do not think I can go behind the findings of the Courts below that this question was not expressly considered and decided by the Settlement Officer. I admit that the presumption being that any orders passed by the Settlement Officer were passed after due enquiry, the burden lies on the plaintiffs to prove that they were not so passed. But although the plaintiff has not produced the order, I cannot make any presumption that it contains or does not contain any reference to this particular matter as being passed after enquiry, because the defendants have not produced it either, although it would have materially strengthened their case. The lower Appellate Court has considered the evidence on the subject. It is correct in saying that the First Court has misread the plaintiff's evidence, for he says distinctly that no enquiry was made on this point.

Apart from this, an additional point has been raised by the learned Counsel for the respondent. Under the ruling in Musammat Maina v. Ram Krishna (1) which was under s. 83 of the old Revenue Act, which corresponds to s. 80 of the present Act, a person suing to set aside an order or decision of the Settlement Officer must produce a certified copy of the decision or entry, sought to be set aside, with the plaint.

It has been pointed out by the learned Counsel for the respondent that the plaintiff applied for a copy of the wajib-ul-arz to the Deputy Commissioner on 14th June 1920 and was informed that it was not yet passed. This appears from Ex. P. 5, and no copy of the wajib-ul-arz was supplied until 4th January 1921.

It is contended that the law does not compel a man to do what is impossible and that if he is required to produce a copy of a document, which is not in existence, he cannot be made to suffer for that. Reference is made to the case of Balkrishna v. Tima (2) where it is said "that the law does not compel a man to do that which he cannot possibly perform."

I may point out that under s. 85 of the Land Revenue Act "no settlement shall be final until it has been confirmed by the Chief Commissioner." (Now I suppose by Government). Although s. 80 lays down as the starting point of limitation the date on which the assessment is offered to the proprietor, under s. 84 the proposals of the Settlement Officer shall be submitted to the Financial Commissioner for sanction.

I need not go into the question of whether limitation should run from the date of final sanction, but it will appear in this case that the delay in furnishing the wajib-ul-arz was probably due to its not having been passed for want of the Financial Commissionar's sanction or the final sanction of the Chief Commissioner, and it may, therefore, be fairly argued that there was no final order or entry in existence at the date when the plaintiff brought the present suit.

In these circumstances I do not see any reason to differ from the order of the lower Appellate Court, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Arbitration—Arbitration proceedings—Suit filed—Proceedings, whether invalidated—Award, filing of—Procedure—Stay of suit—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 19.

The fact that an act is done contrary to a contract does not necessarily render the act invalid. [p. 84, col. 1.]

Thus a party may have contracted to submit his dispute to arbitration, but nevertheless may, if so disposed, break his contract, and submit his dispute for decision to the public tribunal, if no statutory bar exists. [p. 84, col. 2.]

But the mere filing of the suit does not invalidate the arbitration proceedings, and the arbitrators are at liberty to proceed. [ibid.]

Khillooram Lokuram v. Louis Dreyfus & Co., 52 Ind. Cas. 130; 13 S. L. R. 8, followed.

Doleman & Sons v. Osset Corporation, (1912) 3 K. B. 257, 81 L. J. K. B. 1092; 107 L. T. 581; 76 J. P. 457; 10 L. G. R. 915, not followed.

Arbitration proceedings pending suit, however, though not invalid, remain in abeyance, and the award cannot be filed, until a stay of the suit is obtained by an application under s. 19 of the Arbitration Act. [ibid.]

If the application for stay of the suit is refused, or the party applying waives his right by pleading in the suit, the arbitration proceedings and any award made therein are invalidated, and the Court alone is seized of the dispute. [ibid.]

Therefore, where an application for filing an award is made during the pendency of a suit relating to the same subject-matter, the correct procedure for the Court is not to order that the award be taken of the file absolutely as invalid, but to postpone the consideration of the application to file the award, or to direct its return to the applicant with liberty to be presented after the Court has disposed of the application under s. 19 of the Arbitration Act or has ceased to be seized of the suit without adjudication on the merits. JUDGMENT.

Kennedy, J. C.—In this case the facts are that there was a dispute between respondents No. 1 and respondents No. 2 under a contract which contained an arbitration clause. On the 17th of February 1920 respondents No. 1 called upon respondents No. 2 to appoint an arbitrator. And on the 3rd of March 1920 respondents No. 1 informed respondents No. 2 of appointment of the arbitrators. The reference was executed in favour of the arbitrators on the 19th of March 1920. On the 24th of March 1920 the arbitrators gave notice.

In the meantime on the 26th of November 1919 respondents No. 2 filed a suit in Beawar Court for accounts. The suit was registered on the 11th of May 1920. The summons for final disposal was issued for the 27th of May 1920. On the 21st of July 1920 respondents No. 1 applied under s. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act to the Beawar Court for the stay of the suit which application has not yet been disposed of.

The arbitrators proceeded with their arbitration and came to an award on 15th June which they proposed to file. Respondents No. 2, however, made an application to this Court asking the award to be taken off the file on the ground that the arbitrators had, in the circumstances above stated, no authority to proceed and the award is, therefore, a nullity.

For the purposes of this application we must take it as established that the Beawar suit covered the same matter as the arbitration.

Some difficulties have arisen in consequence of the proceedings in the Beawar Court at the time of the filing of the plaint. The plaint, as I said, was filed in November 1919 but was considered by the officers of the Beawar Court as being not in proper form. And it was only after considerable delay that these imperfections were removed or explained. Beawar Court appears, with all due deference, to have made use of an obsolete procedure in respect of the plaint. There is no provision in the present Code for the return of the rejection of the plaint in such circumstances and the correct procedure for the Beawar Court was to have had the plaint registered leaving it for the plaintiff (if so advised) to apply for its amendment under the appropriate order what would have been the case, had the plaint after rejection or return never been again presented, need not be dealt with as it has been again presented. I am of the opinion that the suit in the Beawar Court must be held to have begun on the date when the plaint was originally presented, viz., in November 1919.

The question now is what was the effect on the arbitration proceedings of the fact that before the arbitration proceedings had begun, the plaint had been filed, the award having been come to during the pendency of the suit before any stay order was obtained.

These matters have been frequently discussed. It seems to me so far this Court is concerned, the law is as follows:—

The fact that an act is done contrary to a contract does not necessarily render the act invalid. Thus a party may have contracted to submit his dispute to arbitration, if so disposed he may break his contract and submit his dispute for decision to the public tribunal if no statutory bar exists. The public tribunal will thereon try and proceed. It would have been inconvenient that the two tribunals the public tribunal and the private tribunal should deal with the same matter simultaneously. Such proceedings might lead to an unseemly race between the public tribunal and the private tribunal to see who gives the decision first. One of the two must, therefore, stay its proceedings. The public tribunal is compelled to dispose of the suit presented to it, it is not possible for the public tribunal to suspend its functions except in accordance with law. The only way in which it could be induced to stay its proceedings is by application under s. 19. Until then an application has been made under s. 19 and has been granted by the Court, the private tribunal must remain in abeyance.

So far the matters seem to apply not only in Sind but in other countries in which the Arbitration Act has been in force.

The question, however, now before us is at what point the private tribunal's activity is suspended and to what notice the parties and the private tribunal is entitled before ceasing its operation. This is a point which has, I think, been decided in Sind in the case of Khillooram Lokuram v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (1), where it was held that the mere fact of the suit being filed does not invalidate the arbitration proceedings, and it is for the Court to decide whether it should try the suit or not. If, however, an order under s. 19 of the Act to stay the suit is refused or if the party applying under that Act has by pleading in the suit waived his right of going into arbitration, the arbitration proceedings are invalidated and the Court alone is seized of the dispute. Therefore, until the Court has so made up its mind, under s. 19 the arbitrators are not functi-officio.

This finding is perhaps contrary to the ratio decidendi in Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (2). But then the dictum of Fletcher Moulton, L. J. that the filing of the suit invalidates arbitration altogether is obiter. In the King's Bench case what happened was that no application had been made to stay.

On strict principles, it is possible the principle of Doleman & Sons case (2) should be extended so as to cover cases in which the Court had not yet decided whether it should stay or not. In this province, we are bound by the decision in the case of Khillooram Lokuram v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (1). I think on that judgment, I ought to find the arbitrators were, until the Court had decided the application under s. 19 at liberty to proceed. But until that application is disposed of by Court staying the proceedings, the award could not be filed. Of course, if the Court on the application under s. 19 had refused to stay the trial, the award of the arbitrators could not be filed as an award. It seems to me, therefore, until the Beawar Court disposed of matter before it, the award of the arbitrators is not a nullity and is not bad but is in suspense. The correct order for this Court would have been to reject the award and order it to be taken off the file with liberty to be represented after the Beawar Court had disposed of the application under s. 19 or had otherwise ceased to be seized of the case without adjudication on the merits.

Aston, A. J. C.—Under 5 indents entered into in Beawar on various dates between 15th November 1917 and 22nd April 1918 both inclusive the appellants Messrs. Mitsui Bussan Kaisha of Karachi entered into agreements with the respondents Messrs. Totaram Bhagwandas of Beawar relating to consignments of wool to be sold in London. The indents contained the usual submission to arbitration clause providing that any disputes which arose were to be referred to the arbitration of two European merchants residing in Karachi.

Disputes eventually arose regarding a sum of Rs. 8,652-9-7 alleged to be due on re-drafts which the respondents had failed to pay.

On the 26th November 1919 the respondents filed a suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Beawar praying for an account and for the amount due to respondents on the account and for further and other relief.

The order passed by the learned Sub-Judge was that the plaint was to be checked and a report made on 12th December 1919.

On 2nd December 1919 the reader of the Court reported that the plaint stamp and process-fee stamp were in order, but that the suit was for settlement of accounts but the plaintiff had filed no account from which the amount of the plaint stamp might be ascertained. He further reported that a copy of the plaint and translation fees had not been filed and that the body of the plaint contained some English words written in Urdu characters.

On 12th December the Sub-Judge ordered that the plaint was to be returned and presented within a weak after amendment. After various postponements the plaint was presented as amended on the 13th April 1920 and the orders subsequently passed by the Sub-Judge were that the case was to be registered and summons issued for 27th May. The suit was duly registered as Suit No. 99 of 1920.

I concur in the opinion of the Judicial Commissioner that the Sub-Judge appears to have adopted an obsolete procedure in ordering the return of the plaint. I have some doubt, in view of the erroneous procedure, adopted, whether the learned Sub-Judge was seized of the suit for the purposes of this case prior to 13th April 1920 but the point is immaterial for both dates are prior to the 14th April when the arbitrators had made their award.

On the 17th February 1920 the appellants had sent a final request for payment to the respondents and requested them failing payment to appoint their arbitrator within seven days.

On 3rd March the respondents having failed to appoint an arbitrator the appellants appointed Mr. H. C. Cargill as an arbitrator in their behalf and appointed Mr. W. U. Nicholas as their own arbitrator. On 24th March 1920 the arbitrators gave notice that they would hold the arbitration on the 12th April. On the 14th April the arbitrators made their award. On 21st July 1920 an application was made to the Sub-Judge, Beawar under Sch. II, r. 18 of the C. P. C. or in the alternative under s. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, to stay Suit No. 99 of 1920 but no orders had apparently been passed on this application until 18th April 1924, when the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner set aside the award expressing the opinion that the award made during the pendency of the suit was bad.

From this decision Messrs. Mitsui Bussan Kaisha & Co. have come to this Court in revision.

In support of the order it has been urged that the institution of a suit relating to the same subject-matter as proceeding in arbitration renders the arbitrators functi officio and that any action taken by them after the suit is instituted is invalid.

There is no statutory provision, however, invalidating arbitration proceedings relating to the same subject-matter as a pending suit. On the contrary, s. 21 of the Specific Relief Acts bars a suit instituted by a person, who has contracted to refer the subject-matter to arbitration. The right to compromise suits as Jessel, M. R., observed in Besant v. Wood (3) is the natural corollary to the right to institute them.

It has been held by a Full Bench of this Court, that parties can validly refer to arbitration the subject-matter of a suit, without the leave of the Court, both under the C. P. C., and under the Indian Arbitration Act.

That being so, it would seem illogical to hold, that while the subject-matter of a pending suit can be validly referred without the leave of the Court, the institution of a suit renders invalid the continuance of arbitration proceedings commenced before the institution of the suit.

The arbitration proceedings may be invalid, owing to the invalidity of the submission relied on, or the suit may be barred, owing to the existence of a valid agreement to refer its subject-matter to arbitration, but these are facts which have still to be ascertained.

As was pointed out in Khillooram Lokuram v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (1) the mere fact of a suit being filed does not invalidate arbitration proceedings and this was also the view taken in prior rulings of this Court viz., Louis Dreyfus Co. & v. Seth Shevakram Harkarandas (4) and Sawyer v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (4), where it was held that an arbitrator may proceed in spite of a suit filed after the reference to arbitration. It has, however, been pointed out, that it is inexpedient that there should be a sort of race between the judicial and extra-judicial tribunals in deciding a controversy.

To remedy this evil, the Courts, in the absence of a statutory provision for the stay of final orders relating to arbitration proceedings have resorted on the authority of Doleman & Sons v. Ossett Corporation (2), to the fiction that a party who has pleaded in the suit and failed to apply for its stay has abandoned his rights under the arbitration, and that a Court which has refused to stay a suit has decided that it alone shall be seized of the dispute.

It would I think be putting an unduly heavy strain on the fiction to hold that a party who has obtained an award after the institution of the suit, and has applied for the stay of the suit, and for the filing of the award, has abandoned his rights under the arbitration, or that a Court, which has passed no orders on a stay application has decided that it alone shall be seized of the dispute.

The case of Khillooram Lockuram v Louis Dreyfus & Co. (1), shows I think that the appellants may yet be entitled as of right to have the award filed even though it was made after the institution of the suit. I would myself be inclined to go further and hold that circumstances might exist in which the Court might ignore the pendency of the arbitration where the party has failed to obtain an order for stay of a suit relating to the same subject-matter. And yet recognize an executed award for while it is expedient that a race between judicial and extra-judicial tribunals in deciding a dispute should be avoided it is also expedient that by an abuse of the process of Courts, the very object of arbitration, which is to provide a speedy settlement of disputes should not be defeated.

If the Court considers it expedient to ignore an award made during the pendency of a suit, relating to the same subject-matter, and during the pendency of final orders on an application to stay the suit, the correct procedure in my opinion is to postpone consideration of the application to file the award, or to direct its return to the applicant with liberty to be presented after the Court has disposed of the application under s. 19 of the Arbitration Act or has ceased to be seized of the suit, without adjudication on the merits. I concur in the orders passed.

By the Court.—We, therefore, set aside the order of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner directing the award to be takenoff the file absolutely. The other should be that the award be now taken off the file with liberty to represent, should such representation become admissible. It is noted that the other objections to the award have not been disposed of and will of course be considered, should the award be so represented. Applicants to have costs of these applications. Costs below to follow the result. Order set aside.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 207B OF 1921.

December 22, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Kinkhede, A. J. C.

LAXMANSINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

JANARDAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 60, 101—Mortgage, indivisibility of—Mortgagee purchasing rights of one of several mortgagors in satisfaction of entire debt—Suit by puisne mortgagee—Option.

In order that a mortgage may fully attain its end of securing satisfaction of the entire obligation in the rank and with the efficacy which the law or the will of the parties determined, it is essential that it should not suffer any disintegration. This character of indivisibility exists not only with reference to the mortgagee, who may generally be more benefited thereby, but also with reference to the mortgagor. And save as a matter of special arrangement and bargain entered into between all the persons interested, neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee, nor persons acquiring through either a partial interest in the subject, can, under the mortgage, get relief except in consonance with the principle of indivisibility. [p. 89, col. 2.]

Huthasanan Nambudri v. Parameswaran Nambudri, 22 M. 209 at p. 212; 8 Ind. Dec (N. S.) 149, and Din Dayal v. Sheoraj Singh, 2 N. L. R. 116 at p. 118, relied on.

The mere circumstance that by a contract between the prior mortgagee and one of the mortgagors, the prior mortgagee purchases the share of that mortgagor in the mortgaged property in full satisfaction of the whole of the mortgage-debt due to him, cannot affect the principle of the indivisibility of the mortgage. In such a case the prior mortgagee has under s. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act, in answer to a claim based upon an intermediate mortgage, the option to stand by his purchase or to give up his rights thereunder, and fall back on his own prior mortgage. Where he elects to fall back on his prior mortgage and disclaims his rights qua owner of the equity of redemption the only capacity which remains with him is that of a prior mortgagee, and in virtue of that capacity he is entitled to demand the entire debt due to him from whomsoever may claim to recover the property in his possession by redemption. Appeal from a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 47 of 1921, dated the 4th April 1921.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmoorti, for the Appellant.

Messrs. R. R. Jaywant and A. V. Khare, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Laxmansingh sues to recover possession of a third share of Survey No. 50 of Mouza Warud together with mango and other trees situate therein which is now represented by Survey No. 50 sub-No. 1 area 12-20, jama Rs. 10, under the following circumstances.

Vithoba defendant No. 2 and his three brothers Gangaram, Mukunda and Sheoram, formed a joint family. By a mortgage-deed dated 16th August 1891 (Ex. 1 D-1) they mortgaged the entire field Survey No. 50 to defendant No. 1 Tukaram, who is how represented for the purposes of this appeal by his legal representatives Janardan and Udhao, his minor sons, and Vithal and Rajaram his brothers. Gangaram died in a state of jointness and consequently the shares of the surviving brothers Vithoba, Mukunda and Sheoram enlarged to $\frac{1}{3}$rd each. After the death of Gangaram the three brothers divided the property among themselves and each became a separate owner of his $\frac{1}{3}$rd share of the land. The defendant No. 2 Vithoba, who thus became the owner of a separate $\frac{1}{3}$rd share mortgaged it to plaintiff Laxmansingh on 16th April 1908 with a condition of foreclosure. On 27th July 1909 he sold that share to Tukaram defendant No. 1 by a sale-deed of that date (Ex. 1 D-2) in full satisfaction of the entire mortgage-debt due under the prior mortgage dated 16th August 1891 (Ex. 1 D-1). It appears that his two brothers Sheoram and Mukunda had also mortgaged their shares with plaintiff and in order to redeem those shares from the mortgage each of them sold his share to one Raghunath Ramdhan Marwadi by sale-deeds dated 26th March 1909 (Ex. P-9) and 12th April 1909 (Ex. P-8). Vithoba defendant No. 2, however, did not pay up his mortgage. He was, therefore, sued by plaintiff for foreclosure in Suit No. 185 of 1914 in the Court of Sub-Judge, Yeotmal. The present defendant No. 1 being a purchaser of Vithoba's share under his sale-deed (Ex. 1 D-2) was impleaded as a co-defendant in that suit. In answer to the claim based upon the subsequent mortgage dated 6th April 1908 the defendant No. 1 pleaded his paramount lien based on his prior mortgage dated 16th August 1891 (Ex. 1 D-1) and claimed to fall back upon it, and declared that he was not willing to redeem the subsequent mortgage of the plaintiff, in his capacity of a purchaser of equity of redemption and claimed to be redeemed by a plaintiff (Exs. P-2 and P-11). The defendant No. 1 was accordingly discharged from that suit on 20th April 1915. A preliminary decree for foreclosure was accordingly passed in that case on 20th April 1915 against defendant Vithoba alone (Exs. P-5 and P-6). Vithoba had really no interest left in him to redeem, and consequently he did not pay and the decree was made final on 4th November 1916 (Ex. P-7). The plaintiff got formal possession of the share foreclosed on 9th March 1917 (Exs. P-4 and P-3) but the defendant No. 1 succeeded in recovering back possession of the share in July 1917 by virtue of an order passed in his favour under O. XXI, r. 100 of the C. P. C. The plaintiff, therefore, instituted the present suit on 14th May 1918, for establishing the right which he claims to the present possession of the property as contemplated by O. XXI, r. 103 of the C. P. C. He has prayed for possession of the property being decreed in his favour alternately on redemption by payment of a $\frac{1}{3}$rd share of the prior mortgage debt due to defendant No. 1. He further claims a decree for surplus receipts from the mortgaged property that may be found due to him, on taking proper accounts. His contention is that as defendant No. 1 purchased Vithoba's share, and thereby split up his own mortgage security, the plaintiff became entitled to redeem the defendant No. 1's prior mortgage piecemeal and to confine the relief of redemption to the property foreclosed by himself, and that he was not concerned with the payment of anything which is in excess of his proportionate third share of the principal sum and interest secured by the prior mortgage, on the ground that it is chargeable against the $\frac{2}{3}$rds of the property held by Raghunath Ramdhan under his purchases (Exs. P-8 and P-9). The Court of first instance gave plaintiff an option to amend the plaint by claiming redemption on payment of the entire amount payable under the prior mortgage dated 16th August 1891, but he declined to avail himself of that opportunity and returned the plaint without any amendments on 24th March 1919. The First Court, therefore, holding that the entire mortgage security was kept alive and was in tact and within time, and that the plaintiff could not claim to redeem the prior mortgage piecemeal, dismissed the suit.

In appeal, Mr. R. M. Bhagade held that the plaintiff was liable to first redeem the whole mortgage and then entitled to sue the other persons interested in the rest of the property comprised in the mortgage of 1891, for contribution under s. 95 of the Transfer of Property Act, but that, as he had refused to redeem the entire mortgage and to amend the plaint, the dismissal of the suit was inevitable. Mr. Bhagade's decision was based on the view that defendant No. 1 was entitled to fall back on the prior mortgage of 1891, and that as the mortgage was indivisible the integrity of the mortgage could not be said to have been broken up by his purchasing Vithoba's share in the property mortgaged, especially as he had given up his character as purchaser under the sale-deed dated 27th July 1909 (Ex. 1 D-2) in answer to plaintiff's suit to enforce the 2nd mortgage. Plaintiff has, therefore, come up in second appeal urging the following grounds:—

"1. The respondent prior mortgagee could not release the properties which were mortgaged with him and which fell to the share of Mukunda and Shrawan from his mortgage and take in satisfaction of the whole mortgage-debt, Vithoba's share only to the prejudice of the appellant.

2. The appellant is entitled to redeem the share of Vithoba mortgaged with him from the respondent-mortgagee, on payment of a proportionate part of the debt due on the prior mortgage: the lower Courts are wrong in holding that appellant could not redeem that part only.

3. The purchase by Tukaram from Vithoba has under s. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act the effect of splitting up of the mortgage security and that the appellant's claim for partial redemption ought to have been allowed.

4. The respondent Tukaram ought not to have been allowed to fall back on his mortgage.

5. The plaintiff-appellant ought to have been given possession unconditionally."

The appellant relies upon s. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is argued on his behalf that the 1st paragraph of s. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act affords ample authority for allowing piecemeal redemption in this case. No doubt the defendant No. 1 became by the purchase dated 27th July 1909 interested in a part of the mortgaged security covered by the mortgage dated 16th August 1891. But before that date, i. e., on the date of plaintiff's mortgage dated 6th April 1908 or on the dates of Raghunath's purchases (26th March 1909 and 12th April 1909) the whole of the property covered by the defendant No. 1's prior mortgage, namely, the share of Vithoba as also the shares of Vithoba's other two brothers Sheoram and Mukunda, was subject to a common prior charge created by the mortgage dated 16th August 1891. In spite of the division effected between the mortgagors inter se the prior mortgagee Tukaram was entitled on the principle of indivisibility of the mortgage to insist upon foreclosing the whole of the property covered by the mortgage for non-payment of the whole, or any portion, of the mortgage debt due to him. He could not be forced to submit to piecemeal redemption, by all or any of the mortgagors much less by the plaintiff or by Raghunath, so that if the plaintiff or Raghunath, had then offered to redeem that mortgage neither of them could have redeemed it except in consonance with the principle of the indivisibility of the mortgage. The following passage quoted with approval by Sir Henry Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Din Dayal v. Sheoraj Singh (1), from Huthasanan Nambudri v. Parameswaram Nambudri (2), where Subramania Ayyar, J., observed as follows is pertinent. It has my entire concurrence:—

"But in order that a mortgage may fully attain its end of securing satisfaction of the entire obligation in the rank and with the efficacy which the law or the will of the parties determined, it is essential that it should not suffer any disintegration. This character of indivisibility exists not only with reference to the mortgagee, who may generally be more benefited thereby, but also with reference to the mortgagor. And save as a matter of special arrangement and bargain entered into between all the persons interested, neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee, nor persons acquiring through either a partial interest in the subject, can, under the mortgage, get relief except in consonance with the principle of indivisibility referred to."

The mere circumstance, therefore, that by a contract between defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 the prior mortgagee purchased on 27th July 1909 only Vithoba's share in the mortgaged property in full satisfaction of the whole of the mortgage debt due to him cannot affect the principle of the indivisibility of the mortgage. It cannot be utilised by the plaintiff for the purpose of compelling the prior mortgagee to part with the property acquired by him in lieu of the entire debt, only on payment of a proportionate share of the mortgage debt. The position is on the face of it absurd and unmeaning. The property went into the hands of the prior mortgagee in lieu of the entire prior mortgage-debt and not in lieu of only a 1/3rd share thereof. It will be highly unjust and inequitable to tell the prior mortgagee that he must part with that property on payment of only 1/3rd share of the mortgaged debt in proportion to the share which that property bears to the entire mortgaged property. The prior mortgagee had under s. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act, the option to stand by the sale dated 27th July 1909, or to give up his rights thereunder, and fall back on his own prior mortgage in answer to the claim based upon the plaintiff's intermediate mortgage. He has exercised that option and has declared, as per Exs. P-2 and P-11, on 20th April 1915 that he treats his rights as a purchaser as non-existent. In view of such declaration and disclaimer of the right to redeem, the effect of which was to effectively release in favour of the plaintiff the equity of redemption purchased by defendant No. 1 so as to make it available for being foreclosed in plaintiff's favour in the former suit as if that equity still remained in the mortgagor Vithoba, and of the further fact that equity of redemption having now become vested in plaintiff, the plaintiff became clothed with the double capacity of an intermediate mortgagee, as also of a representative of the mortgagor, to redeem the defendant No. 1's prior mortgage subject to which the foreclosure was ordered in his own mortgage suit. The foreclosure vested the estate in plaintiff subject to the liability to redeem the defendant No. 1's prior mortgage. The plaintiff's only remedy as against defendant No. 1 was, therefore, to redeem him by payment of the entire prior mortgage debt as if the purchase dated 27th July 1909 had never been made by him. He could not maintain ejectment as against the defendant No. 1. So long as the fusion of the rights of the prior mortgagee and of the mortgagor's equity of redemption lasted, the plaintiff could have said that the last para. of s. 60 was applicable, but the moment the prior mortgagee made his election and separated his two capacities the last para. of s. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act ceased automatically to be applicable to the case. Qua owner of the equity of redemption defendant No. 1 was the representative of the mortgagor and as such was liable to be foreclosed, while qua prior mortgagee he was liable to be redeemed, by the plaintiff. He having disclaimed his rights qua owner of the equity of redemption, the only capacity which remained with him was that of a prior mortgagee, and in virtue of that capacity his right was to demand the entire debt due to him from whomsoever may claim to recover the property in his possession by redemption. See Ram Sarup v. Ram Lal (3) and Sonba Teli v. Lahanoo (4). It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Yadalli Beg v. Tuka Ram (5), that while the transferee of a part of the mortgaged security would be entitled to redeem the entire mortgage on the properties generally, he could not compel the mortgagee to allow him to redeem his part by itself. This would be so as the result of the principle of indivisibility unless something had happened, which extinguished the mortgage in whole or in part such as an exercise of a power of sale conferred on the mortgagee by security. Their Lordships confirmed the decree passed by the Additional Judicial Commissioner for redemption of the entire mortgage on payment of the whole mortgage-debt in that case. Similarly a decree could have been passed in the present case, if the plaintiff had been willing to take it. He having declined to amend his plaint so as to claim that relief although he was given full opportunity to do so, his claim as laid was rightly dismissed. Under these circumstances the only course left to the Courts below was to hold that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem piecemeal and the suit as laid was, therefore, liable to be dismissed and the Courts below were perfectly justified in dismissing the same.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Costs in the Courts below will be paid as already ordered.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 499 OF 1924.

December 3, 1924.

Present :—Mr. Justice Srinivasa Iyengar.

KARIYA GOUNDAN AND ANOTHER —PLAINTIFFS—PETITIONERS

TIRUKKAIVELU CHETTY AND OTHERS —DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of pleadings—Power of Court—Interlocutory order—Revision.

The powers of amendment of pleadings conferred on the Courts are very wide and all amendments should be allowed as would enable the Court finally to determine all matters in controversy between the parties.

The High Court has power to interfere with interlocutory orders in a pending suit but it is only in extraordinary circumstances that such interference would be justifiable.

Where an application for amendment of a plaint, so as to include a claim which was omitted by inadvertance or ignorance is rejected by the Trial Court, the High Court would be justified in interfering in revision and directing that the amendment should be allowed in order to avoid trouble, expense and delay which would be occasioned if the amendment was not carried out immediately.

Sri Poosapathi Ramachandra Raju v. Sri Rajah Vachavayi Venkata Subbayamma, 30 Ind. Cas. 41; 29 M. L. J. 53, followed.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Munsif, Dindigul, in I. A. No. 910 of 1922 in O. S. No. 799 of 1920, dated the 18th February 1924.

Mr. T. L. Venkata Rama Iyer, for the Petitioners.

Mr. A. Sundaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I think this petition should be allowed. The petitioners as plaintiffs instituted a suit for redemption of property mortgaged by their father. They subsequently applied to amend their plaint by including a claim against defendants Nos. 5 and 7 as the substituted mortgagees for the reduction of the amount that may be found as damages due and payable to them in respect of the alienation effected by defendants Nos. 5 and 7 of a portion of the mortgaged property. The learned District Munsif dismissed the petition characterising it as belated and vexatious. I think he was wrong. The powers of amendment conferred on the Courts under the present law are much wider than formerly and it has often been stated by very eminent Judges that all amendments should be allowed as would enable the Court finally to determine all matters in controversy between the parties. I have no doubt whatever that this claim which is now sought to be included in the plaint by way of amendment was omitted to be so included only by inadvertance or ignorance. But the learned Counsel for the respondents argued that the mere fact that a wrong order has been made by the Court below will not justify this Court in interfering at this stage in revision. I agree it is only in extraordinary circumstances such interference would be justifiable. In my opinion such interference would be justified in this case in view of the trouble, expense and delay that would be caused if the amendment were not carried out now. It is clear that if this amendment should not be made now, the case will have to proceed in the Court of first instance and in the Court of Appeal if the appeal should be allowed, the case will have to be remanded and fought all over again. The learned Counsel for the respondents has drawn my attention to certain cases in which it was held that though the amendment applied for to be made by the plaintiff was proper and was refused by the lower Court, that was no reason for the High Court interfering by way of revision at that stage. I have not been able to see what was the nature of the amendments that were applied for to be made in those cases. However, that may be, all those cases have been recently considered by learned Judges of this Court, specially in the case of Sri Poosapathi Ramachandra Raju v. Sri Rajah Vachavayi Venkata Subbayamma (1), and this decision of Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastriar has since been followed by several of the learned Judges of this Court. There is no doubt whatever that this Court having the right to revise even in respect of the proceedings in pending suits would undoubtedly do so in proper cases and the only question is whether having regard to the circumstances of this case the Court should interfere or not. Having regard, as I have already said, to the amount of trouble, expense and delay that would be caused if the amendment should not be carried out immediately, I am of the opinion that the order of the District Munsif should be set aside and I accordingly set it aside.

Respondents Nos. 1 to 5 will pay the costs of the petitioners in this Court.

This petition has been withdrawn by the petitioners' Vakil so far as the 6th respondent is concerned who is a minor and for whom a guardian has not been appointed.

Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of—Sale to co-sharer of inferior class—Pre-emption by co-sharer of superior class.

In the absence of specific words in a wajib-ul-arz giving priority in the case of a sale by a co-sharer belonging to one category to a co-sharer belonging to another category, a clause for pre-emption defining the rights of co-sharers inter se as against a stranger cannot be construed so as to give a right of pre-emption to a co-sharer of a superior class upon a sale to a co-sharer of an inferior class.

Sheobalak Singh v. Lachmidhar, 23 A. 427; A. W. N. (1901) 120 and Narain Saran Singh v. Sidh Narain Singh, 5 A. L. J. 655; A. W. N. (1908) 251, followed.

The wajib-ul-arz of a village provided that if a co-sharer wanted to sell his share the right of purchase would belong, in the first instance, to a co-sharer who was a paternal kinsman, then to a co-sharer of the patti and then to a co-sharer of the village, on payment of the proper price, in preference to a stranger:

Held, that the right of purchase under the clause was given in the order mentioned in the event of a sale to a stranger, and though the different categories in which priority was to be exercised were mentioned, they were subject to the main qualification that the question of priority would only arise where a sale to a stranger was made.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 6th of January 1923.

Mr. A. P. Pandeya, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this case is whether under the custom of pre-emption prevalent in the villages in which the property sold is situated the plaintiff is entitled to a right of pre-emption in the case of a sale otherwise than in favour of a stranger to the co-parcenary body.

The property sold stood in several villages the wajib-ul-araiz of which have been produced in the case. The sale was made in favour of a co-sharer of the village. The plaintiff was also a co-sharer; but he claimed a preferential right by reason of his being a paternal kinsman of the vendor. The Court of first instance was of opinion that the wajib-ul-araiz of the villages in question gave him a right of preference over the vendee; but the lower Appellate Court found that no such right of preference was given where a sale was made to a member of the co-parcenary body.

The wajib-ul-arz of the village Madho Patti Khas provides that if any co-sharer wants to transfer his share the right of purchase shall belong first to a paternal kinsman who is a co-sharer (ek jaddi sharik) and then to the co-sharers of the village on payment of the proper price in preference to a stranger.

The wajib-ul-arz of the village Madho Patti provides that in the case of a transfer of property the right of pre-emption shall belong in the first instance to a co-sharer who is a paternal kinsman (sharik ek jaddi) then to the co-sharers in the property itself, and after them to the co-sharers of the village in preference to a stranger on payment of such a price as a stranger pays.

The wajib-ul-arz of Alampur village provides that if a co-sharer wants to sell his share the right of purchase shall belong in the first instance to a co-sharer who is a paternal kinsman (sharik ek jaddi) then to a co-sharer of the patti, and then to a co-sharer of the village on payment of the proper price in preference to a stranger.

In each of these wajib-ul-araiz the right of purchase seems to have been given in the order mentioned in the event of a sale to a stranger, and though the different categories in which priority is to be exercised are mentioned they are subject to the main qualification that the question of priority would only arise where a sale to a stranger is made. The wajib-ul-arz in the present case is very similar to the wajib-ul-arz in Sheobalak Singh v. Lachmidhar (1). In that case it was held that in the absence of specific words giving priority in the case of a sale by a co-sharer belonging to one category to a co-sharer belonging to another category, a clause for pre-emption, defining the rights of co-sharers inter se as against a stranger, could not be construed so as to give a right of pre-emption to a co-sharer of a superior class upon a sale to a co-sharer of an inferior class. The same principle has been applied in Narain Saran Singh v. Sidh Narain Singh (2). The lower Appellate Court was right in refusing to allow pre-emption in these circumstances.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Application for admission of Memorandum of Appeal.

Mr. Campbell, for the Appellants.

Mr. Engineer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dates material for the purpose of dealing with the point arising on this Rule are these :—

The decree sought to be appealed from was passed on June 11, 1923. An application for a certified copy of the judgment was made on June 12. On June 30, an application for a certified copy of the decree was made. The copy of the judgment applied for was furnished on July 3, 1923, and the copy of the decree was furnished on August 8. The plaintiffs presented the memorandum of appeal on August 22, but it was rejected by the Prothonotary as being beyond time on August 31.

On the application of the appellants we granted a Rule to show cause why the appeal should not be admitted. It is urged in support of the Rule that the time spent in obtaining copies of the judgment and of the decree should be excluded and that if that is done the presentation of the appeal should be within time. The whole question is whether the time requisite for obtaining the copy of the decree only should be excluded, or the time requisite for obtaining the copy of the judgment also should be excluded. The Prothonotary has allowed deduction of the time taken in obtaining the copy of the decree, but has not allowed any time for the copy of the judgment. Under s. 12, sub-s. (2), a party is entitled to deduct the time taken in obtaining a copy of the decree appealed from; and under s. 12, sub-s. (3), where a decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed, time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall also be excluded. The appellants rely on this provision as entitling them not only to the deduction of time taken in getting a copy of the decree but also of the time taken in getting a copy of the judgment exclusive of the overlapping period. On the interpretation of s. 12 of the Indian Limitation Act, I should not find any difficulty in accepting the view contended for by the appellants. This view is supported by the decisions in Rajani Kanth Kapali v. Kali Mohan Das Kapali (1) and Silamban Chetty v. Ramahadvan Chetty (2). It may be mentioned that it has been held by this Court in Tukaram Gopal v. Pandurang Sadaram (3) and Pandharinath v. Shankar (4) that in order that a party may be entitled to deduct the time taken in obtaining a copy, it is necessary for him to make an application for copies of the decree and the judgment before the expiration of the time allowed to him by law to prefer an appeal. If this is done there is no reason why the time occupied in obtaining copies of the decree and the judgment should not be deducted as provided by s. 12. There is no decision of this Court directly bearing on the question whether the aggregate of the time taken up in obtaining both the copies should be excluded, of course deducting therefrom any overlapping period. On inquiry we are informed that the practice on the Appellate Side is to exclude the longer of the two periods where the applications for the two copies are made on different dates. The decisions of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts, to which I have just referred, are opposed to this practice. But they appear to us to be based on a correct interpretation of s. 12 of the Indian Limitation Act. It is desirable that there should be uniformity of interpretation on a point of this nature, and in spite of the contrary practice we think that the view taken in these two cases should be followed. In the present case the whole period from June 12 to August 8 should be excluded according to this view; but the overlapping period from June 30 to July 3 should not be excluded twice over. The other view is based upon the assumption that a party is bound to apply for both the copies at the same time, for which there is no express warrant.

(2) 4 Ind. Cas. 301; 33 M. 256; 7 M. L. T. 29; (1910) M. W. N. 141; 21 M. L. J. 152.

On behalf of the respondents reliance is placed upon the decision in Pramatha Nath Roy v. Hon William Arthur Lee (5). It appears from the statement of facts in that case that the order sought to be appealed from was made on July 26, 1918. An application was made by the respondent in that case on August 6 to have the order drawn up, the draft of the order was sent to the appellant on August 7, and it was approved and returned by him on August 16. It was signed by the master on August 28 and was actually filed on September 3, 1918. The appellant had made no application for a copy of the order until September 9, and the appeal was in fact presented on August 30, 1918. The appeal was clearly beyond time, and no application for a certified copy of the order in that case was made within twenty days. In my opinion the ratio decidendi of that case cannot apply to a case where the applications for copies of the decree and of the judgment have been made within the time allowed by law for appealing. In the words of their Lordships reasonable and proper steps to obtain a copy of the decree must be taken in order to get the benefit of s. 12. According to the decisions and the practice this requirement is satisfied if the application is made within the time allowed by law for appealing. And we do not read the observation in Pramatha Nath Roy's case (5) as touching the decision and the practice on this point in any way. In the present case the applications for copies were made within the time allowed for appealing; and the appellants are entitled as of right to exclude the time occupied in obtaining them. The only question is whether they are entitled to the aggregate of two periods deducting the overlapping period, or only to one period which may happen to be longer than the other.

A reference has been made to the decision in New Piece goods Bazar v. Jivabhai Vadilal (6). I do not think that that case presents any difficulty. All that is decided in that case is that the intention to appeal must be made manifest within the time allowed by law for appealing. In the present case that was done by the appellants applying for the copies in time. It is not suggested in this case that the appellants are in any way responsible directly or indirectly for the time occupied in obtaining the copies.

We make the Rule absolute.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 90—Execution of decree—Sale, application to set aside—Person who has sold his interest, whether can apply.

A person whose interests are affected by an execution sale at the time of the sale is entitled to make an application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the C. P. C. to set aside the sale. It is not necessary to show that the interest of the applicant was affected by the sale at the time of the application. A person who has, since the date of the sale, parted with his interest in the property sold is, therefore, entitled to maintain such an application. [p. 95, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Court of the District Judge, Backergunj.

Babu Abinash Chandra Ghosh, for the Petitioner.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal and Babu Nripendra Chandra Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The point for decision in this case depends upon the construction of r. 90 of O. XXI, C. P. C. The learned Judge finds that the property in question was sold in execution on the 8th September 1919. The decree-holder was the purchaser and it is said that he took possession on the 28th of August 1920 after evicting the judgment-debtors. One of the three judgment-debtors was one Aisha Bibi. She sold her interest by a kobala in the property to a person called Serajuddi on the 19th of February 1921. Aisha Bibi then died and her heir is one Sundi Bibi, the petitioner, before me. This Sundi Bibi made an application for setting aside the sale on the 3rd June 1921 under O. XXI, r. 90, C. P. C. The Court of first instance made an order in her favour. The decree-holder then appealed and, on appeal, the learned District Judge held that the applicant had no locus standi to make the application and, without, therefore, entering into the merits of the case, he dismissed it. The question now is whether Sundi Bibi, the present petitioner, can be said to be a person whose interest is affected by the sale.

It is contended by the learned Vakil for the opposite party that the person who makes an application to set aside a sale must show that at the time of the application his interest was affected by the sale, and that, as in the present case, the applicant or her predecessor-in-interest had parted with her interest prior to the date of the application, the petitioner was not in a position to make the application under O. XXI, r. 90, C. P. C. It seems to me that that contention cannot be accepted. The rule in question includes, in my opinion, all persons whose interests are affected by the sale at the time of the sale. Therefore, the present applicant comes within the provisions of that rule and is entitled to maintain the applicatian. To hold otherwise would, it seems to me, be extremely anomalous because if, after the sale is effected, the judgment-debtor sells the property to a third persons, it would be difficult for that persons to say that his interest is affected by the sale because he would be met by the answer that he had purchased nothing and his interest, if any, accrued only after the sale, and, if it is held that the vendor is not entitled to maintain such an application, the result would be that neither the vendor nor the purchaser would be in a position to make an application for setting aside the sale, although there may be very good grounds for doing so. Several cases have been cited before me dealing with the construction of r. 89 of O. XXI, C. P. C., in which persons in the position of the applicant in the present case were held to be entitled to have the sale set aside under the provisions of that rule. It is unnecessary for me to make any further reference to those cases in construing r. 90. It is alleged by the learned Vakils on both sides that there is no reported case relating to the construction of this particular rule. On the grounds stated above, this Rule is made absolute. The judgment on appeal of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case remitted to that Court for re-hearing of the appeal on the merits. Costs will abide the result three gold mohurs.

MADHO SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Will—Execution—Proof.

The fact of the execution of a Will was put in issue 25 years after its alleged date of execution. The Will had been witnessed by several persons, all of whom, except two, had died before suit, but these two gave clear evidence that the Will was executed in their presence, that it represented what the testator wished, and that the testator, although he may not have understood some of the flowery expressions contained in the Will, was yet perfectly competent to comprehend the simple provisions of the Will. The Will was in favour of the son-in-law of the testator and was challenged by a distant reversioner, the question of whose relationship was not clear at the time of the execution of the Will. No Probate had been obtained, but the Will was produced before a Mutation Officer shortly after the death of the testator. The Courts in India held the execution of the Will proved:

Held, that under the circumstances their Lordships of the Privy Council did not see any reason to hold that the judgment of the Court of Appeal in India was not correct.

Appeal from the decree of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C., and Dube, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Dunedin.—The only question in this case is whether a certain Will was really executed or not. This point is mooted for the first time twenty-five years after the Will was executed, and that fact necessarily explains to a certain extent the paucity of evidence which is available as to the actual facts of execution. The Will was witnessed by several persons; death has taken away all of them except two, but, as regards those two, they are both quite clear that the Will really was executed; that it represented what the testator wished, and that he, although he might not have understood some of the flowery expressions, was yet perfectly competent to comprehend what, after all, were very simple provisions.

The Will was produced at once; it was not kept quiet; it was produced within a very short time for the practical purpose of having mutation made of names in the register. The same thing happened when there was another change, owing to a death, and, again, the Will was produced for the purpose of mutation of names.

In those circumstances, what really is said against the Will? It is said, first of all, that it is of an unnatural character, because the eventual taker under the Will is only a son-in-law. Their Lordships, however, are inclined to agree with the view taken by the Appeal Court that, considering that the reversioner was a person far off a person as to whose own particular identity there must have been some considerable amount of doubt because the pedigree, at that time, had not been, so to say, cleared up, it was not unnatural that this man should wish that his son-in-law should succeed, and it was certainly most natural that he should make a Will, because, according to the custom of the village, if he allowed himself to die intestate, his daughter, who was naturally the person whom he would have cared for most, would have been cut out altogether. It is also quite clear that not only his daughter, but also his widow, who under an intestacy would have been entitled to a life-interest of the whole, both acquiesced in this Will and in proceedings being taken for mutation under its provisions.

Then it is said that it is curious that this man did not have any of the villagers at the place that he lived in for witnesses. Their Lordships do not consider that that fact by itself is at all of sufficient weight to get over the circumstances which they have already mentioned. It really becomes rather a matter of speculation to settle who are most likely to be taken as witnesses. The fact of the Will does not seem necessarily to depend on the exactitude of the story that is told by the defendant. The truth is that, if there were only the evidence of the defendant, it might be said that it was obviously interested. Their Lordships are, therefore, inclined to discard the evidence of the defendant as liable to be attacked upon the ground of interest, and because weight must be given to the fact that he certainly did, in the matter of the pedigree, seem to have shown himself a most unreliable person. But that does not affect the actual facts, which have been already stated.

The only other ground is that the Will was not produced for Probate, but those who are conversant with these matters say that that often is not done.

On the whole their Lordships do not see any reason why they should interfer with the judgment—which seems a very careful judgment—of the Court of Appeal, and they will humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss this appeal with costs.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 377—Coitus per os.

Coitus per os falls within the provisions of, and is punishable under, s. 377, Penal Code. [p. 98, col. 1.]

Appeal against the conviction and sentence of the Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, (Sind), dated the 3rd January 1924.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The principal point in this case is whether the accused (who is clearly guilty of having committed the sin of Gomorrah (coitus per os) with a certain little child, the innocent accomplice of his abomination, has thereby committed an offence under s. 377, Indian Penal Code.

Section 377 punishes certain persons who have carnal intercourse against the order of nature with inter alia human beings. Is the act here committed one of carnal intercourse; if so, it is clearly against the order of nature, because the natural object of carnal intercourse is that there should be the possibility of conception of human beings, which in the case of coitus per os is impossible. Intercourse may be defined as mutual frequent action by members of independent organisation. Commercial intercourse provides for the merchants of the state A who wish to come to and trade in the state B, not intending permanently to settle there but with animus redeandi to A, and similarly for the merchants of the state N. Such is the magnus intercourse which regulated the trade of Brittain and Flanders in the middle ages. Social intercourse provides the rules under which members of one family may resort to the premises occupied by another family, not intending to reside in such premises occupied by another family, not intending to reside in such premises but merely to visit them for laudable purposes, reciprocity being of the essence of the bargain. By a metaphor the word intercourse, like the word commerce, is applied to the relations of the sexes. Here also there is the temporary visitation of one organism by a member of the other organisation, for certain clearly defined and limited objects. The primary object of the visiting organisation is to obtain euphoria by means of a detent of the nerves consequent on the sexual crisis. But there is no intercourse unless the visiting member is enveloped at least partially by the visited organism, for intercourse connotes reciprocity. Looking at the question in this way it would seem that sin of Gomorrah is no less carnal intercourse than the sin of Sodom. The sin of Lesbos or Reboim is clearly not such intercourse, and I doubt if mutual cheirourgia would be such. Not very much can be gathered from a consideration of English authorities which are all affected by the fact that the offence of unnatural vice was originally one of the three offences dealt with by the ecclesiastical tribunals and that the Civil Courts when called on to deal with those offences showed their usual tendency to look with much jealousy on the criminal legislation of the church. The cognate offences of heresay and usury are now not dealt with by the Criminal Courts at all, and the third is held only to have been committed when the offender is proved to have committed the sin of Sodom.

And it was this vice in particular which was rendered punishable by the early Christian state, for it was par excellence the vice of the Hellene and the Saracen. By making this vice particularly punishable, therefore, the State not only protected good moral but struck at its enemies. It is this vice, therefore, which attracted severest censures of State and Church, but in mediaeval times all emission other than in vas legitimum was considered unchristian because such emission was supposed ultimately to cause conception of demons.

It will be seen how little help can be extracted from Christian sources in deciding this question. But why is it that most modern states, now freed from the influence of superstition, still make the sin of Sodom punishable. Partly I suppose of the desire of princes to encourage legitimate marriage. Partly because there is an idea, (perhaps erroneous) that the public or tolerated practice of that vice creates a tendency in the citizens of the State, where it is practiced, to adopt an unmanly and morbid method of life and thinking so that a person saturated with those ideas is less useful a member of society, partly because of the danger that men put in authority over other men may use their power for the gratification of their lusts, but principally I suppose because of the danger to young persons, least they be indoctrinted into sexual matters prematurely. But surely all these ill consequences would equally follow in a city where the sin of Gomorrah was tolerated.

It is to be remembered that the Penal Code does not, except in s. 377, render abnormal sexual vice punishable at all. In England indecent assaults are punishable very severely. It is possible that under the Penal Code, some cases might be met by prosecuting the offender for simple assault, but that is a compoundable offence and in any case the patient could in no way be punished, is it to be supposed that the Legislature intended that a Tigellinus should carry on his nefarious profession perhaps vitiating and depraving hundreds of children with perfect immunity?

I doubt not, therefore, that coitus per os is punishable under s. 377, Indian Penal Code.

But we must not allow our disgust at the perpetrators of such acts to blind us to the fact that this vice is less pernicious than the sin of Sodom. It has not been surrounded by the halo of art eloquence and poetry. It cannot be practised on persons who are unwilling. It is not common and can never be so. It cannot produce the physical changes which the other vice produces. It is, therefore, rightly punishable but the punishment need not be so extremely severe as in the other case.

Neither the actual penetration per annus or in a legal sense attempt at such penetration is proved in the present case.

As for the question of kidnapping, the learned Judge has not addressed himself to that question with his usual thoroughness. It is arguable that a child playing in the street and induces to accompany a man for a few minutes is not kidnapped, it would be otherwise no doubt if there were a diversation, e.g., if the child had been intercepted while going to school or sent on some errand. But on the other hand the child next was locked up, and thus wholly put under the dominion of the accused. Thus it would seem there was a kidnapping.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal against the convictions under ss. 367 and 377 and against the sentence under s. 367. But I would reduce the sentence under s. 377 to one of 5 years' rigorous imprisonment. The sentences to be concurrent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants before us were put on their trial on several charges. They were all charged with rioting punishable under s. 147, Indian Penal Code. The appellant Ahed Fakir was charged with having committed culpable homicide not amounting to murder by causing the death of Mohorulla. The other appellants were charged with being constructively guilty of culpable homicide under the provisions of s. 149, Indian Penal Code, and one of the appellants, Baksu Fakir, was charged with committing simple hurt with a dangerous weapon to one Omed Ali. The Jury unanimously found all the appellants guilty of rioting. They found Ahed Fakir guilty of the minor offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt to Mohorulla. On the other charges they returned a verdict of not guilty.

The main facts of the case appear to be as follows. Khos Mahmud and Lal Mahmud alias Tunya are two brothers. Their father

Dost Mahmud died about four years ago leaving some land which was inherited by these two. The land in dispute in the present case is a plot of six cottas of land which according to the evidence of the prosecution was let out in barga to the witness Mohitulla during the year 1922. On the expiration of the barga lease it is said that Mohitulla held over as burgadar and grew kalai on the land in 1923. At the beginning of 1924 on the 2nd January Khos Mahmud executed a kobala Ex. 1 purporting to sell him this six cottas of land. On the 5th January last in the early morning Mohitulla and his step son Monu went to plough the land. When they were ploughing they were resisted by the appellants who succeeded in turning Mohitulla and Monu out of the land. At about 10 A. M., some hours later Mohorulla, the brother of Mohitulla, and others came to the land where the appellants still were and a fight took place in the course of which Mohorulla received injuries which fractured two of his ribs and ruptured his spleen and caused his death. Injuries were also received both by the appellants and several of the witnesses for the prosecution.

The learned Sessions Judge in summing up the case to the Jury has stated the facts and the evidence in our opinion fairly. But he had fallen into a serious error in directing the Jury on an important point of law. He has told the Jury that "if the actual possession of the land by Mohitulla is established then quite irrespective of the question whether Mohitulla acquired a valid title to the land by the kobala Ex. 1 from Khos Mahmud or of the question whether the title to the land rested with Khos Mahmud's brother Lal Mahmud's alias Tunya, the accused persons must held to have formed members of an unlawful assembly if they had assembled with the common object of enforcing the right or supposed right of Tunya to the land in question by means of criminal force or show of criminal force" But in this case having regard to the fact that there were two separate occurrences the question whether Tunya on whose behalf the appellants were acting had title to the land is most material. From the charge as framed it is clear that the occurrence for which the appellants were put on their trial was the second occurrence. The charge of rioting as originally framed by the Committing Magistrate referred to the assault on Mohitulla and others as parts of the unlawful common object. This charge was amended in the Sessions Court by striking of the words "and assaulting Mohitulla and others" and by the substitution of the name of Mohorulla in place of the words "the said Mohitulla". This shows that the appellants were charged with having committed rioting in connection with the second part of the occurrence when Mohorulla was wounded and not with reference to the first part of the occurrence when Mohitulla was driven from the land. With reference to this second part of the occurrence the title of Tunya is most material as it cannot be held that the offence of rioting was then committed with the common object stated in the charge if in fact Tunya had good title to the land. From the evidence of the prosecution witnesses there is some evidence of Tunya's title which should have been put before the Jury and their decision obtained, for instance even in the First Information the place of occurrence is described in two separate sentences as Tunya's land and Ahed Fakir who laid the First Information has also in his deposition before the Sessions Court stated that Mohorulla was beaten and he fell on the land of Lal Mahmud that is, of Tunya. We also find another witness, Jomir Sheikh, stating that the disputed land originally belonged to Tunya. That Tunya originally had some interest in the land is not disputed and there is no clear evidence that he parted with this interest. The deed of sale to Mohitulla was executed by Khos Mahmud alone and purports to sell the whole of six cottas as Khos Mahmud's property. It must, therefore, be said that the case put up on behalf of the appellants that Lal Mahmud alias Tunya was the real owner of the land was supported by some evidence before the Sessions Court and there should have been a decision on that point. If it had been held that Tunya's title to the land has been made out it cannot be said that during the second part of the occurrence the appellants were acting with the common object set out in the charge, namely, of taking forcible possession of the land in possession of Mohitulla. By 10 o' clock on the 5th January the appellants were already in possession of the land in dispute since they had turned out Mohitulla and his step son in the early hours of that morning. If subsequently to the forcible possession which they then obtained they were holding the possession on behalf of Tunya in whom the legal right to possession was vested it can not be said that the complainant's party had any right to forcibly eject them when they returned with force for that purpose. We must hold that this misdirection as to the necessity of deciding the title is a material one which has in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

There remains the conviction of Ahed Fakir under s. 325, Indian Penal Code. As regards this we can see no reason for reversing the verdict of the Jury. As we have already said the evidence has been fairly put to the Jury on the important facts. The only important point of non-direction to which our attention has been drawn is as to the statement made by Mohorulla. It would appear that Mohitulla when he gave evidence before the investigating Sub-Inspector stated that Mohorulla had told him that Ketu Fakir with Manik Fakir had struck him on the hand with lathis and did not say that Mohorulla had told him that Ahed and Zahed struck him on the head with lathis. We do not think that this non-direction is of material importance. The important point was not who struck Mohorulla on the head but who struck the blow on the abdomen which fractured his ribs and ruptured his spleen. As regards this particular point the evidence appears to be one sided, and we cannot hold that the omission to draw specific attention by the Judge to the above mentioned discrepancy has led to any mis-carriage of justice. We do not think that it will serve any useful purpose to order a re-trial on the charge of rioting. We set aside the conviction and sentence of all the six appellants on the charge of rioting punishable under s. 147, Indian Penal Code. We uphold the conviction of Ahed Fakir under s. 325, Indian Penal Code, and the sentence of five years, rigorous imprisonment passed under that section.

The appellants other than Ahed Fakir will now be discharged from their bail bonds if they are on bail or they should be released if they are in Jail.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION FOR REVISION No. 280 OF 1924.

September 17, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Marten and Mr. Justice Fawcett.

In re SHRIRAM SHAMBHUDAYAL—ACCUSED—APPLICANT.

Extradition Act (XV of 1903), ss. 10 (4), 23—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 54 (7), 497—Bombay City Police Act (IV of 1902), s. 33 (g)—Arrest without warrant—Detention for purposes of extradition—Magistrate, jurisdiction of, to entertain application for bail.

Where a person is arrested in pursuance of the provisions of s. 54 (7) of the Cr. P. C. or under s. 33 (g) of the Bombay City Police Act, without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant, and is detained under the provisions of s. 23 of the Extradition Act, the Magistrate under whose orders he is detained has jurisdiction to entertain an application for his bail. [p. 101, col. 1.]

Per Fawcett, J.—Section 23 of the Extradition Act covers the case of an arrest under s. 33 (g) of the Bombay City Police Act. [p. 101, col. 2.]

Criminal application against an order of the Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. P. N. Godinho, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.

Marten, J.—The sole point before us is whether the learned Magistrate was right in thinking that the application of the accused for bail could not be entertained by him as he was "directed to retain the accused in custody pending the extradition proceedings as per Ex. A." The proceedings in question against the accused are under the Indian Extradition Act, XV of 1903, in respect of an alleged criminal breach of trust committed in the State of Indore. With the facts of that case we are not now concerned, and many of the allegations in the petition before us are for present purposes wholly irrelevant.

It is said that the accused has been arrested without an order from the Magistrate and without a warrant in pursuance of the provisions of s. 54 (7) of the Cr. P. C. Consequently s. 23 of the Indian Extradition Act, 1903 applies under which such a person "may, under the orders of a Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such arrest was made, be detained in the same manner and subject to the same restrictions as a person arrested on a warrant issued by such Magistrate under s. 10." Then if one turns to s. 10, it gives power to a Magistrate to issue a warrant of arrest in certain cases, and then enacts in sub-s. (4) that "in the case of a person arrested or detained under this section, the provisions of the Cr. P. C. for the time being in force relating to bail shall apply in the same manner as if such person were accused of committing in British India the offence with which he is charged." In other words ss. 23 and 10 (4) enable the Magistrate to grant bail.

It is accordingly important to bear in mind that this is not a case under s. 3 where a requisition has been made to the Government of India or to any Local Government by the Government of any Foreign State for the surrender of a fugitive criminal of that State. In such a case s. 3, sub-s. (5), provides for bail, "if the Magistrate is of opinion that a prima facie case is not made out in support of the requisition, or if the case is one which is bailable under the provisions of the Cr. P. C."

The learned Magistrate appears to have been of opinion that because the telegrams or letters from the District Magistrate of Indore asked him to detain the accused in custody, therefore, he could not entertain any application for bail. But we think having regard to the sections which I have just alluded to, and in particular to s. 10 (4), that the learned Magistrate had jurisdiction to entertain an application for bail.

Accordingly we think that the proper course is to remit the application for bail to the learned Magistrate with the above intimation of our opinion as to his legal powers. It will to then for him to consider the application for bail on its merits.

The matter being urgent we will direct the Registrar to forward the papers to the Magistrate with all convenient speed and if possible to-day.

Fawcett, J.—I concur. I would only add that, as the petitioner was arrested in the City of Bombay, it may be said that he was not arrested in pursuance of the provisions of s. 54, cl. (7) of the Cr. P. C. of 1898 within the meaning of s. 23 of the Indian Extradition Act, XV of 1903. Under s. 1 of the Cr. P. C, that particular s. 54 does not extend to the Police in the town of Bombay. The accused was, therefore, really arrested without a warrant in pursuance of the powers given by s. 33, cl. (g) of the Bombay City Police Act, 1902. That section reproduces practically word for word the provisions of s. 54, and cl. (g) that I have referred to is exactly in the same words as cl. (7) of s. 54 of the Code.

It is probable that the fact of s. 54 of the Code not applying to the town of Bombay was overlooked by the Legistature when the Indian Extradition Act, XV of 1903 was passed. And under the general rule of interpreting a Statute when possible, so as to give effect to its intent and spirit, I think we are clearly justified in holding that s. 23 of the Indian Extradition Act covers the case of an arrest under s. 33, cl. (g), of the Bombay City Police Act.

NATHA SINGH—CONVICT—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal case— Weakness of defence.

A conviction must stand or fall on the strength of the prosecution and not on the weakness of the defence. [p. 102, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Lahore, dated the 24th June 1924.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—At about sunset on the 20th November 1923, an occurrence took place which resulted in Ishar Singh son of Jwala Singh and Ladha Singh son of Kharak Singh receiving injuries to which Ladha Singh succumbed on the 7th December 1923. The injury he received was a blow on the head with a sharp cutting instrument, such as a takwa, which cut right through his skull into his brain. As a result of the Police investigation that followed Natha Singh, Kartar Singh and Hazara Singh were placed before a Magistrate charged under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, in connection with the death of Ladha Singh, and under s. 307, Indian Penal Code, in regard to the injuries inflicted on Ishar Singh. All three were committed to the Sessions for trial under those sections. This trial resulted in the acquittal of Kartar Singh and Hazara Singh on both charges, and in the conviction of Natha Singh on the charge of having murdered Ladha Singh while he has been acquitted of the attempt to murder Ishar Singh. He has preferred an appeal to this Court, and Dr. Nand Lal, on his behalf, has, at great length, criticised the evidence on the record as well as the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge.

The judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is a very detailed one and gives the stories told by the prosecution and the defence at much length, but he has been guilty of falling into one or two minor inconsistencies which have given the learned Counsel an opportunity of claiming that the learned Sessions Judge was inclined to vacillate in his opinion. It is not necessary to discuss the entire evidence on the record as the details are contained in the judgment under appeal.

The story for the prosecution is, briefly, that Ishar Singh, who is a distant collateral of one Sant Singh, had assisted Sant Singh by coming with him to Lahore where he lodged a charge against the appellant and two or three others of having stolen his (Santa Singh's) cattle. It is said that Ishar Singh's interference in this matter was strongly resented by Natha Singh and his friends and relatives and, on the day in question, while Ishar Singh and Ladha Singh were sitting in front of the former's house, or on its threshold, the appellant with Kartar Singh, Hazara Singh and one Atma Singh, who has absconded, suddenly appeared in the lane and seeing Ishar Singh abused him for having sided with Sant Singh as he had done. Ishar Singh returned the abuse whereupon Atma Singh struck him with a takwa that he was armed with. Ladha Singh is said to have remonstrated and to have attempted to intervene whereupon the appellant struck him a violent blow on the head with a takwa knocking him down, and then all the others proceeded to beat Ishar Singh but on the arrival of the people left him and went away. This story is supported in all main particulars by Ishar Singh, Harnam Singh, son of Sant Singh, Ram Singh and Labh Singh, who claim to have witnessed the occurrence, while Kishan Singh (P. W. No. 7) arrived immediately after the attack had ended. Kesar Singh, brother of Ishar Singh, is said to have made a report of the occurrence at the Punitive Police Post in the village, Her. This report was entered at about 9 P. M., or a little after.

The defence is of two-fold nature, firstly, Natha Singh claims that he was not in the village at all, and, secondly, a story has been set up, supported by four witnesses, to the effect that a fight took place between Ladha Singh and his friends on one side and Ishar Singh and his friends on the other, that Ladha Singh had been struck by Ishar Singh who had in his turn been struck by Labh Singh, prosecution witness, that this fight had taken place in front of the dharamsala and not in front of Ishar Singh's house; and that the cause of it was that Ladha Singh resented Ishar Singh leaving his cart in the lane. It is then asserted that the parties conspired together and decided to falsely name Natha Singh and his friends owing to the ill-feeling between Sant Singh and the appellant.

Now, so far as the alibi is concerned there is only one witness whose story, even if true, is insufficient to prove that the appellant was not in the village at sunset on that day.

The conviction must stand or fall on the strength of the prosecution and not on the weakness of the defence. As Dr. Nand Lal, has, however, deemed it necessary to lay very considerable stress on the defence story of how the occurrence took place it is necessary to deal with it, but it will only be dealt with briefly as the learned Sessions Judge, before whom the same line of argument was taken, has given excellent reasons for discrediting the defence story. The witnesses in support of this story are four in number, D. W. No. 2, Kartar Singh, D. W. No. 3, Gurdit Singh, and D. W. No. 4, Surain Singh, are all admittedly more or less interested in Natha Singh. Kartar Singh is his first cousin, Gurdit Singh cultivates land belonging to Natha Singh's uncle while Surain Singh has also held land from the family. Now all these three witnesses agree in saying that the fight took place in front of the dharamsala and that Ishar Singh struck Ladha Singh while Labh Singh struck Ishar Singh. None of these three, however, thought it necessary to make any statement before the Police and it is at the Trial in the Court of Sessions that this story is for the first time advanced by them. The fourth witness, D. W. No. 1 Nihal Singh, is in no way related to the appellant, but, although he says that the fight took place in front of the dharamsala at about sunset, he admits that he did not go to the Police Post, but has sworn that he told the Head Constable that evening and on the following day made his statement to the Superintendent of Police. The Head Constable had sworn that the story told by these four witnesses was never hinted at during the Police proceedings in his presence, and we agree with the learned Sessions Judge in thinking that had Nihal Singh made the statement before the Superintendent of Police, which he claims to have made, that statement would have been recorded and enquired into. We, therefore, find ourselves in complete agreement with the view taken of this evidence by the learned Sessions Judge which followed the unanimous opinion of the Assessors, and would note that no real explanation or account has been given of how and when the conspiracy took place.

It remains to be seen whether the evidence for the prosecution is sufficient. This has been attacked on various grounds, mainly on the ground of relationship, but great stress has also been laid on the fact that although this occurrence is said to have taken place about sunset, (which appears to have been at about 5-30 P. M. on the day in question) the Police were not informed till at least 9 P. M. This matter has not been lost sight of by the learned Sessions Judge who has come to the conclusion that although there was some delay, the delay was explicable and attributable to the "dilatory ways of village people in this country." Now, it has to be borne in mind that two persons were injured, Ladha Singh being rendered unconscious. The first thing that the friends and relatives of these two persons would do would be to ascertain the extent of the injuries received by them and to endeavour to relieve their suffering as much as possible. In these circumstances it is not a matter of great surprise to find that the Police were not informed of this occurrence for about three hours after it had taken place and we, therefore, agree with the learned Sessions Judge in thinking that the delay in making the report at the Police Post does not necessarily, in the present case, render the testimony of the eye-witnesses untrue.

Again the relationship between the witnesses and Ishar Singh is not a very near one and there appears to be no reason whatever to think that there was any occasion for any collaboration on the part of the witnesses nor we think that any attempt was made to concoct a false case. The story put up by the defence is that Labh Singh caused injuries to Ishar Singh and in these circumstances it is difficult to believe that Labh Singh would have been made a witness instead of an accused. In our judgment the story told by the prosecution is substantially correct. The appellant with others taunted Ishar Singh with having assisted Sant Singh. Ishar Singh returned the taunt with abuse and was in turn struck by one of the appellant's party. Upon this Ladha Singh, a wholly innocent individual, attempted to intervene to prevent further harm being done and was put out of action by the appellant by being struck with what must be regarded as a lethal weapon.

Dr. Nand Lal cited several authorities and urged that in the circumstances of the case the offence was not one under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, and in fact that no offence had been committed at all. We, however, are unable to see the bearing of the authorities cited and find ourselves in complete agreement with the learned Sessions Judge, in fact we may say that we are prepared to accept the unanimous view of the Assessors and agree with them in thinking that the intention of Ishar Singh's assailants was to kill him. We, therefore, hold that Natha Singh has been rightly convicted of murder, and dismiss his appeal.

In re SAHORALI MOLLA—APPELLANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 360—Deposition read over by witness himself and admitted correct—Section, whether complied with.

The fact that the deposition of a witness is read over by the witness himself and is admitted by him to be correct, does not amount to sufficient compliance with the provisions of s. 360 of the Cr. P. C.

Mr. B. M. Sen and Babu Anil Chandra Roy Chowdhury, for the Appellant.

Mr. Khondkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Sahorali Molla was tried by the Additional Sessions Judge of Faridpur with the aid of a Jury on a charge under s. 376, Indian Penal Code. The Jury brought in a verdict of guilty in proportion to 4: 1 and the learned Judge not finding sufficient reason to disregard the verdict of the majority of the Jury agreed with and accepted it, and convicted the appellant under s. 376, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for four years and to pay a fine of Rs 25 in default to undergo additional rigorous imprisonment for three months. Against this conviction and sentence the appellant has preferred this appeal.

Of the grounds urged in support of the appeal it is necessary to mention only one, namely, the one relating to the non-compliance of the provisions of s. 360, Cr. P. C. in respect of one of the prosecution witnesses, namely, No. 10 Satis Chandra Sarkar. It is alleged and it also appears to be a fact that the deposition of this witness was read over by the witness himself and he admitted it to be correct. It has been held by this Court that this is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of s. 360, Cr. P. C. The conviction of and the sentence passed on the appellant must, therefore, be set aside.

The question now arises as to whether we should direct a re-trial of the case. Having regard to the fact that the evidence of the woman is the only evidence in respect of the offence and the corroborative evidence that has been adduced is not of such a character as can be relied upon with any degree of certainty. We think that no useful purpose will be served by a re-trial of this case.

The appellant will, therefore, be acquitted and released.

Appeal allowed;
Conviction set aside.

Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901), ss. 131, 150—Notice to occupier to put land in sanitary condition—Occupier, liability of—Disobedience—Landlord, responsibility of, whether can be pleaded in defence.

Where a notice is served on the occupier of a plot of land under s. 131 of the Bombay District Municipal Act calling upon him to put the plot in a sanitary condition, as provided by the rules of the Municipality, and the notice is disobeyed, it is not open to the occupier to plead that as between himself and the landlord, it was the latter's duty to comply with the notice. [p. 105, col. 1.]

Application to revise the conviction and sentence by the Bench Magistrates, Karachi, dated the 30th September 1924.

Mr. Gopaldas N. Lalla, for the Applicant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Haji Umer is a tenant of a certain plot of land situate within the Municipal limits of Karachi, the owner of that land is one Fazul Ellahie. The tenant used to keep cows on it and the Municipality of Karachi has apparently passed some bye-laws requiring that the ground on which the cows are kept should be provided with a certain drainage system and pavement. This particular plot of land was not so provided. Accordingly notices were issued under s. 131 of the Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901) directing the applicant to clear off the cows or otherwise put the land in a proper state. This notice was issued both to the landlord and the tenant. Neither of them complied therewith and the Municipality thereupon took proceedings. This matter came up for trial under s. 131 which imposes upon the recusant a fine of Rs. 25 forthwith and a continuing fine of Rs. 5 a diem in case of failure to comply. The Magistrate recorded a plea of guilty in the case of the tenant and proceeded to fine him Rs. 15.

It is urged that the plea of guilty was a mistake but it is not possible to go beyond the record. But however that may be, the case of Haji Umer seems to be that he never intended to plead that he was liable to be punished. What he meant by his plea was that it is true that the land is in a dirty condition and that it is true that notice had been given to him to keep the stables clean but it was not his business to clean it but that of the owner. This certainly would have amounted to a plea of not guilty in law but it would appear that this contention if proved would have been wholly irrelevant. Even if he had established that there had been an agreement between himself and the owner that will in no way exempt him from the penalty imposed under s. 131 or under s. 150. The Municipal Act is particularly careful to render all such enquiries unnecessary and it is obviously impossible to carry on any sort of Municipal Administration if it were open to the actual occupier of the premises to say that not he but his landlord was the person who is reponsible for the nuisance. If the occupier is not inclined to do anything his remedy is clear that is to leave the premises. He cannot be allowed to say that although the Municipality has declared the land in a noxious condition still he is entitled to go on keeping it in a noxious conditin until the Municipality has traced the owner of the land and until all disputes pending between the owner and the occupier have been decided. Therefore, it is useless for the occupier to plead in Court that not he but some one else is responsible under s. 131. Therefore, it seems to us that the defence of Haji Umer is not a valid defence in law. Whether or not Fazul Ellahie ought to have been punished also or whether it is possible to compel Fazul Ellahie by appropriate means to drain this plot of land, we are not prepared to say, because, that is an investigation which the Magistrates were by no means, bound to enter into. All that we should find under s. 131 is whether due notice has been given to the present accused as the occupier and whether he had complied with it. As it is proved that that latter condition does not exist, he was right ly convicted.

We, therefore, dismiss this application.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 330 OF 1924.

THEETHARAPPA PILLAI—COUNTER-PETITIONER—PETITIONER

MEENAKSHI AMMAL—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488 (3) — Maintenance order—Application for execution—Objection, whether can be considered—"Sufficient cause," meaning of.

The language of cl. (3) of s. 488 of the Cr. P. C. contemplates a person, against whom an order for maintenance has been made, coming into Court when execution of the order is applied for and showing cause why the order should not be executed. The Court is then bound to consider the sufficiency of the cause alleged by him and to refuse execution of the order if it is satisfied that the cause is sufficient and to grant execution if it is not so satisfied. [p. 106, col. 1.]

The Legislature has deliberately used the expression "sufficient cause" in cl. (3) of s. 488 of the Cr. P. C., intending that the Magistrate before whom the matter comes up should be in a position to use his judicial discretion having regard to all the circumstances and that such judicial discretion should not be fettered or limited by any definite rules. The expression is wide enough to include all possible considerations that may be submitted to the Magistrate in such circumstances. [ibid.]

Petition, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tuticorin, in M. C. No. 3 of 1924.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—The order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tuticorin dated 23rd March 1924 directing the execution of the order for maintenance was clearly wrong and should be set aside. The counter-petitioner before the Magistrate who is the petitioner before me filed a counter-petition presumably under sub-cl. 3 to s. 488 of the Cr. P. C. setting out certain grounds on which he contended that the order should not be executed. The words in sub-cl. 3 of the section as now amended are "If any person so ordered fails without sufficient cause to comply with the order, etc." These words clearly contemplate a counter-petitioner in such circumstances coming into Court when execution of the order is applied for and showing cause why it should not be executed. The Court is then bound to consider the sufficiency of the cause alleged by the counter-petitioner and to refuse the execution if the Court should be satisfied that the cause is sufficient and to grant execution if the Court is not satisfied with the cause alleged. It is contended by the learned Vakil for the respondent that having regard to the terms of sub-cl. (5) to s. 488 of the Cr. P. C. it is not open to any counter-petitioner who has not had the order against him set aside under that sub-clause to come under sub-cl. (3) and seek to show any sufficient cause against the execution of the order. But it seems to me that such a construction would involve the Court not giving effect to the clear words contained in sub-cl. (3), namely, "failing without sufficient cause." I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate erred in summarily ordering execution without considering the grounds set out in the counter-petition. I do not want to prejudice either party by any expression of opinion with regard to what would or would not constitute sufficient grounds within the meaning of sub-cl. (3) of the section. The Legislature has deliberately used the expression "sufficient cause" obviously intending that the Magistrate before whom the matter comes up should be in a position to use his judicial discretion having regard to all the circumstances and that such judicial discretion should not be fettered or limited by any definite rules. The learned Vakil for the respondent submitted that if after an order under the section had been made and when execution of the order is sought by the petitioner, the counter-petitioner would not be entitled to come to the Magistrate and say that he was then willing to take back the petitioner and maintain her and contend that that would be sufficient cause within the meaning of sub-cl. (3). But as I have already observed whether in the circumstances of the particular case such a contention would or would not be sufficient cause must be determined judicially by the Magistrate himself. If, for instance, the original order had been made on the ground of the refusal of the counter-petitioner to maintain the petitioner, then the offer of the counter-petitioner to maintain the petitioner may be sfficient cause; but if the original order for maintenance had been made in spite of the offer of the counter-petitioner to maintain her then obviously the mere offer of the counter-petitioner to maintain her would not in the circumstances be a sufficient cause. I have referred to these matters only by way of illusrtation. The expression "sufficient cause" is wide enough to include all possible considerations that may be submitted to the Magistrate in such circumstances.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate directing the execution of the order and I direct that the application for execution and the counter-petition be taken on the file and be heard and disposed of by the Magistrate in the light of the observations I have made.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 699 OF 1924.

January 20, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir Jwala Prasad, KT.

MOHAMMAD NASIRUDDIN—

ACCUSED—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 342—Examination of accused, mode of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 456—House breaking—Trespass with intention to force illicit intrigue on woman—Offence.

It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to the nature of the examination of an accused person under s. 342 of the Cr. P. C. It is not necessary, nor is it desirable, to examine the accused in great deal or to force him to disclose his defence so as to enable the prosecution to take advantage of it when the witnesses for the accused are examined. [p. 108, col. 2; p. 109, col. 1.]

Where the act with which the accused is charged is of a simple nature and the accused is examined before the charge is framed, and, after the charge has been framed and prosecution witnesses have been further cross-examined, he is asked whether he has any further statement to make and he replies in the negative, it cannot be said that the requirements of s. 342 of the Cr. P. C. have not been complied with. [p. 108, cols. 1 & 2.]

Accused broke the lock of a room in which certain women of the family of the complainant were sleeping and introduced his head into the room. The object of the accused was found to be to force an intrigue upon one of the women sleeping in the room:

Held, that the accused was guilty of an offence under s. 456 of the Penal Code. [p. 109, col. 1.]

(Case-law referred to.)

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Manbhum, dated the 21st

November 1924, upholding that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Sambalpur, dated the 29th September 1924.

Messrs. C. M. Agarwala and M. N. Pal, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted under s. 456, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment. The conviction has been upheld by the Sessions Judge of Manbhum.

The petitioner is a Ticket Collector at Jharsuguda Railway Station and takes his food in the kitchen of the Refreshment Room. Rammurti, a Madrasi gentleman, has recently gone to Jharsuguda as a Refreshment Room Clerk. He occupies a quarter in the Railway godown consisting of a room the door of which opens on to the closed lattice work verandah which itself has a door. Rammurti's household consists of his mother, a woman of about 50 years, and his nieces aged about 19 and 14, of whom the former is a widow and the latter a married woman. On the night of the occurrence the ladies slept in the house and Rammurti on the verandah of the Railway Mail Service Office just in front of his quarter and opposite to it. He locked the door of the verandah on the outside and kept the key with himself. About 1-30 A. M. on the night of the 13th July the mother of the complainant, Rammurti, called the elder Sundaramma, being aroused by the cackling of the fowls in the kitchen of the Refreshment Room, heard stones thrown against the door of the room in which the ladies slept. Shortly, afterwards she saw a man thrust his head within the door of the room and throw small stones at her grand-daughters. The junior Sundaramma woke up, nudged her grandmother and both of them recognized the petitioner and cried out to Rammurti. Rammurti ran up to the verandah and recognized the petitioner running away. The door of the verandah was found open and stones and cinders were found here and there in the room and some on the bed of the younger woman. Rammurti forthwith went to the Assistant Station Master on duty who went with the Yard-Foreman and a Constable to the complainant's quarters, found the brass lock with which Rammurti had closed the door of the verandah lying broken on the ground outside and the state of the apartments as described above. An information was lodged by Rammurti to the Police next morning, and after investigation the accused was sent up.

The Courts below have found the prosecution story as stated above to be true and established by evidence in the case.

Mr. Agarwala on behalf of the petitioner takes an exception to the validity of the trial upon the ground that the Magistrate failed to comply with the provisions of s. 342, Cr. P. C. It is not denied that the accused was, as a matter of fact, examined by the Magistrate on the 25th August 1924 after the close of the prosecution case and before he was called upon to enter into his defence. The objection is as to the manner of the examination of the accused by the Magistrate. The accused was first examined on the 7th August 1924. On the 25th August he was examined under the latter portion of s. 342 of the Code. The question put to him by the Magistrate was as follows:—"You have heard the further evidence given by the prosecution witnesses in your presence to-day. Have you got to say anything else?" The answer of the accused was "No". In his earlier examination he was asked whether he entered the house of Rammurti by breaking the lock of the door and threw stones at his nieces who were sleeping in the room. His answer was "No". Then he was asked why this case was brought against him. He said that the case was brought against him out of grudge and then he detailed this plea by giving facts and circumstances in his statement. It is said that on the 25th August 1924 after the close of the prosecution case and before the accused was called upon to enter into defence the Magistrate ought to have asked the accused questions upon the evidence in the case that showed the participation of the accused in the offence of which he was charged so as to give him an opportunity to explain those circumstances. The contention is that the Magistrate who heard the evidence of the prosecution must have told the accused on what points he considered the evidence against the accused for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain those circumstances. It is true that at that stage it is imperative upon a Magistrate "to question the accused generally on the case" and the object of this examination is to "enable the accused to explain any circumstance appearing in the evidence against him." This provision in the Code has been the subject of great divergence of opinion. Lately there has been difference of opinion in this Court, vide, Durga Ram v. Emperor (1) and Banamali Kumar v. Emperor (2). Mr. Justice Kulwant Sahay held that the examination of an accused person under the latter part of s. 342 should be a detailed one and the Magistrate ought to let the accused know as to what are the circumstances indicated in the evidence against him for obtaining if possible an explanation of the accused and that the putting of a simple question as to whether the accused had anything to say is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the law. Mr. Justice Foster took a contrary view. The matter has recently been dealt with by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Emperor v. Alimaddin Naskar (3). Newbould, J. held that "a formal question in general terms which gives the accused an opportunity of making a statement of his defence with his own lips is a sufficient compliance with the mandatory provisions of s. 342 of the Cr. P. C., since it enables the accused to explain any circumstance appearing in the evidence against him. To what extent the Court when complying with the mandatory provisions of the section should also exercise its discretionary powers under the other provisions of the section is a different question. The exercise of this discretion must vary with and depend on the circumstances of each particular case but in the majority of cases it is neither necessary nor desirable that there should be any detailed questioning of the accused." Mukerji, J., held that "in questioning the accused under s. 342, Cr. P. C., the Court must point out to the accused the salient points appearing in the evidence against him in a succinct form and he must be asked to explain them if he wishes to do so. If on a general question as to whether he wishes to say anything being put the accused answers in the negative it will be no use asking him any further questions."

I would invite attention to the difference in the wording of the first and the second portion of s. 342, the former being discretionary and the latter mandatory. As the prosecution case goes on the first portion gives power to the Court to put any question to the accused that he thinks necessary in order to obtain an explanation of any circumstance appearing in the evidence against the accused. The provision says that the Court may "put such questions to him (accused) as the Court considers necessary." After the close of the prosecution case the mandatory portion of the section requires the Magistrate to "question him (the accused) generally on the case," the object being the same as in the case of an examination under the first portion of the section, namely, to enable the accused to explain any circumstance appearing in the evidence against him. It depends upon the circumstance of each case what must be the nature of the question put by the Court; but it would be a sufficient compliance with the provision of the Code if the Court gives to the accused an opportunity by questioning him generally on the case to explain the circumstances appearing in the case against him. In this connection the examination of the accused, if any, under the first portion of the section, may usefully be looked into. In the present case the accused was in his earlier examination told the case against him as disclosed in the evidence of the prosecution and that case was that on the night of the 13th July 1924 he entered into the house of Rammurti by breaking the lock attached to the door and threw stones at his nieces who were sleeping in the room. On the 7th of August he was asked whether he committed the act or not, and he denied it. He was then asked as to why the case was brought against him and he gave his reasons for it. After this four prosecution witnesses were cross-examined and discharged, and then the accused was asked whether upon hearing the evidence given that day he had anything to say. The witnesses for the prosecution, as observed above, were cross-examined on behalf of the accused, and thus he was fully aware that he had to explain the circumstances brought out by the prosecution evidence against him. The Magistrate then gave him an opportunity, by putting questions generally upon the case under the latter portion of s. 342, to explain these circumstances against him and to disclose his own defence. His answer was in the negative. In the circumstances of the present case I do not think the provision in the latter portion of s. 342 was not complied with. It is not necessary nor is it desirable to examine the accused in great detail or to force him to disclose his defence so as to enable the prosecution to take advantage of it when the witnesses for the accused are examined. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to the nature of the examination of an accused under s. 342 of the Code. I, therefore, overrule the contention of the learned Counsel that the trial was vitiated by not properly complying with the requirements of s. 342 of the Code.

The next contention is that the conviction under s. 456, Indian Penal Code, is bad, inasmuch as the intention of the accused has not been found to be to commit any offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of the house in question. Reference has been made to the case of Ambika Charan Sarkar v. Emperor (4). In that case the finding was that the intention of the accused in entering the house of the complainant was to carry on an intrigue with the complainant's widowed sister-in-law. It was held that the entry is not an offence, nor was the intention to cause any annoyance to the occupants of the house rather it was to secretly carry on an intrigue without the knowledge of the persons in the house. The conviction was set aside. The case of Balmukand Ram v. Ghansamram (5) was distinguished in that case upon the ground that the intention of the accused in that case was to commit adultery with the wife of the complainant which in itself was an offence punishable under the Code. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Rayapadayachi (6), the finding was that the accused entered the house to have sexual intercourse with the complainant's unmarried sister and it was held that the accused could not be convicted under s. 456, Indian Penal Code. This case was followed in the Full Bench case of Vullapa v. Bheema Row (7), where it was held that an offence under s. 441, Indian Penal Code, is committed only when the trespass is with one of the intents specified in that section and the proof that the trespass committed with some other object was known to the accused to be likely or was certain to cause insult, or annoyance, is insufficient to sustain a conviction under s. 448, Indian Penal Code. Undoubtedly in order to constitute criminal trespass under s. 441, Indian Penal Code, the entry into the house or property in the possession of another must be with intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property, and in order to sustain a conviction under s. 456 it must be proved that there was in the first instance criminal trespass as defined in s. 441, Indian Penal Code. Thus, a mere entry into a house occupied by another with intent to carry on an intrigue or to have sexual intercourse with a woman living in that house will not in itself be a criminal trespass. In such a case it is supposed that the entry has been with the consent or connivance of the woman living in the house. However, if she along with other inmates is in possession of the house as in the case of a joint Hindu family, the trespass in the house must cause an insult and annoyance to the other members in the house. If the object is to force an intrigue upon a woman in the house and to have a forcible intercourse with her, the intention of the entry will necessarily be to insult and annoy that woman. In the present case the finding of the Court below is that there was no pre-arrangement between the accused and the junior Sunderamma, or for the matter of that with any other lady in the house. The case stated in the judgments of the Courts below, on the other hand, goes to show that all the ladies in the house, the grand-mother, the widowed Sunderamma and the unmarried girl Rajjo were startled at the bold attempt on the part of the accused to force himself into the house and to throw pebbles at them. The junior Sunderamma is stated to have, when she suddenly woke up at hearing the noise, nudged her grand-mother. Therefore, in the present case the intention was not to carry on a peaceful intrigue and intercourse with any of the ladies in the house and with the consent or convenience of any of them but the intention of the accused was to commit a criminal trespass into the house and an indecent and unjustifiable trespass upon the person of the occupants of the house. The concurrent finding of the Courts below in the present case makes the authorities cited by the learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioner inapplicable to the present case. This contention must, therefore, also be held to be untenable.

The last submission of Mr. Agarwala is that the punishment in this case is excessive and that it should be reduced. The view taken by the Court below is that the punishment in this case is leniwent and that the Magistrate has erred on the side of leniency. I do not think the accused has any grievance on account of the severity of the sentence. The act committed by him is most reprehensive. Rammurti happened to come to Jharsuguda only recently with several ladies of his family. The outrage attempted upon his household is a heinous offence, and the punishment in the present case is far from being severe.

The application is refused.

CRIMINAL REVISION APPLICATION No. 113 OF 1924.

ALI SHER—APPLICANT

MIR MAHOMED AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 256 (2), 344—"Remaining witnesses," meaning of—"Remaining witnesses" not in attendance—Complainant's right to claim postponement—"Reasonable cause" for demand—Postponement discretionary.

The witnesses whom prosecutor may wish to examine, after the cross-examination and re-examination of prosecution witnesses already examined, are "remaining witnesses" within the meaning of s. 256 (1), Cr. P. C.

If the "remaining witnesses" are not in attendance the complainant has no right to insist on a postponement for their examination.

Even when there is a "reasonable cause," it is discretionary with the Court to postpone or adjourn a case. Therefore, a Magistrate is within his discretion if (being of the opinion that the complainant is unnecessarily wasting time and protracting proceedings) he refuses to postpone a case for the examination of "remaining witnesses."

Application under ss. 435 and 439, Cr. P. C., for revision of an order, dated the 8th March 1924, of the Special First Class Magistrate, Ratodero.

Mr. P. S. Shahani, for the Applicant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C. against the order of the learned Special First Class Magistrate, Ratodero refusing to examine seven more witnesses for the prosecution in a case of bigamy filed by the applicant against opponents before the accused were called upon to enter on their defence.

It appears that the learned Magistrate held an enquiry and committed the accused to the Sessions on a charge of bigamy. Owing to the amendment of the Cr. P. C., the offence of bigmay ceased to be exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions and this Court sent the case back to the Trying Magistrate for disposal. The prosecution witnesses, who had been examined and cross-examined, were then re-called and cross-examined again. The complainant then asked that the evidence of seven prosecution witnesses might be taken.

Mr. Shahani, who appears for the applicant, admits that at the time he made his application, the witnesses were not present but he states that cases are decided in the Magistrate's Courts piece-meal—one or two witnesses being examined and cross-examined at a hearing and then a postponement being granted in order that other cases may be tried. He contends that under s. 256 of the Cr. P. C. the witnesses whom they wished to examine were "remaining witnesses" and that the learned Magistrate was bound to give him an opportunity of examining them. It may here be mentioned that some of the witnesses had, as a matter of fact, been summoned but had not attended. With regard to others an application for witness summonses had been granted.

The learned Special First Class Magistrate in rejecting the application expressed the opinion that the witnesses sought to be examined were not "remaining witnesses" within the meaning of s. 256, Cr. P. C., and stated that if the complainant wanted these witnesses he could have acquainted the Court that they might be called before commitment. He also draws attention to the fact that the Court ordered that three of these witnesses should be summoned after process-fee was paid. This order was passed on 15th of April 1923 and no process-fee was paid for three months. The learned Magistrate was of the opinion that the prosecution wished to prolong the case unnecessarily.

We are of opinion that the learned Magistrate in so far as he expressed the view that the witnesses who were required at that stage could not be regarded as "remaining witnesses" was in error. But it seems to us as these witnesses were not in attendance the complainant had no right to insist on the examination of persons for whose evidence a postponement would have been necessary. In our opinion the circumstances were entirely governed by s. 344 of the Cr. P. C. In the Explanation to that section, it is clear that the fact that the witnesses could give further evidence implicating the accused was a reasonable cause for a remand, but a reasonable cause for remand is not in itself sufficient to satisfy the requirements of s. 344. Even where there is a reasonable cause for remand the section provides that the Court may if it thinks fit by order in writing stating the reasons therefor from time to time postpone or adjourn a case. The view of the learned Magistrate was that the complainant desired to waste time unnecessarily and protract the proceedings. That being so, we are of the opinion that he was fully within his discretion in refusing to pass orders for the attendance an examination of witnesses who were not present.

We, therefore, dismiss this application.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 436—Discharge of accused—Further enquiry, when to be directed—Revision.

A District Magistrate or a Sessions Judge has power to order a further enquiry under s. 436 of the Cr. P. C., even when the Magistrate has recorded all the evidence for the prosecution. [p. 112, col. 1.]

Where a Sessions Judge after going carefully through the evidence comes to the conclusion that the finding of the Magistrate is either perverse or manifestly at variance with the evidence which he had recorded, and makes an order for further enquiry under s. 436 of the Cr. P. C., the order directing a further enquiry is not illegal, improper, and incorrect and cannot be interfered with in revision. [ibid.]

Case-law referred to.

Application for the revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Hardoi, dated the 2nd February 1924, reversing that of the District Magistrate, First Class, Hardoi, dated the 22nd December 1923.

Messrs. Hakim-ud-din and Nazir-ud-din, for the Applicant.

Mr. Hyder Husein, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—This is an application under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C. against an order passed by the learned Sessions Judge of Hardoi under s. 436, Cr. P. C. directing a further enquiry in a case in which Lala Babu Prasad a Magistrate of the First Class, had discharged a person accused of an offence under s. 408, Indian Penal Code.

The case was instituted in the Magistrate's Court by the proprietor of a village against his zilledar. The Magistrate recorded the statements of a number of witnesses, but decided that the prosecution had not been able to make out a case against the accused, which if unrebutted would warrant his conviction. The Sessions Judge went into the evidence in some detail, and concluded that the Magistrate had not given good and sufficient reasons for the discharge of the accused and, therefore, ordered a further enquiry. I am now asked to upset that order on the ground that the Magistrate had recorded all the evidence for the prosecution, that he had come to a finding that was neither perverse, foolish, nor based on incomplete evidence and that the mere fact that the Sessions Judge places a different value on that evidence was not a good ground for directing a further enquiry.

Several decisions have been referred to, both in support of the application and against it. Among the former, reliance has been placed on Emperor v. Udai Raj Singh (1) where a single Judge of the High Court held that s. 437, Cr. P. C. should not be used for the purpose of having a review of proceedings merely because the District Magistrate happened to take a different view of the evidence which was before the Trying Magistrate, remarking. "In my opinion the Trying Magistrate was quite entitled to come to the opinion which he did, and merely because another Court does not agree with that opinion, is no reason to direct the so-called further enquiry." On the other hand, several Bench rulings of different High Courts have been referred to to show that a Revising Court has very wide powers under s. 436, Cr. P. C., (which used to be s. 437 before the amendment of 1923) Queen Empress v. Chotu (2), In the matter of Hari Dass Sanyal (3), Queen Empress v. Balasinnatambi (4), Venkatta Subba Reddi v. Ayyalu Reddi (5) and Mangat Rai v. Emperor (6). For the most part it may be said that these rulings do not go further than to show that the Revising Court has power to order a further enquiry, even when the Subordinate Magistrate has recorded all the evidence for the prosecution. In the present case I am not able to say that the Magistrate's enquiry was cursory or that he passed his order on insufficient materials. I am not even convinced that, if an application against his order had been filed in my Court, when I was sitting as a Sessions Judge, I should have felt compelled to pass an order for further enquiry under s. 436, Cr. P. C. The proceedings, however, have now advanced to a further stage, and I have to consider whether the Sessions Judge's order is any way illegal, incorrect or improper. It is evident that the Sessions Judge after going carefully through the evidence came to the conclusion that the finding of the Magistrate was either perverse, or in all probability wrong or manifestly at variance with the evidence which he had recorded. As this was his considered opinion, I am certainly not prepared to hold that his order directing a further enquiry was illegal, improper or incorrect. I, therefore, dismiss the application.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 526, 528—Transfer application—Procedure.

The High Court will not ordinarily entertain an application for a relief which could equally well be granted by a subordinate Court until recourse has first been had to that Court. It will not, therefore, entertain an application for transfer unless the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge has been moved in the first instance.

Muneshar v. Raghubir, 21 Ind. Cas. 155; 11 A. L. J. 741; 14 Cr. L. J. 555, followed.

Where, however, notices have been issued and the matter has been argued the matter may be dealt with on the merits in order to avoid unnecessary repetition.

Criminal miscellaneous application for transfer.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—There is one grave objection to this application, which is for the transfer of a case pending in the Court of the Magistrate First Class of Hamirpur District to the Court of any other Magistrate in that District. It offends against the rule that this Court will not ordinarily entertain an application for a relief which could equally well be granted by a subordinate Court until recourse has first been had to that Court. This rule has been repeatedly laid down with reference to applications for revision and it was laid down with special reference to applications for transfer by the late Sir George Knox at the conclusion of his judgment in Muneshar v. Raghubir (1). In this case the transfer applied for could be granted by the District Magistrate under s. 528 (2) of the Cr. P. C. Admittedly no application has so far been made to the Magistrate. If this fact had been brought to the notice of the Court at the time when the application was filed I have no doubt that it would have been rejected at the outset.

As notices have now gone and the matter has been argued it is perhaps unnecessary to do now what I should ordinarily do in such a case, namely, to reject the application until such time as the applicant had first applied to the District Magistrate. The reasons given in support of the application are not particularly strong especially in view of the explanation which the Magistrate has submitted, but as only two witnesses have been examined in the case, as the application is not opposed, and as the Magistrate concerned says that he has no objection whatever to the case being transferred, I direct that it be transferred to any other Magistrate to whom the District Magistrate may make it over.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920)—Rules for Conduct of Elections, r. 8 (e)—Electoral roll, correctness of, whether can be questioned by Court holding election enquiry—"Election proceedings," meaning of—"Failure to observe other directions", meaning of—Election petition—Objection that petition does not disclose ground for enquiry, dismissal of—Revision—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115.

Under r. 8 (e) of the Rules for the preparation of electoral rolls prepared under the Madras District Municipalities Act, the electoral roll when finally settled must be taken as final for the purposes of election proceedings. The expression "election proceedings" in the rule includes all proceedings relating to an election until it is finally determined who the candidate is who has been properly elected. The expression thus includes an election enquiry and it is not competent to the Court holding such enquiry to question the correctness of the electoral roll. [p. 114, cols. 1 & 2.]

Palanisami Pillai v. Srinivasarangachariar, 85 Ind. Cas. 322; 47 M. L. J. 795; 20 L. W. 851; (1925) A. I. R. (M.) 160; (1925) M. W. N. 283, followed.

The expression "failure to observe other directions" in r. 8 (e) is not confined to directions contained in the Rules but includes directions contained in the Madras District Municipalities Act as well. [p. 114, col. 2.]

Where an objection is taken to an election petition on the ground that it does not disclose any ground for enquiry, and the objection is disallowed, the order disallowing the objection is open to revision under s. 115 of the C. P. C., inasmuch as if the order is erroneous the lower Court in holding an enquiry would be exercising a jurisdiction not vested in it. [p. 113, col. 2; p. 114, col. 1.]

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswamy Iyar and B. Pocker, for the Petitioners.

Mr. T. S. Viswanatha Iyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are two applications under s. 115 of the C. P. C. to revise the common order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Cochin on two applications put in by the respondents against the petitioners who were declared to have been elected in two wards in the town of Cochin to have their elections set aside. The petitioners objected before the Subordinate Judge that the petitions filed against them did not disclose any grounds on which an enquiry could be held under r. 11 of the Election Enquiry Rules framed by the Governor-in-Council, Madras and published in the Fort St. George Gazette dated the 30th November 1920; and they asked, therefore, that the petitions should be dismissed without any enquiry. The Subordinate Judge, however, pronounced a common order in both cases deciding that the petitions did disclose reasons for going into evidence and for holding an election enquiry. It is against that order that these revision petitions have been filed in this Court.

A preliminary objection has been taken by the learned Vakil for the respondent before me that I should not interfere under s. 115 of the C. P. C., as the order of the Subordinate Judge was an order passed in the course of the election enquiry and that this Court should not interfere with such interlocutory orders. I am not able to support this objection, because it seems to me that if as the learned Vakil for the petitioners argues the election petitions did not disclose any ground for an enquiry, the Subordinate Judge will be exercising a jurisdiction not vested in him by holding such an enquiry and to hold it will simply lead to waste of time of the Court and of the parties. In such a case it seems to me that it is but right and proper that this Court should decide whether the petitions disclose any grounds for holding an enquiry and, if they do not, this Court should say so at once and stop the enquiry at the very outset. The question then which has to be considered is whether these election petitions filed disclose any ground for an election enquiry. Rule 11 of the Rules already referred to says what the circumstances are under which the election of a candidate can be declared to be void. There are three sub-clauses to the rule (a), (b) and (c); and (b) has four sub-divisions. Unless the objections raised in the election petitions can be brought under one or other of these clauses, it is clear that the election petitions should be rejected in limine. The only point taken in the petitions in this case is that the candidates who have been declared elected, were wrongly put upon the electoral roll, because they had not paid their taxes and that one of them was not a resident within the Municipality. It is contended that on account of these objections these candidates should not have been put on the electoral roll. With regard to one of the men these objections were taken before the revising authority after the preliminary electoral roll had been published, but that authority overruled the objections and continued his name on the roll. As regards the two others no objections were taken before the revising authority and their names appeared on the roll as those of fit and proper persons to vote and to stand as candidates for election. Rule 8 (e) of the Rules for the preparation of the electoral rolls makes it quite clear, as the Subordinate Judge himself has noted, that the electoral roll when finally settled must be taken as final for the purposes of election proceedings. It says, "No failure to observe the dates prescribed in these rules or to observe other directions regarding the preparation of the electoral roll shall entitle any one to question the validity and conclusiveness of the registers in election proceedings". To get rid of the effect of this rule which gives finality to the electoral roll it was argued that the word "proceedings" applied only to proceedings taken for election and that as soon as the election was over and an election enquiry was started, it was no longer an election proceeding; in other words it was contended that "election proceedings" do not include an election enquiry at all. This argument was accepted by the Subordinate Judge. But it seems to me it is clearly erroneous. "Election proceedings" include all proceedings relating to an election until it is finally determined who the candidate is who has been properly elected. They thus include an election enquiry. This is the view that has been taken by this Court in a recent case Palanisami Pillai v. Srinivasarangachariar (1) and I respectfully agree with it. It seems to me that to hold otherwise will lead to an absurdity, for there is no object whatsoever in making the electoral roll final for the purpose of election if the whole thing can be re-opened by making it possible for a candidate who has been disappointed to put in a petition and get it decided by a Court whether the electoral roll was a proper roll or not. The very object of making the electoral roll final is to avoid the difficulty of a candidate standing for election who can afterwards be objected to as disqualified on convassing for votes from people who might afterwards be declared to be improper voters. For the purposes of an election, a roll has to be settled and after that is settled, it must be taken as settled for all purposes of the election up to the very end, till it is finally declared who the properly elected candidate is.

It was attempted to be argued that r. 8 (e) would not apply to a case where a candidate has failed to pay his taxes, because it was said that the rule, which lays down that the name of a person who has not paid taxes shall not be included in the electoral roll, is a provision in the Act itself in s. 46, and that r. 8 (e) does not deal with objections based on the provisions of the Act. There is, however, nothing in the wording of r. 8 (e) to exclude any such objection. "Failure to observe other directions" mentioned in it, is not confined to directions in the rules but include directions in the Act as well.

It is also urged before me that the allegations in the petitions would come within cl. (2) of r. 11 of the Rules of 30th

(1) 85 Ind. Cas. 322; 47 M. L. J. 795; 20 L. W. 851; (1925) A. I. R. (M.) 160; (1925) M. W. N. 283.

November 1920. That clause says "If in the opinion of the Judge the returned candidate, his agent, or any other person with the connivance of such candidate or agent, has committed or abetted the commission of any one of the offences described in ss. 52 to 58 of the Madras District Municipalities Act, the election of the returned candidate shall be void". I have looked carefully into the allegations in the petition filed by the objectors in these two cases but I can find none thereof any offence having been committed under s. 52 by the candidates or their agents. As regards the allegation that the names of candidates were improperly retained on the rolls even though taxes were not paid, the objection is to the conduct of the revising authority and of the Municipal Chairman. It is not an allegation against the candidate of having committed any offence. It is not even an allegation against the Chairman or the revising authority which would come under s. 52; but even if it did, an allegation against the Chairman or the revising authority would not affect the candidate under r. 11 (a). So far as I can see, there is no allegation in the petitions filed by the objectors in the lower Court which requires an enquiry to be held; the petitions should, therefore, have been dismissed.

I allow the revision petitions and dismiss the election petitions with costs in this and the lower Courts.

Vakil's fee Rs. 50 in each petition.

C. P. Tenancy Act (I of 1920), ss. 12, 13, 35—Occupancy holding—Relinquishment by tenant in favour of co-sharer, effect of—Lambardar, right of, to let out holding—Abandonment, what amounts to—Notice—Publication—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 43, applicability of, in case of doubtful title.

A relinquishment of his holding by a tenant in favour of a co-sharer for a private debt due to him is a transfer and not a surrender, and is governed by the provisions of s. 12 of the C. P. Tenancy Act. Such a transfer is liable to be set aside by the lambardar under s. 13 of the Act, and until steps are taken to have the transfer set aside under that section the lambardar has no right to let out the holding to a third person. [p. 116, col. 1.]

Ramdayal v. Gulabia Bai, 4 N. L. R. 120, relied on.

When a tenant transfers his occupancy holding and abandons possession of the same he must be taken to have abandoned his holding. But the landlord is not entitled to enter on the holding unless he files a notice in the office of the Tahsildar, under s. 35 of the C. P. Tenancy Act, stating his intention to treat the holding as abandoned and such a notice is duly published under the section. [p. 116, col 2.]

A lease by a lambardar of a holding which is in the actual possession of a tenant, and on which the lambardar has no present right to enter, is absolutely illegal and void. [ibid.]

Semble.—Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot operate on a doubtful title.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that the plaintiff got a lease of the land in dispute from defendant No. 2, the lambardar, in February 1920. The land at that time was in possession of Musammat Harku as tenant, but in June 1920 she transferred it to defendant No. 1 who is a co-sharer in the village. Plaintiff sued for possession of the land, but his suit has been dismissed by both the Courts below. Plaintiff makes this second appeal.

It is admitted that the transfer to a co-sharer may not amount to a surrender, but it is contended that the tenant having abandoned the land the defendant No. 2 got the right to dispose of it as lambardar, and this right is affected under s. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act by the lease already granted to plaintiff by the lambardar.

The question, therefore, in this appeal is whether on a tenant transferring his right to a co-sharer the lambardar gets the right to deal with the land as he likes.

It has been observed by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff's case originally was that the original tenant died without heirs and the land lapsed to the proprietary body and was let to plaintiff by the lambardar. He entirely ignored the existence of Musammat Harku, the heir of the original tenant Sego. When her existence was pleaded by defendant No. 1, the plaintiff alleged she had surrendered the land to the lambardar, a point which has been found against him by the Courts below.

Under the ruling in Ramdayal v. Gulabia Bai (1) the relinquishment by Harku in favour of defendant No. 1, a co-sharer, for a private debt due to him, is a transfer and not a surrender. The point whether on this transfer being made the lambardar had authority to deal with the land as if it had been surrendered to him, is one which has not as yet been the subject of any decision.

The transaction between defendant No. 1 and Harku not being a surrender is governed by s. 12 of the Tenancy Act, and is against those provisions, and is liable to be set aside by the lambardar under s. 13 of the Act. But it seems to me that there would be no object in requiring the intervention of a Revenue Officer under s. 13 if the landlord were at liberty to ignore the transfer without taking the steps required by that section. That section also contemplates the avoidance of the illegal transfer by the tenant's heirs.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the lambardar in face of the provisions of s. 13 of the Tenancy Act cannot simply ignore the transfer. Therefore as there was no surrender and no steps have been taken under s. 13 of the Tenancy Act to set aside the transfer, the landlord has no right under either of those provisions to let the land.

Next it is contended that the transfer should be regarded as equivalent to abandonment and that the case should be remanded for the purpose of a finding whether Musammat Harku had abandoned the land or not. This is not a plea taken in the Courts below and there is no issue on it.

It is contended on behalf of respondents that under s. 35 of the Tenancy Act it must be shown that not only has the tenant ceased to cultivate the holding but that she has allowed one year's rent to fall into arrears, and has left the village. It is admitted that defendant No. 1 is in possession of the land and it has been held by the Calcutta High Court in several cases [Lal Mamud Mandal v. Arbullah Sheikh (2), Robert Wilson v. Radha Dulari Koer (3) and Samujan Roy v. Munshi Mahaton (4)], that when the tenant transfers his occupancy holding and abandons the possession of the same he must be taken to have abandoned his holding.

Assuming the tenant Musammat Harku to have abandoned her holding, under s. 35 of the Tenancy Act the landlord is required at any time after the end of the agricultural year to file a notice in the office of the Tahsildar stating his intention to treat such holding as abandoned and after the publication the landlord shall be entitled to enter on the holding.

Nothing has been done here and, therefore, the landlord has no right to enter on or let the holding.

We are not now dealing with the respective rights of defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2, the co-sharer who has taken the transfer, and the lambardar. That question is elaborately discussed in Ramdayal v. Gulabia Bai (1).

I do not think that the landlord can completely ignore the provisions of the Tenancy Law as has been done in the present case. At the time of the lease in February 1920 the tenant Musammat Harku was actually on the land and the lease was absolutely illegal and void.

After Musammat Harku's transfer to defendant No. 1 the defendant No. 2 did not adopt any of the courses laid down in the Tenancy Act. The question of his title to lease the land is extremely doubtful and I am of opinion that plaintiff cannot claim to eject defendant No. 1 on the strength of s. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, operating on an extremely doubtful title.

The appeal will consequently be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 9—Minor—Appeal filed by minor through next friend dismissed for default—Negligence of next friend—Minor, whether entitled to re-hearing.

An appeal filed on behalf of a minor was dismissed for default of appearance and thereupon another relative of the minor made an application to the Court for removing the next friend of the minor, for appointment of himself as next friend and for an order directing that the appeal should be re-heard. The Appellate Court dismissed the application without taking any evidence. In the meantime the minor had attained majority and adopted the proceedings taken on his behalf by the relative who had made the application:

Held, (1) that the minor having become a major it was no longer necessary to remove the next friend as the latter had ceased to be such by the mere efflux of time; [p. 117, col. 2.]

(2) that the lower Court should have taken evidence as to whether the next friend of the minor had been guilty of gross negligence in allowing the appeal to be dismissed in default and if such negligence was established the minor was entitled to re-hearing of the appeal. [ibid.]

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Krishnaswamy Iyangar, for the Respendents.

JUDGMENT.—The Civil Miscellaneous Appeal and Civil Revision Petition arise from the dismissal by the lower Appellate Court of Appeal No. 153 of 1919 for default of appearance of the guardian of the first appellant, who was then a minor but has now become a major. An application was made soon after the dismissal for default by the paternal uncle of the minor for the removal of the guardian on the ground of fraud and negligence for appointing him as a new next friend and for setting aside the order of dismissal and re-hearing the appeal on the ground that the guardian on record had acted with gross negligence in getting the appeal dismissed for default. It was alleged that the guardian had so allowed the appeal to go by default because there were criminal proceedings between him and the minor and civil litigation between him and the minor's grandmother with reference to the minor's estate.

The learned Judge, in disposing of the matter on affidavits, held that there was no sufficient ground for removing the guardian, but he did not in doing so refer to the main allegation of enmity between the guardian and the minor; and after having refused to remove the guardian he dismissed the application for restoring and re-hearing the appeal on the ground that the person who applied for it, the paternal uncle, not having been accepted as the next friend of the minor, had no locus standi to apply on behalf of the minor. The minor has now become a major pending the proceedings in this Court and he has adopted the petition filed by his paternal uncle as his own and has proceeded before us on that footing.

The main complaint that is urged is that the Court should have taken evidence and decided whether the guardian was not negligent in his duty in allowing the appeal to go by default. The minor having become a major, it is no longer necessary to remove any guardian as the guardian has ceased to be such by the mere efflux of time. We have only, therefore, to consider the question whether he should allow the appellant to adduce evidence to show that his guardian was negligent in his duty and did not conduct the appeal properly before the lower Court and that, therefore, this appeal should be restored to the file and re-heard with himself as the appellant. We think there is substance in this appellant's contention that evidence should have been taken as the respondent does not admit that there has been enmity between the guardian and the minor That is a matter which can be decided only after taking evidence. We, therefore, decide to call for a finding from the Subordinate Judge of Tiruvalur on the following issue: "Whether the guardian acted with gross negligence in allowing Appeal No. 158 of 1919 on the file of the Third Additional Subordinate Judge's Court of Tanjore at Mayavaram to be dismissed for default by that Court." Evidence will be allowed on both sides and the finding will be returned in two months from this date and ten days will be allowed for objections.

[In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of Tiruvalur submitted a finding to the effect that he was satisfied that the father wantonly allowed the appeal to be dismissed for default of prosecution so as to amount to a fraudulent conduct and not mere gross negligence.]

This Appeal against Order and the Civil Revision Petition coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We accept the findings to which no objections have been filed.

We reverse the order of the lower Court and direct that the appeal be restored and disposed of according to law.

Costs to abide and follow the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 9—Dismissal for default—Restoration, application for—Sufficient cause—Duty of Court.

It is the business of the Courts to decide the rights of the parties and not to deprive them of their rights by the mere exercise of discipline, but to use their discipline for the purpose of visiting neglect upon them and removing the results of such neglect.

Where a suit was dismissed for default and on an application for restoration it appeared that the plaintiff had started with his witnesses in time to catch the last train which would bring him to the Court before the suit was called on, but had missed that train and was thus prevented from arriving in Court till after the suit had been dismissed :

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the suit restored as there was sufficient cause for his failure to appear at the time when the suit was called on for hearing.

First appeal from an order of the Second Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 15th September 1923.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we are satisfied that the appellant is entitled to another chance. It is the business of the Courts to decide the rights of the parties and not to deprive them of their rights by the mere exercise of discipline, but to use their discipline for the purpose of visiting neglect upon them and removing the results of such neglect. The learned Judge rightly says that at times parties will stay away when they are not ready and then come back with a cock and bull story to apply for restoration, in other words that they are acting mala fides. He has not been able to find that that was so. In this case he only finds that the plaintiff was negligent in starting for the last train and missing it. Negligence of that kind is human and not irreparable. It can be repaired by paying the costs of the other side and restoring the parties to their original position. We are satisfied in this case by really overwhelming evidence, namely, that the claim was Rs. 20,000, that the plaintiff did start with his witnesses, and that he did in fact take the train and apply that day to have his case restored, on the ground, that he had been prevented by having missed the earlier train. We, therefore, reverse the order and direct the lower Court to restore the case to its pending file for re-hearing on the condition that the plaintiff pays into Court within a month a sum of Rs. 100 as security for all costs borne by the defendant in the lower Court with fees in this Court on the higher scale. The money must be paid before the case is heard.

Tariff Act (VIII of 1894), s. 10—"Increase," meaning of—Contract after increase of tax—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Contract of sale—Misunderstanding of market rate—Breach of contract.

The word "increase" in s. 10 of the Tariff Act refers to the act of Government and not to the actual levy of the excise at the factory. Parties who have entered into a contract of sale before the date on which the increase is to come into force and whose contract is still subsisting on that date, would come within the mischief of the section but the section has no reference to parties who enter into a contract of sale after the date on which the increase of the tax is to come into force although they may never have heard of such increase.

In a suit to recover the value of salt sold by the defendant to the plaintiff but not delivered, the fact that the market rate on the date of breach was due to a misunderstanding of the intentions of Government in respect of the levy of the enhanced rate of salt tax is no reason for refusing compensation to the plaintiff at that rate.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree and judgment of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in S. C. S. No. 473 of 1922.

Mr. V. Sundarasa Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On 1st March 1922 at 9 A. M. the plaintiff bought 120 maunds of salt from the defendant, which were separated and packed in 60 of the plaintiff's own gunny bags. He took away 35 bags and left 25 in the custody of the defendant. That evening the exciseman made the defendant pay Rs. 150 enhanced salt duty on the 60 bags which he had sold, having heard that the duty of excise was increased from the commencement of March 1st. To recompense himself, the defendant sold the 25 bags to other persons. Subsequently the exciseman who was acting under a misapprehension refunded the excess duty to the defendant. The plaintiff sued for the value of his 25 bags of salt on the date when they were taken from him by defendant. The short point for determination is whether defendant was justified in selling these 25 bags. The Subordinate Judge finds, without giving any reason for his finding that the defendant had a lien for the excess duty payable on the 25 bags left in his custody; and, therefore, he had a right to sell the bags. The counter-petitioner supports this finding by reference to s. 10, Act VIII of 1894.

"In the event of any duty of excise on any article being imposed, increased, decreased or remitted after the making of any contract for the sale of such article, if such increase so takes effect that the increased duty is paid, the seller may add so much to the contract price as will be equivalent to the increase of duty and shall be entitled to recover such addition."

'Increase' in this section refers to the act of Government and not the levy of the excise at the factory. Any party who had contracted before March 1st and whose contract was still subsisting (that is to say in the words of the English Statute, "before there had been clearance and delivery," 39, 40, Vict. 20) would come within the mischief of s. 10; but it has no reference to parties who enter into a contract of sale after the increase of the tax, although they themselves may never have heard of such increase.

If the Subordinate Judge acted with reference to s. 10, his mistake in all probability was that he took 'imposition' to mean 'levy.' The levy was at 9 P. M. but the imposition was from midnight 28th February to 1st March. I have not been shown any other provision of law giving defendant a vendor's lien in the circumstances of this case. The petition is, therefore, allowed with costs throughout, and plaintiff is given a decree as prayed for, the decree of the lower Court being reversed. The fact that the market rate was due to a misunderstanding of the intentions of Government is no reason for not allowing plaintiff to claim recompense at that rate. I accept the finding that the rate is Rs. 6-12-0 per bag.

In passing a decree for arrears of rent of a putni tenure the Court is not entitled, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, to direct that the defaulting tenure should first be sold and that the balance of the decretal amount, if any, be realised from other properties of the judgment-debtor. Where, however, the parties have expressly contracted that the properties belonging to the judgment-debtor should be sold in a certain order to satisfy a rent decree passed against him, and such contract is not contrary to the provisions of the law, the Court is bound to give effect to it.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises under the following circumstances. The appellant is the putnidar under the respondents. The respondent brought a suit for rent in respect of the putni. It was decreed partially by the Court of first instance but the learned Additional District Judge on appeal decreed the suit in full. The objections taken against the decree of the lower Appellate Court are, first, with regard to the payment of road-cess. The point taken is that under the lease the putnidar is not liable to pay the amount of road-cess in excess of what is stated therein. And secondly, the decree against the appellant for the payment of the entire amount of road-cess is wrong. On these points in the course of argument before us the learned Vakils on both sides came to an agreement. The entire amount of road-cess claim is Rs. 16-14 per year. It is agreed that the defendant will pay to the plaintiff Rs. 8-7 as per year and the plaintiff will bear the other half.

The next objection taken to the decree is with regard to that portion of it which directs the defendant to pay damages at the rate of 25 per cent. per annum. It is found by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff agreed to reduce the rent in view of the alleged reduction in the profits but that the amount was not settled and no effect was given to it. On this finding the defendant submits that he is not entitled to pay damages or at any rate the amount of damages is too high. We think that in these circumstances we should be justified in allowing damages as stipulated in the potta itself, viz., that on the arrears of rent the putnidar will be liable to pay interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. We, therefore, fix the amount of damages to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum.

The third point raised before us is more substantial and it is this, that the Court below ought to have ordered in the decree that the putni tenure should be first sold and if the amount was not realized from the sale thereof the balance should be realized from the person or other properties of the defendant. This point was not raised, as the learned Judge observes, either in the pleadings or in the issues or in the grounds of appeal before him. But we are pressed with the terms in the putni potta. The stipulation with regard to this matter is in these words: "If you fail to pay rent according to the kists then according to the provisions of Act VIII of 1819 and other Acts in force on the subject of realization of rents and other Acts which may be passed in future, the arrears with costs and interest at the rate of one per cent. per annum will be realized by auction-sale of the putni taluq. If the whole amount of arrears be not realized thereby the balance will be realized from your other properties." In the absence of any contract to the contrary it is no doubt correct to say that in passing a decree for rent the Court is not entitled to direct that the defaulting tenure or holding should first be sold and the balance realized from other properties of the defendant; but where the parties have contracted that properties should be sold in a certain order and such contract is not contrary to the provisions of law. We do not see why it should not be given effect to. Our attention has been drawn to the case of Sourendra Mohan Tagore v. Surnomoyi (1), where one of the terms of the kabuliyats was to the following effect: "If I fail to pay money due or any instalment you shall be entitled to realize the same with interest from the first day of the month following the one for which default has been made by auction-sale of the said mouza under the "provisions of Regulation VIII." In interpreting this clause the learned Judges held that it did not restrict the right of the landlord to proceed against other properties of the tenant besides the defaulting tenure and does not limit the personal liability of the defendant to pay rent. The clause which we have quoted from the present lease is materially different from that which was under consideration in that case. It is stipulated here clearly that the defaulting tenure should be first sold under Regulation VIII of 1819 or any other law in force for realization of rent and if the whole amount of arrears is not realized thereby, the balance will be realized from other properties. The meaning of this clause is that the defaulting tenure should be first sold and if the entire dures of the plaintiff are not realized therefrom the landlord will be entitled to proceed against other properties of the tenant. We think we should give effect to this term of the lease and modify the decree passed by the Court below to that extent.

The result is that we partially allow this Appeal from Appellate Decree (No. 1432 of 1923) and direct that the decree passed by the Court below be amended by inserting the words "if the entire decretal amount and costs are not realized from the sale of the defaulting tenure the balance will be realized from the other properties of the judgment-debtor." There will be a further modification in the decree of the lower Appellate Court with regard to the amount of cesses and damages to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff. Though the appeal has materially succeeded the points on which we have allowed it were not taken in the Court of Appeal below. We, therefore, think it proper that the appellant should pay the respondent the costs of this appeal.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Inheritance—Sisters, contest between—Poor sister, priority of—Test.

In order to apply the rule of the Mitakshara that in succession to the estate of their father a sister who is "unprovided for" shall take precedence over a sister who is "enriched", each case must be looked at from the point of view of comparative poverty or wealth of the parties, and it is not essential that the poor sister should point to some definite acquisition of property by the rich sister. It is sufficient that her surroundings are such that she can be regarded as a rich woman, for instance, that she is married into a family of position and wealth.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Benares, dated the 30th of January 1922.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit of a rather unusual but quite interesting character. It was a suit between two sisters, and the plaintiff claimed that she was entitled to a share to the extent of one-half of the entire property left by her father. In ordinary circumstances that claim was undoubtedly a good one in law, there being only herself, the plaintiff, and her sister Kundan Kunwar as the survivors of the father at the time of the claim. The defendant set up the plea that the plaintiff was a wealthy woman whilst she, the defendant was very poor. She thereby invoked the statement of law recorded in the Mitakshara to the effect that the sister who is "unprovided for" shall take precedence over the sister who is "enriched." The learned Subordinate Judge took the view that the action should fail on the ground that the plaintiff was a rich woman, that the defendant was a very poor woman and that the authority of the Mitakshara gave to the defendant the right to succeed to the whole of the father's estate. This appeal raises two questions, one is a question of fact, the other is a question as to whether on the text of the Mitakshara the defendant has brought herself within its provisions. The question of fact is whether the defendant has correctly described herself as a very poor woman and correctly described her sister as a wealthy one. We have been taken through the evidence of the means of the defendant, and we are of opinion that she has correctly described herself. Compared with the position of the defendant the position of the plaintiff is rightly described as that of a wealthy woman. It was suggested in argument to us that you must construe the text of the Mitakshara and the words "enriched daughter" as meaning a daughter definitely provided for either by a document such as a Will or by having been definitely invested with property in her own right by some other method, gift or some thing in the nature of a settlement. We have been referred to several cases, the first one of which was that of Audh Kumari v. Chandra Dai (1). In that case it was held that the only criterion was the comparative poverty. But it has been pointed out to us that in that case the rich daughter had at the time of marriage a valuable estate made over to her and, therefore, she was an enriched daughter in the sense that she had acquired property in her own right as apart from her general expectations of property and generally rich surroundings. A few years later that was followed by Danno v. Darbo (2). There the rich daughter had acquired nothing by Will, had acquired nothing by gift or conveyance, but she was in comparison to her sister a woman who had married into a wealthy family. In that case the Court said, "the expression 'unprovided for' in contradistinction to the term "enriched" must be construed in the sense of 'indigent' as opposed to "possessed of means," irrespective of the sources of provision or non-provision." Other cases were cited to us, but we need only refer finally to the case reported as Totawa v. Basawa (3). That case is a definite authority, which shows that all that has to be regarded is this. If you find a marked difference in the financial position of the sisters, and one of those sisters in straitened circumstances, that is sufficient to bring into operation the authority of the Mitakshara. This case, as all the other ones, has to be looked at from the point of view of comparative poverty of the plaintiff and defendant and it is not essential that the poor sister should be bound to point to some definite acquisition of property by the rich sister. It is sufficient to say that her surroundings are such that she would be regarded as a rich woman. The ordinary case, of course, is, that she has married into a family of position and wealth. Taking that as a criterion, we are of opinion that the claim of the plaintiff was rightly dismissed and we dismiss this appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Interest—Deposit, return of—Date from which interest can be claimed.

Interest cannot be awarded by way of damages apart from the provisions of the Interest Act. [p. 123, col 1.]

Plaintiff agreed to purchase a motar-car from the defendant and deposited a certain sum of money with him on account of the price of the car. The bargain fell through owing to the default of the defendant and plaintiff served a notice on the latter demanding a return of the deposit and intimating that if this was not done interest would be charged on the sum depoaited from the date on which the deposit was made. The defendant failed to pay and plaintiff sued to recover the deposit with interest:

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to interest from the date on which notice was given to the defendant and not from the date on which the deposit was made. [ibid.]

Mr. Binning, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. O'Gorman, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—[His Lordship after dealing with matters not material for this report proceeded:—] I have heard Counsel on the question of interest. In the plaint this is claimed from the dates of actual payment of the two sums of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 500 respectively. Mr. Binning for the plaintiff says that his client ought to get this interest, as it is obvious that she has inequitably been kept out of her money by the wrongful acts of the defendants, and cites the case of Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association, In re, Wainwright's case (1), where in regard to a deposit for shares under a contract which the applicant was entitled to have rescinded, it was held he was entitled to interest upon his deposit by way of special damage. I should be very glad if I could see my way to allow the plaintiff interest at any rate from the expiry of the three months referred to in her letter of June 7, 1921. No doubt she had suffered some damage by the wrongful withholding of these deposits by the defendants, and I admit that there are conflicting decisions in the Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad High Courts some of which hold the Court is authorized to allow interest by way of damages in a proper case. But so far as I am aware, there is no case of this Court which has definitely differed from the view taken in the well-known leading case in England of London Chatham and Dover Ry. Company v. South Eastern Ry. Company (2), where the House of Lords held that interest could not be awarded by way of damages, apart from the special provisions of the Interest Act. The only case which allows an exception is that of Soundanappa v. Shivbasawa (3), where it was allowed on the special ground that the parties in the suit were Hindus governed by the Law of Mitakshara and that under the special circumstances interest could be awarded under Hindu Law in that case. Otherwise the judgment, as I read it, follows the English decision I have quoted. There is also a decision of the Privy Council to the same effect in Juggmohun Ghose v. Kaisreechund (4). It has always been my view that the law is correctly stated in Pollock & Mulla's Indian Contract Act, 4th Edition at pages 419 and 421; and I do not think that the authority of Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association, In re, Wainwright's case (1) which seems opposed to the subsequent decision of the House of Lords, is sufficient to justify my taking a different view of this case. Therefore, I can only allow interest to the plaintiff from the date of the letter of October 31, 1922, in which notice was given to the defendants that interest would be claimed at the rate of nine per cent. per annum. Decree, therefore, for Rs. 1,500 with interest at nine per cent. per annum from October 31, 1922, till judgment. Costs and interest on judgment, at six per cent.

Custom—Non-proprietor, sale of house by—Suit by some proprietors to recover possession—Decree, form of.

Where a non-proprietor sells his residential house in the village, and a suit is brought by some of the members of the proprietary body to recover possession of the site from the purchaser, the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for possession of the site jointly with the other co-sharers in the village as against the purchaser, together with an injunction directing the latter to remove the materials of the house within a reasonable period.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Rohtak, dated the 17th November 1920.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand and Lala Sardha Ram, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are not disputed and the sole question for decision in this appeal concerns the nature of the relief to be granted to the plaintiffs.

Two non-proprietors of Mauza Chalkana sold their residential house and site to two other non-proprietors and the present action was raised by the plaintiffs, who are two members of the proprietary body, for joint possession of the site along with the remaining members of the proprietary body. The First Court finding that the share of the plaintiffs was 2/31 gave them a decree for joint possession of the house in dispute to the extent of their 2/31 share.

The plaintiffs dissatisfied with this decree appealed to the District Judge who accepted their appeal and gave them a decree for joint possession of the property by ejectment of the defendants-vendees. The vendees have come up to this Court in second appeal and contend that the First Court's decree should be restored. An examination of the authorities shows that the decree granted by this Court in such cases has generally been a decree for possession of the site to the plaintiffs jointly with the other co-sharers in the village as against the vendees together with an injunction to these latter to remove their materials within a reasonable period and we think that the decree in this case should be of that description.

We accordingly accept the appeal and modify the decree of the Court below by granting possession of the site of the house in dispute to the plaintiffs jointly with the other proprietors of the village and direct that the defendants-vendees shall remove the materials of the house within three months on pain of losing all rights therein. The parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 6 of 1922, preferred against that of the Principal District Munsif, Cocanada, in I. A. No. 109 of 1921, in O. S. No. 509 of 1920.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. K. S. Krishnaswamy Iyangar and A. Satyanarayana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In the case from which this revision petition arises, the petitioner was the defendant. He filed an application under O. XXIII, r. 3, for a compromise alleged to have taken place between him and the plaintiff to be recorded. The Court of first instance found for the compromise and passed an order for its being duly recorded. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge disbelieved the case for the defendant and found that the fact that there had been a compromise was not satisfactorily established and dismissed the petition of the defendant. Before me it has been sought to be urged by the learned Vakil who appeared for the petitioner that the plaintiff had no right of appeal to the lower Appellate Court because the order passed by the Court of first instance became merged in the preliminary decree passed at the same time by the Court. Reliance was placed for that position on the decision in Alamelu Ammal v. Rama Iyer (1). There the learned Judges, Oldfield and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ., observed as follows:—"The order in question is one regarding a compromise between the parties. Decree in terms of that compromise was passed later. It is impossible to see how there can be an appeal against the order when it has become merged in the subsequent decree." It seems to me that, with all respect, the correctness of that decision is open to doubt. However, that may be, for the purposes of the present case it is enough to say that the learned Judges thought that the fact that the decree in terms of the compromise was passed later was a point of distinction. In this case the decree was passed immediately and as part of the order recording the compromise. I may refer here to the case of

(1) 70 Ind. Cas. 425; 43 M. L. J. 290; 31 M. L. T. 132; (1922) M. W. N. 495; 16 L. W. 440; (1922) A. I. R. (M.) 446.

Govindaswami v. Kaliaperumal (2), where Sadasiva Iyer and Coutts-Trotter, JJ., held that even when there was a decree passed according to the terms of the compromise, an appeal would properly lie against the order recording or refusing the compromise. A similar view has been taken in Megh Raj v. Tulsi Ram (3). In Paban Sardar v. Bhupendra Nath Nag (4), Jenkins, C. J. and, Chatterjea, J., have laid down that the omission by the Court of first instance to make a formal order recording the compromise was irregular, because it had the effect of depriving the parties of the statutory right of appeal against the order given by cl. (u) of O. XLIII, r. 1. Therefore, I am satisfied there is no foundation for the objection taken, namely, that the appeal to the lower Appellate Court was not competent. In this view there is no other question of jurisdiction before me.

The learned Vakil has drawn my attention to certain facts and circumstances which go to show that the lower Appellate Court might have conceivably gone wrong in its appreciation of the evidence. But sitting here in revision I have no right to interfere with the conclusion of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court.

The revision petition is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 15th January 1924, in Civil Judicial Case No. 86 of 1923.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Messrs. D. P. Tiwari, Atmaram Bhagwant and S. A. Ghadgay, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose, and Messrs. V. R. Pandit, R. B., W. R. Puranik and P. N. Rudra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, allowing the respondents' application for review of judgment and re-opening the case and directing that the sums due under the prior mortgage should be ascertained and considered a valid and good consideration for the mortgage bond in suit.

The facts are that the plaintiff Govindrao brought Suit No. 23 of 1922 on the basis of a mortgage bond, dated the 30th September 1921, for the recovery of Rs. 84,683 odd, and the Additional District Judge, Nagpur (Mr. Pande) disallowed the claim for Rs. 56,002 odd mainly on the ground that at the time when the prior mortgages of 1920 were executed, the mortgagor (defendant No. 1) was not competent to execute them under para. 11 of the Third Schedule of the C. P. C., as his property was under the management of the Collector, whose permission was necessary for their execution. The mortgages were, therefore, void and the amount due under them, which was included in the consideration of the mortgage bond in suit, was disallowed. The plaintiff presented an application for review on the ground that there was a mistake of law in the judgment in view of the decision in Narayan v. Motisa (1). He also made certain allegations as to his Pleader having made mistaken admission.

Mr. Trivedi, who succeeded Mr. Pande, did not take into consideration the unauthorized admissions but held that there was a mistake of law in the judgment in view of the ruling quoted above, and held that the money received by the mortgagor under the first two mortgage-deeds could form a valid consideration for the mortgage bond in suit. He accordingly granted the application for review and set aside the decree and directed that the case be re-opened and the amounts be taken as part consideration of the mortgage in suit. Against this order the mortgagor (defendant No. 1) presented this appeal.

The mortgagee had appealed against the decree as it originally stood and his appeal is pending before us, but as he has obtained by the review what he sought by the appeal, it will not be necessary to proceed with the appeal if the order for review stands. As the application for review was admittedly made before the appeal, it cannot be objected to on that score. Although there has been considerable divergence of opinion among the various High Courts as to the grounds on which a review can be granted, the matter has recently been set at rest by a decision of the Privy Council and there is now a preponderance of opinion in favour of the view that a review cannot be granted on the ground of a mistake of law or on the merits. The leading case on the subject is the Privy Council judgment in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (2) which lays down that O. XLVII, r. 1 of the C. P. C., 1908, must be read as in itself definitive of the limits within which review of a decree or order is now permitted, and the words "any other sufficient reason" mean a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously. A Court hearing an application for a review of a decree made on appeal has, therefore, no power to order a review upon the ground that the decision was wrong on the merits.

In the present case the review has been granted on the ground that the decision, as it originally stood, was inconsistent with the view of the law laid down in Narayan v. Motisa (1) which was not published at the time the decision was given. We have direct authority on the point in Srimati Garabini Kamarin v. Surja Narain Singh (3), where it is stated that a judgment cannot be reviewed under O. XLVII, r. 1 (1), on account of some mistake or an error apparent on the face of the record when the alleged mistake or error is a wrong exposition of the law, as, for instance, when the judgment is based on a precedent which has been modified by a subsequent decision. This case further goes on to state that even assuming that the discovery of an authoritative precedent, by which a precedent relied on in the judgment has been modified, amounts to the discovery of new and important matter or evidence within the meaning of O. XLVII, r. 1 (1), such a discovery is not a ground for review without strict proof that the subsequent authority was not within the knowledge of the applicant, or could not be produced by him when the decree or order was passed or made.

We mention this latter portion of the judgment because it has been argued by the learned Counsel for the respondents that the law laid down in Narayan v. Motisa (1) is not new law but has already been expressed in Harnath Kuar v. Indar Baha- dur Singh (4). A number of other cases have been quoted as laying down the same principle under s. 65 of the Contract Act. We need not quote these cases because we do not propose to go into the merits as regards the validity of the mortgages, which is a matter which will come before us in appeal. Suffice it to say that if the view expressed in Narayan v. Motisa (1) is a view which has already been expressed by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Calcutta, and by the Privy Council in Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (4), the remarks in Shrimati Garabini Kamrin v. Suraja Narain Singh (3) will apply with all the more force and we must hold that there was no discovery of new and important matter or evidence which would justify the plaintiff in claiming a review, because he ought to have been aware of the existence of these decisions.

There are other decisions beside the Patna one, quoted above, to the effect that a review cannot be granted on the ground of a mistake of law, we may refer to Hazra Sardar v. Kunja Behari Nag Choudhury (5), where it is laid down that a mere mistake of law is not in itself a sufficient mistake or error apparent on the face of the record so as to form a ground for review of judgment; and the same view has been taken by the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court in Bibi Ruqaiya Khanam v. Fazl Haq (6).

The only case to the contrary, which has been quoted to us, in Muddlapur Murari Rao v. Balunath Dikshit (7) which lays down that "error" under r. 1, O. XLVII, C. P. C., is not limited to one of fact and an error of law committed by a Judge and apparent on a perusal of the record is a ground for granting a review. That case, however, at page 957* states that "it has undoubtedly been held in many cases..... that a mistake in law is not sufficient ground for granting a review", and it goes on to say: "We are of opinion that each case must be judged by itself and that where the error of law is such that it is clearly apparent on a perusal of the record, there is ground for granting a review." In the present case we may point out that the error of law is by no means apparent on the face of the record, since the question of the validity of the mortgages is a very debatable one and many authorities can be shown on either side.

We are of opinion that in view of these decisions and of the ruling of the Privy Council in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (2), there is no ground for review in the present case.

We may further point out that there would be no finality to the original decree if a review can be sought on account of real or supposed errors of law, a process which might be continued indefinitely. In this case both parties have a remedy by way of appeal against the decree.

In these circumstances we are of opinion that the case is not one in which a review should be allowed. We, therefore, set aside the order reviewing the judgment.

We have confined ourselves solely to the question of law involved, as it has been stated by the appellant that the question of the so-called wrong admissions made by the plaintiff's Pleader was not gone into, although he denied it, and it is apparent from the order itself that the review is based entirely on the alleged mistake of law and not on any mistaken admissions. It is not necessary to go into the merits which will now form the subject of the appeal which is pending before us.

The order of the lower Court reviewing the judgment is set aside. The non-applicants will pay the costs in this Court and the costs of the application for review in the lower Court.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL APPEAL No. 138 OF 1922.
December 4, 1924.
Present:—Mr. Justice Phillips and Mr. Justice Odgers.

P. K. P. S. SIVANADIAN CHETTIAR —PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
BATCHU SURAYYA AND OTHERS— DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Carriage of goods—Charter party—"Advance freight," what is—Advance, payment of, for voyage Voyage impossible—Suit for refund, maintainability of—Substitution of ship, when enforceable.

Under a contract of charter party plaintiff paid a sum of money to defendant, a ship-owner, as advance for carrying certain cargo for two voyages, but no voyage was made as the vessel was stranded on its way to load the cargo for the first voyage. In a suit for the refund of the advance:

Held, that the payment was purely an advance and not in the nature of "advance freight" at all and was, therefore, recoverable.

Per Phillips, J.—Advance freight must connote freight, and the idea of freight does not arise until the voyage has actually begun, or at any rate until the goods for which the freight is payable have been loaded on the ship or accepted by bills of lading. [p. 128, col. 1.]

Per Odgers, J.—A ship-owner is only entitled to compel the acceptance of a substituted ship after the voyage in the ship contracted for has begun. [p. 129, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in O. S. No. 21 of 1920.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—I agree. I am quite clear that neither under the contract, Ex. A, nor under the doctrine of English Law can the Rs. 6,600 advance be treated as "advance freight." "Advance freight" must connote freight and it is clear from the authorities referred to by my learned brother that the idea of freight does not arise until the voyage has actually begun, or at any rate until the goods for which the freight is payable have been loaded on the ship or accepted by bills of lading. In this case the ship has never been loaded, nor was it attempted to be loaded and, consequently, there can be no question of freight. Even if the provisions of the Indian Contract Act are applied to this case, (it is unnecessary to decide this point which has not been argued before us) the plaintiff must succeed under the provisions of s. 65, because the contract has become impossible of performance.

Odgers, J.—This was a suit for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 6,600 payable on a contract of charter party (Ex. A) entered into between the plaintiff and the defendants. The Subordinate Judge has held that by the terms of Ex. A, this sum was in fact paid by the plaintiff "as advance freight" which is by a doctrine peculiar to the English Law, irrecoverable. How this occurs is explained by Brett, J., in Allison v. Bristol Marine Insurance Co. (1). The plaintiff has appealed. Exhibit A after clauses contracting for two voyages of the defendants' barque "Bhagyalakshmi" from Akyab to Jaffna proceeds:—"Payments of freight at the above rates to be made as:—

1. Rs 6,600 (Rupees six thousand six hundred only) advance on acceptance of the charter party, paid by charterers' representative Sabhapathy Chettiar at Cocanada, subject to deduction of Rs. 3,300 per trip on loading.

2. Rs. 3,300 to be paid in Akyab per each trip at the time of lading.

3. The balance freight as the vessel reaches her destination and lands the cargo."

Thus the whole sum of Rs. 6,600 was payable on signing Ex. A, but half of it was to be notionally distributed at Akyab on each trip at the time of loading there. Exhibit A was made on 9th October 1919, the first voyage was to be in January 1920 and the second February-March 1920.

The money was paid but no voyage was made according to the charter party by the "Bhagyalakshmi" as she stranded on the Nellore coast while proceeding to Akyab to load for her first voyage.

The question is whether this sum of Rs. 6,600 is advance freight. In Leake on Contracts (7th Edition) page 73, the doctrine as to advance freight is said to be an example of money paid for an executed consideration if it was in fact the consideration bargained for and cannot be recovered back merely on the ground that it proved to be of no value. The learned author says "Upon this principle, freight paid in advance cannot be recovered back after the voyage has commenced, though the goods are lost during the voyage; for it is" "the uniform, though perhaps anomalous, rule that the money to be paid in advance for freight must be paid, though the goods are before payment lost by perils of the sea." The words to be noted here are "after the voyage has commenced."

In Weir & Co. v. Girvin & Co. (2), Vaugham Williams, L. J., at page 52 refers to the old view that advance freight was different from freight and meant a loan or a sum payable when goods were put on board in consideration of their being received on board. The opinions of the Law Lords in Allison v. Bristol Marine Insurance Co. (1) make it clear that "freight whether used in respect of advanced freight, or otherwise, always has the same meaning; the practical difference between advanced freight and freight is a difference arising from the stipulations which are made as to payment." Lord Esher, M. R. in Smith v. Pyman (3) says: "Now, there are two peculiarities of the English Law as regards freight; first, that if part of the freight is advanced and the ship is lost, or the goods are lost, the part so advanced, although really not due under the terms of the contract unless there has been delivery of the goods, nevertheless cannot be recovered back by the charterer from the ship-owner, and secondly, that if there is no stipulation to the contrary, but only a stipulation that there shall be advance freight, it is payable at the moment of starting and even if not paid can be recovered by the ship-owner from the charterer upon the loss of the ship." Advance freight is then payable "at the moment of starting" or in other words the ship must sail, unless there is some special contract to the contrary. As against this, Mr. Somasundaram for respondents relies on Coker & Co., Ltd. v. Limerick Steamship Co., Ltd. (4), where freight was on the contract payable in Liverpool before sailing on signing the bills of lading. Some of the bills were signed and the House of Lords held that under the agreement a proportional part of the advance freight became payable on the signing of each bill of lading. The question turned on the construction of the charter party. In the present case no cargo was loaded and no bills of lading signed. The case in the House of Lords can have no bearing on it. It appears to me, therefore, that the present payment of Rs. 6,600 can in no sense be viewed as advance freight. It was a pure advance made to the defendants on account of what would be payable to them as freight by the plaintiff, but the conditions precedent, viz., the starting of the voyage or at least of loading, were absent to make it amount in law to advance freight. The wording of cls. (1) and (2) above proves this and there are no special clauses, e.g., as to freight being payable on signing bills of lading.

A faint attempt was made to argue that the defendants were competent to substitute another vessel, the "Mahalakshmi", for the "Bhagyalakshmi" and were entitled to compel the plaintiff to accept her. The documents show that some such proposal was made. The Subordinate Judge has held that it never got beyond the stage of proposal and that plaintiff never consented to the substitution. The authority of Carver's "Carriage by Sea" (Art. 304) clearly shows that a ship-owner is only entitled to compel the acceptance of a substituted ship after the voyage in the ship contracted for has begun, which is not the case here. The appeal must be allowed with costs throughout, interest will be calculated at six per cent. from date of plaint.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT No. 179 OF 1921.
February 23, 1923.
Present:—Mr. Justice Fawcett.
NADERSHAW SHERIARJI RABADI—PLAINTIFF
versus
SHIRINBAI BAPUJI MUSA—
DEFENDANT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 60, 72, 83, 84—Mortgage—Money spent by mortgagee in litigation, whether can be charged—"Mortgage-money," "amount due on mortgage," meaning of—Tender, insufficient, effect of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Compound interest, whether penal—Waiver—Interpretation of Statutes—Bombay Regulation V of 1827, s. 14, applicability of.

Section 72 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act cannot be taken to imply that a mortgagee not in possession has no right to charge the mortgaged property for payments properly made by him in relation to the security. [p. 131, col. 2.]

Under the ordinary law of mortgage the mortgagor is bound, so long as the equity of redemption remains with him, to indemnify the estate against expenses incurred by the mortgagee in protecting the title. [ibid.]

An incumbrancer is always entitled to add to his security the costs of proceedings to which he is properly made party in respect of his incumbrance. [p. 132, col. 2.]

The expression "the amount remaining due on the mortgage" used in ss. 83 and 84 of the Transfer of Property Act is a very wide one, and covers any just allowances or costs, which can be tacked on under the ordinary law of mortgage. [p. 131, col. 1.]

The words "mortgage-money" in s. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act must be taken as including all money which, on taking an account between the parties, may be properly allowed to the mortgagee. [ibid.]

Case-law discussed.

The Courts do not lean towards compound interest, they do not award it in the absence of stipulation, but where there is a clear agreement for its payment, it is, in the absence of disentitling circumstances, allowed. [p. 132, col. 2; p. 133, col. 1.]

Hari Lahu v. Ramji, 6 Bom. L. R. 307; 28 B. 371, followed.

A stipulation in a mortgage deed that if any of the monthly instalments of interest is not paid on its due date, such unpaid instalment of interest should be capitalised and added to the amount of the principal loan and that all such additions by way of capitalised interest should be chargeable upon the mortgaged property, is not penal, so as to bring it under s. 74 of the Contract Act. [p. 132, col. 2.]

The general rule in regard to waiver is that there can be no waiver, unless the person against whom waiver is claimed had full knowledge both of his rights and of the facts which would enable him to take effectual action for their enforcement. [p. 133, col. 1.]

The mere receipt of interest by the mortgagee after such default by the mortgagor as would entitle the mortgagee to compound interest does not amount to waiver of his right to charge compound interest. [ibid.]

Keene v. Biscoe, (1878) 8 Ch. D. 201; 47 L. J. Ch. 644; 38 L. T. 286; 26 W. R. 552, relied on.

It is a general rule of construction that Statutes which limit or extend common law rights must be expressed in clear or unambiguous language, and that general words are not to be so construed as to alter the common law, or the previous policy of the law, if a sense or meaning can be applied to them consistent with the intention of preserving the existing policy untouched. [p. 136, col. 2; p. 137, col. 1.]

Every man may renounce a benefit or waive a privilege which the law has conferred upon him, so long as it does not prejudice the rights of third persons. [p. 136, col. 2.]

Section 14 of the Bomby Regulation V of 1827 must be read as if the words "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" preceded the operative words of the section. [ibid.]

If a debtor-mortgagor tenders an insufficient sum in payment of the entire mortgage-debt due from him and asks that the mortgagee shall accept that tender as being the full amount due to him under his mortgage, s. 14 of the Bombay Regulation V of 1827 will not operate to allow cessation of interest on the insufficient amount tendered. [p. 137, col. 2.]

Messrs. Inverarity and B. J. Desai, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. M. V. Desai (with him Mr. Taraporevalla), for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—[After dealing with certain facts not material for the purpose of this report His Lordship proceeded:—] I first take up the question about Awabai's costs in Suit No. 13 of 1917. As already mentioned, the decree in this suit was passed on July 17, 1919, and Awabai's costs were taxed at Rs. 1,494-12-0 in November 1919, Ex. I. There is no specific provision in the mortgage-deed for the payment of any costs of litigation, but Mr. Inverarity for the plaintiffs relies upon the ordinary law of mortgage by which a mortgagee can tack on to the mortgage debt costs of litigation properly incurred by him in supporting the mortgagor's title, etc. Mr. Desai, on behalf of the defendant, has raised various objections, which I will consider in due order.

His first contention is a general one, that these costs were not in any case payable by the mortgagor on October 14, 1919, because they had not been actually ascertained, the allocatur of the Taxing Master not having been given until some time in November 1919; but I think this is completely answered by the fact that the mortgagor's liability for these costs was totally denied, so that there was no occasion for an immediate ascertainment of the exact amount which should be tendered on that account. The position could easily have been met; for instance, the mortgagor might have made an offer to pay these costs under protest, just as the interest for three months in lieu of notice was paid, or an undertaking might have been given by the mortgagor's Solicitors to pay the costs as finally taxed just as they gave an undertaking to pay the reasonable costs of the re-conveyance. Accordingly I do not think there is any force in that particular point.

Next it is said that these costs cannot be tacked on under s. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, read with the definition of "mortgage-money" in s. 58, viz., "the principal money and interest of which payment is secured for the time being." I notice that in the case of Pestonji Dadabhai v. Harmosji Manekjee (1), the plaintiff's Counsel in that case (who happened to be Mr. Inverarity) apparently did put forward a contention of that kind which was accepted by the Court, but Batty, J.'s expression of opinion is purely an obiter dictum, for the suit was decided on other grounds.

In connection with this contention, it is pointed out that, while s. 72, para. (c), provides for the case of a mortgagee in possession being entitled to add all costs incurred "for supporting the mortgagor's title to the property," s. 65 of the Transfer of Property Act, on the other hand, clearly contemplates the mortgagor, and not the mortgagee, defending the former's title; and it is, therefore, argued that under the Transfer of Property Act the mortgagee can only add such costs to the mortgage debt, if he is actually in possession. I think it is clearly very improbable that the Legislature intended to alter the English Common Law rule under which the mortgagee is entitled to tack on the costs of litigation relating to the security as part of the terms on which redemption is allowed. The law on this point will be found stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXI, Art. 279 at page 145 and Art. 421 at page 231, and Mr. Inverarity has rightly drawn the Court's attention to the rule that such costs of litigation can only be allowed to the mortgagee as a condition of the redemption. In Art. 421 it is stated that "a mortgagee is allowed proper costs, charges and expenses incurred by him in relation to the mortgage debt or mortgage security including the costs of litigation properly undertaken by him; but all these items are allowed only as a condition of redeeming. There is no implicit contract by the mortgagor to pay them, and they are not, in the absence of express agreement, recoverable against him personally.". This last provision applies in this case, for the mortgage-deed contains nothing regarding the mortgagor's liability to pay costs of litigation, although it does contain provisions for re-payment of costs of repairs, etc., as a charge on the mortgaged property. The law in India has not, so far as I am aware, been authoritatively held to be different from the law in England on this point, and reference may also be made to ss 83 and 84 of the Transfer of Property Act which speak of "the amount remaining due on the mortgage" and not merely of "the mortgage-money" as is done in s. 60. The expression "the amount remaining due on the mortgage" is obviously a very wide one, and, in my opinion, covers any just allowances or costs, which can be tacked on under the ordinary law of mortgage. I think this indicates the real intention of the Legislature, and that the words "mortgage-money" in s. 60 must be taken as including all money which, on taking an account between the parties, may be properly allowed to the mortgagee, as has in fact been held in Varadarajulu Chetty v. Dhonalakshmi Ammal (2). I also agree with the opinion expressed in Upendra Chandra Mitter v. Tara Prosanna Mukarji (3) which has been followed in Rakhohari Chattaraj v. Bipradass Dey (4) that s. 72 cannot be taken to imply that a mortgagee not in possession has no similar right to charge the mortgaged property for payments properly made by him in relation to the security and that the mortgagee is entitled to have amounts so paid added to the amount of the original lien. This is, I think, supported by the ruling in Damodar Gangadhar v. Vamanrao Lakshman (5), where a Bench of three Judges of this Court have laid down that under the ordinary law of mortgage the mortgagor is bound, so long as the equity of redemption remains with him, to indemnify the estate against expenses incurred in protecting the title, and that it is, therefore, superfluous to insert in the mortgage-deed provisions regarding such indemnification. The Judges there followed the corresponding rule of English Law, which is now set out in para. 1901 of the 6th Edition of Fisher's Law of Mortgage at page 952. I hold, therefore, that the expression "mortgage-money," as used in s. 60, includes costs properly incurred by the mortgagee, such as costs of litigation which are allowed under the law of mortgage in England.

Mr. Desai contends that the case falls under the rule of English Law that the mortgagee will not be allowed the costs of litigation arising out of the wrongful act of a stranger, though it be directed against the mortgaged estate: see Fisher's Law of Mortgage, 6th Edition, page 950; or, as it has been put in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXI, Art. 433, at page 238, the costs incurred in defending the mortgagee's title to the mortgage against a third person cannot be allowed. But Shakrabhai cannot, in my opinion, be treated as a mere stranger or a third person of that kind. The defendant and her husband had undoubtedly done acts which gave Shakrabhai grounds for contending that he was an equitable mortgagee and the case put in para. 1 of the plaint, if true, would justify his claim, even though the first writing was unregistered, having regard to the ruling in Kedarnath Dutt v. Sham Lall Khetry (6) which has been approved by the Privy Council in the recent case of Subramonian v. M. L. R. M. Lutchman (7). The same principle is also approved by the Privy Council in Pranjivandas Jagjivandas Mehta v. Chan Ma Phee (8). No doubt the terms of the document of May 10, 1911, may support the contrary plea set up by the defendants in that suit, but the issue between the parties, if it had been tried, would not have depended on that alone. Thus in Subramonian's case (7), although the document contained words leading to the conclusion that the deposit was contemporaneous with the writing, yet their Lordships discussed the oral evidence in regard to the facts. And even supposing that the documents relied upon by Shakrabhai were inadmissible in evidence, the fact remains that it was through defendant's acts, which I have already held were not disclosed to Awabai, that the litigation arose. The suit cannot be said to have been a wholly unjustifiable one and a suit by a merely litigious person, coming within the class of cases referred to in the English Law relied upon by Mr. Desai. And this supposition is supported by the correspondence Exts. N to S, where mention is made of a probable settlement of the suit by the plaintiff and the original defendants, and concurrent adjournments are asked for. The fact that the plaintiff finally did not put in an appearance, when the suit was called on, points very strongly to the fact of some such settlement having been arrived at; and, therefore, there is no ground for saying that the suit was entirely unsuccessful. In this view of the circumstances, it seems to me that all the equities are really in favour of the mortgagee. I also agree with Mr. Inverarity's contention that, even adopting the law laid down in the case of Parker v. Watkins (9), there is shown to have been such concurrence and assistance by the defendant-mortgagor in the defence put up by Awabai against Shakrabhai's claims, as would bring the present case out of the general rule there laid down. In fact I think that this case really falls under the general principle laid down in Ashburner on Mortgages, Indian Edition, page 383, that —"An incumbrancer is always entitled to add to his security the costs of proceedings to which he is properly made party in respect of his incumbrance." The decree, as I have already mentioned, awarded Awabai's costs against Shakrabhai, but evidence has been given by the Managing Clerk Ardeshir that Shakrabai subsequently became insolvent and that Awabai has not been able to recover her costs from him. No evidence to the contrary has been led and I accept that statement....

I now take up the question of compound interest. There is express provision for this in the mortgage-deed, under which it was agreed that if any of the monthly instalments of interest was not paid on its due date, such unpaid instalment of interest should be capitalised and added to the amount of the principal loan and would henceforth carry interest at the rate of twelve annas per month leviable as simple interest and it is further provided that all such additions by way of capitalised interest should be chargeable upon the mortgaged property. Such a provision is not penal so as to bring the case under s. 74 of the Indian Contract Act according to decisions of the Calcutta High Court which there is no reason to question. On the other hand no action was apparently taken by Awabai or her representatives to demand payment of any compound interest at any rate until 1919; but on this latter point, I do not believe Ardeshir's evidence that he then objected that compound interest should be paid. Musa has denied that any such statement was made and, on a point of conflict of testimony of this kind, I must be guided mainly by the correspondence Ex. H which contains no specific mention of any compound interest being claimed. The question is whether in these circumstances it can be claimed now. The general rule on this point is laid down by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Hari Lahu v. Ramji (10) as follows (page 311*):—"The Courts do not lean towards compound interest, they do not award it in the absence of stipulation, but where there is a clear agreement for its payment, it is in the absence of disentitling circumstances allowed." Here the main facts are that simple interest was paid up to the end of August 1918 though somewhat irregularly. Thus, according to the statement made from the receipts given on behalf of Awabai (Ex. X), payment of interest for April 1913 was not made until February 23, 1916, payment for May 1916 was not made until February 25, 1917, and payment for August 1918 was not made until August 13, 1919. The receipts given by Awabai, Ex. I, are all in the same form and merely acknowledge the receipt of the actual amounts paid as interest for specific months. These receipts are inconclusive on this point. They are not alone sufficient to show any waiver on the part of Awabai of her right to compound interest. They fall under the rule, of which Keen v. Biscoe (11) is an instance, that the mere receipt of interest after the due date is insufficient to show waiver. The general rule in regard to waiver is that there can be no waiver, unless the person against whom the waiver is claimed had full knowledge both of his rights and of the facts which would enable him to take effectual action for their enforcement. Again in Keen v. Biscoe (11) it is said that "where a right has accrued it can be waived, but to amount to waiver there must be something done which is inconsistent with the continuance of that right." In the present case putting it as favourable as possible to the mortgagor-defendant, all that can be said is that Musa had married Awabai's niece so that she might very likely be content with simple interest, and in fact she probably knew nothing whatever about the provision for compound interest contained in the mortgage-deed. I also think that, as contended by Mr. Desai, the present claim, which seeks to extort the utmost farthing of compound interest with effect from the year 1912, is an afterthought, of which evidence is afforded by the statement, Ex. 2, as compared with the statement Ex. J, and the omission of any specific mention of compound interest in the correspondence Ex. H. Even the notice of August 24, 1919, says nothing about compound interest though of course the expression "all arrears of interest" is wide enough to cover it. And again the letter of October 28, 1919, only says that the amount tendered is not the full amount due, though I think this might be due to compound interest not having been paid so as to cover a short period, in regard to which the plaintiff says that an extra sum of Rs. 18 is claimable. But is this enough to show waiver? In my opinion it cannot be said to be sufficient to show that Awabai intended to give up any claim that there might be to compound interest, for neither she nor her advisors did anything which was absolutely inconsistent with such a claim being made. On this general ground, though I have carefully scrutinised the circumstances with a view to give relief to the defendant if it were possible, I cannot find sufficient evidence to justify me in taking such a course. I may here notice briefly the fact that in the mortgage-deed after the provisions about compound interest to which I have already referred, it is further provided that the said mortgagor "will after the same shall be due upon demand pay to the said mortgagee any interest which shall be capitalised hereunder and any interest which shall accrue due thereon." Mr. Desai drew my attention to the words "upon demand" and I was at first inclined to think that this impliedly necessitated an express demand by the mortgagee for compound interest before any liability to pay it could be said to arise under the mortgage-deed. But against such a construction is the fact that the prior provisions expressly make the capitalized interest and the interest due thereon an addition to the lien secured by the mortgage property; and this subsequent clause about payment upon demand seems to me to provide merely a personal covenant by the mortgagor to pay such compound interest. It is difficult otherwise to see what was the necessity for inserting this provision. And then again, the words "on demand" do not necessarily mean that there must be an express demand, such as I have mentioned. Thus in Perumal Ayyan v. Alagirisami Bhagavathar (12), these words were construed as merely equivalent to "forthwith" or "immediately." So that I cannot see my way to holding that the Court can relieve the mortgagor against the express provisions in the deed about the payment of compound interest.

Next, in regard to the mortgagor's liability to pay interest in lieu of three months' notice. Such liability is expressly recognized by ss. 60 and 84 of the Transfer of Property Act and the deed contains express provision for such payment. The deed qualifies the liability by these words:—

"It is hereby agreed and declared that if the time fixed for payment of Rs. 4,000 be allowed to pass and if thereafter the said mortgagor shall be desirous of paying off the said principal sum, then and in such case the said mortgagor shall give the said mortgagee three months' previous notice in writing of her desire, etc."

Mr. Desai rightly relied upon the practice in England which is referred to in Ashburner on Mortgages, page 355. This lays down that a mortgagee is ordinarily entitled to six calendar months' notice of the intention to pay off the mortgage or in default thereof is entitled to six months' interest in advance in lieu of notice, but if the mortgagee has given notice calling in the mortgage-debt, the mortgagor, even though he is a few days late in complying with the notice and tendering the money, is not bound to give six months' notice before redeeming. A similar statement of the law will be found in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXI, page 148. Mr. Inverarity argues that this rule does not apply here because this is merely a practice of the Court of Chancery in England, whereas here there is express provision on the point in the mortgage-deed. On the other hand, as stated in Gour's Law of Transfer in British India, 4th Edition, Vol. II, page 948, Art. 1419, "the object of the notice being to enable the mortgagee to find a new security for his money, he is entitled only to such notice as will enable him to find a new investment." That object is, I think, plainly recognized in this particular mortgage-deed by the qualification about the mortgagor being desirous to pay off the mortgage-debt, to which I have already referred; otherwise it is difficult to see what is the object in inserting these particular words. The mortgage-deed also contains subsequent provisions under which, when the mortgagee wants to get his money, he can give three months' notice to the mortgagor, and notice accordingly was in fact given on August 24, 1917. Therefore the mortgage-deed recognizes two different cases, first, where the mortgagor is the party who primarily wants to pay off the mortgage, and, secondly where the mortgagee is the party who is desirous of getting his money. The two cases seem to me to be mutually exclusive and consequently the main question seems to be, whose was the desire which actually led to the tender of payment? In my opinion, in view of the notice of August 1917, it must be taken that the main desire operating was that of the mortgagee to have his money back in pursuance of that notice, and that the subsequent action of the mortgagor in expressing a desire to pay off the mortgage-debt was a subsidiary one and does not bring the case under this provision for three months' interest in lieu of notice. No doubt it is the fact that the tender was made some two years after the expiry of the three months' notice, and of course that is a point which must be taken into consideration; but I think in this case it is really immaterial. No doubt the ordinary case, like that of Edmondson v. Copland (13), is one where there is a delay of only a few days, and I think that ordinarily a delay of two years would not bring the case under the rule I am dealing with. But here the delay of two years is fully explained by the Suit No. 13 of 1917, which complicated matters between the mortgagor and mortgagee, and it seems obvious that by mutual consent no action was taken upon the notice of August 1917 pending the settlement or decision of this suit. The suit was not decided until 1919, and then it was that the mortgagor took action to pay up in accordance with the notice of August 1917; so that I do not consider that this particular delay deprives the Court of jurisdiction to allow the mortgagor's contention that she is not liable to pay three months' interest in lieu of notice. I think the equities of the case are on her side, and that the Court should accordingly allow that claim.

I now come to the question of the validity of the tender of October 14, 1919 (Issue No. 4). It is admitted that there was actually a tender of Rs. 4,494 and this was properly made to the mortgagee's Solicitors in accordance with the notice of August 1917. It is unnecessary, therefore, to go into the question whether Ardeshir or Musa is correct as to the actual circumstances surrounding this tender. But there is no doubt that, in view of my finding that the mortgagor was liable to pay the costs of Suit No. 13 of 1917, the amount tendered was insufficient; so that, supposing s. 84 of the Transfer of Property Act to apply, the amount remaining due on the mortgage was not actually tendered, so as to make interest cease under that section. Mr. Inverarity, therefore, naturally contended that interest did not in fact cease; but in the course of the arguments I drew his attention to s. 14 of Bombay Regulation V of 1827, which provides that, if a debtor can prove that he has tendered to a creditor the whole or any portion of the amount due, all further interest shall cease on the amount tendered. The question is whether this section affects the tender in this case and if so to what extent. The word "debtor" in s. 14 is certainly wide enough to cover a debtor who has given security by way of mortgage, and this is in fact, I think, shown by s. 15 of the same Regulation, which deals with the case of an usufructuary mortgage or pledge and speaks of a creditor and of the debt. Similarly in Act No. XXVIII of 1855, providing for the Repeal of the Usury Laws, s. 6 speaks of the lender and borrower of money upon any mortgage, so that there is no reason to suppose that s. 14 (if literally construed) would not cover the case of a mortgagor and mortgagee. But the question is how far this is reconcileable with the ordinary principle that a mortgage cannot be redeemed piecemeal. Here it must be remembered that the defendant-mortgagor was seeking to pay off the entire mortgage debt, with a view to redeeming the property and obtaining a re-conveyance. And it has for instance been held in the case of Lachmi Narain v. Muhammad Yusuf (14) that even in a case where a mortgagee has allowed his mortgagor to pay a portion of the mortgage-debt and realise a proportionate part of the mortgaged property, that does not thereby entitle the mortgagor or his representative to redeem the rest of the mortgaged property piecemeal. Again I may refer to the case of Ainsworth v. Wilding (15) which gives reasons for holding that a mortgagee is not bound to accept payment by driblets. If the question was merely one of an ordinary simple money debt, then this s. 14 does seem to me to provide a clear authority for allowing a debtor to tender not the entire debt that he owes his creditor, but a part of that debt, subject to the qualification, which I shall deal with later, that he tenders it as a part payment and not in full satisfaction of his debt, and that thereupon all further interest shall cease on the amount that he has actually tendered. It is still good law, for it was declared by s. 5 of the Laws Local Extent Act, XV of 1874, to be in force in the whole of the Bombay Presidency, except the scheduled districts such as Sind, and even in Sind it is in force, as it was subsequently extended thereto by another notification. It is not repealed by the Transfer of Property Act although it may be noted that the following s. 15 is so repealed; nor is it repealed by the Indian Contract Act. Then under s. 2, cl. (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, and s. 1, last paragraph, of the Indian Contract Act, it is provided that nothing contained in either of those Acts shall be deemed to affect the provisions of any enactment not expressly repealed by either of them, so that there is very clear ground for saying that this s. 14 of Bombay Regulation of 1827 is still in force in the Presidency Town of Bombay, as well as the rest of the Bombay Presidency. It follows that the rule adopted in cases like Watson & Co. v. Dhonendra Chunder Mookerjee (16) about the tender of a part of the money debt, is clearly not good law, so far as regards simple money debts in the Bombay Presidency. In Behari Lall v. Ram Ghulam (17), the judgment of the Court says :—

"It seems to us that where no stipulation or covenant has been made between the contracting parties as to payment of a sum borrowed, the lender is entitled to decline to receive payment of a sum due to him in instalments, and he can claim that the whole sum due be paid at one and the same time. Such seems to us to be the principle which governs the payment of moneys lent in English Law, and we know of no opposite authority in the Indian law."

I respectfully submit that, so far as this Presidency is concerned, there is clear authority to the contrary in this s. 14. But coming back to the particular point that arises here, namely, in the case of a mortgagor seeking to redeem the entire mortgage and tendering only a part of the mortgage-debt really due, the question is whether this s. 14, so far as it relates to a tender of part of a debt, can be held to apply to a case of that kind. This only reported case that I have been able to discover where s. 14 of this Regulation is referred to is that of Kamaya Naik v. Devapa Rudra Naik (18). That was a case of a suit for redemption, where the mortgagors had admittedly offered to pay an insufficient amount and Mr. Bhandarkar in his arguments for the plaintiffs, who were the mortagors, says :—

"When we made the tender in 1890, s. 14 of Regulation V of 1827 was in force, and it laid down that as soon as tender was made, interest should cease. The notice we gave requested the defendant to go to a certain house and there receive Rs. 80. The tender was sufficient. The plaintiffs then believed that they had offered the whole amount that was due."

In the judgment of the learned Chief Justice Farran, no reference is made to this particular argument. The passage which relates to this offer merely says :—

"It follows that the offer to redeem by paying Rs. 80, which the plaintiff-mortgagor made by his registered letter in April, 1890 (Ex. 35), was an offer of an insufficient amount which the defendant was not bound to accept. The lower Courts have treated this offer as a tender, and no objection appears to have been made to its sufficiency as such by the defendant. A mere offer by letter to pay an amount is not, however, usually treated as a tender either in law or in equity—Fisher on Mortgages, page 912. In order to stop interest, a strict tender should be proved—Coote on Mortgages, page 959, (5th Ed)."

So that the judgment really proceeded on the ground that there had not really been a tender which could operate, and accordingly it was not necessary to consider how far, if at all, s. 14 of this Regulation applied to the case; unless at any rate, when the judgment says that the offer was one of an insufficient amount which the defendant was not bound to accept, it impliedly refused to accept the contention that s. 14 could apply to a case of that kind. Section 14 is expressed in very unambiguous terms and of course ordinarily it must be given its proper effect. There are also difficulties in the way of restricting its effect by the principles of construction which are often applied in such a case. Thus it might be said that s. 84 of the Transfer of Property Act is a special enactment in regard to the cessation of interest on tenders in the case of mortgage transactions, which constitutes an exception to the provisions of the general enactment contained in this s. 14; and that it constitutes an exception just in the same way as, when you get a Statute which contains a particular enactment and a general enactment, and the latter taken in its most comprehensive sense would overrule the former, the law of construtions is that the particular enactment must be operative, and the general enactment must be taken to affect only the other part of the Statute to which it may properly apply. On this point, reference may be made to Hardcastle's Statutory Law, pages 229 and 239 of the 3rd Edition. But in the way of such a contention come the provisions of s. 2 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act and s. 1 of the Indian Contract Act, to which I have already referred, and which say that nothing contained in either of these Acts shall be deemed to affect the provisions of an enactment not expressly repealed, such as s. 14 of Bombay Regulation V of 1827; for, if you say that s. 84 of the Transfer of Property Act is to be taken as an exception to the general provisions of s. 14 of the Regulation, you certainly do "affect" the latter enactment; so that I do not adopt that particular contention. But I think that obviously s. 14 should be qualified to some extent. In the first place, it must, I think, be read as if the words "in the absence of a contract to the contrary" preceded the operative words of the section. For it is a general rule that every man may renounce a benefit or waive a privilege which the law has conferred upon him, at any rate so long as it does not prejudice the rights of third persons: see Broom's Legal Maxims, 7th Edition, page 535; and, therefore, if a contract expressly provides that, in order that interest shall cease, the entire debt due must be tendered, I do not think that any Court would hold that the contract should not be given effect to.

But another point that I think is still stronger is this. It is a general rule of construction in England that Statutes which limit or extend common law rights must be expressed in clear and unambiguous language, and that general words are not to be so construed as to alter the common law, or the previous policy of the law, if a sense or meaning can be applied to them consistent with the intention of preserving the existing policy untouched; see Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXVII, Arts. 283 and 284, pages 150 and 152. Now, when a debtor tenders to a creditor really part of his debt, not the entire debt, and asks him to take that in full satisfaction of the debt, it is clear law that the creditor is entitled to refuse to accept the tender. because otherwise he would virtually preclude himself from saying that he had not been paid the full amount due: see Addison's Law of Contracts, 10th Edition, page 154. That is an obviously logical principle. which has been laid down from early days in English Law, and it is part of the common law which would clearly be given very great weight by any English Court in dealing with a provision of this kind. I am sure the Court would construe this s. 14, if possible. so as to be consistent with that part of the common law, and the same rule is in fact enacted for India by s. 38 of the Indian Contract Act, which says that an offer of performance must be unconditional. If you go and attach to your offer to pay a debt the condition that the creditor must accept it as full satisfaction, although really it is not the whole amount due, you attach a condition to your offer and the creditor is entitled to reject it. That is in fact the principle on which Wilson, J., decided a case of that kind in Kanye Lall Khan v. Khetramoney Dossee (19) and so far as s. 38 of the Indian Contract Act is inconsistent with s. 14 of the Regulation it might be said that s. 14 must be construed subject to the exception, which s. 38 provides for. But again the difficulty arises that if you do that, you are allowing s. 38 of the Indian Contract Act to "affect" the provisions of a Regulation which has not been expressly repealed by the Indian Contract Act, contrary to s. 1 of the Act. But against that I think the Court is fully justified in saying that s. 38 of the Indian Contract Act only reproduces what was the old law applicable not only in England but in India prior to the enactment of the Indian Contract Act, and that if this question had come before a Court prior to the enactment of the Indian Contract Act, the Court would inevitably have said that s. 14 of the Regulation cannot be construed in such a wide sense as entirely to abrogate this rule of common law. That at any rate is the view I take on the subject after careful consideration of the point. I think it would obviously lead to very great inconvenience and absurdity, if this general provision in s. 14 were construed otherwise. So that, even leaving out of account s. 38 of the Indian Contract Act and s. 84 of the Transfer of Property Act, I hold that, if a debtor-mortgagor tenders an insufficient sum in payment of the entire mortgage-debt due from him and asks (as the mortgagor did in this case) that the mortgagee shall accept that tender as being the full amount due to him under his mortgage, then s. 14 will not operate to allow cessation of interest on the insufficient amount tendered.

PATNA HIGH COURT.
FULL BENCH.

SECOND APPEAL No. OF 1924.

December 23, 1924.

Present:—Sir Dawson Miller, KT., Chief Justice, Justice Sir B. K. Mullick, KT., Justice Sir Jwala Prasad, KT., Mr. Justice Das, and Mr. Justice Foster.

KRISHNA MOHAN SINHA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

RAGHUNANDAN PANDEY—DEFENDANT - RESPONDENT.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 5—Taxing Officer, whether has jurisdiction to determine valuation.

Held, per Curiam (Das, J., dissenting).—The Taxing Officer or the Taxing Judge, as the case may be, is under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act the proper person to determine the fee payable on a memorandum of appeal presented to the High Court, and for this purpose he may investigate the question of proper valuation of the subject-matter of the appeal and his decision on the point is final. Even if he should make a manifest mistake in the exercise of his jurisdiction his decision is not subject to an appeal to, or review by, the Court itself. [p. 142, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Miller, C. J. and Mullick, J.—It is desirable that the Taxing Officer in determining questions of valuation should not, as a rule, base his decision merely upon allegations in the plaint as to the annual profits of the property to be valued. In order to arrive at a proper decision of such questions it is better that the parties should be called upon to produce, in such manner as may be convenient, such documentary or other evidence as they may be prepared to tender to enable him to decide the question [p. 142, col. 2.]

Per Mullick, J.—Where the High Court has delegated its jurisdiction to a Taxing Officer, it has no jurisdiction left to do any of the acts which it could otherwise have performed, and if the Taxing Officer cannot decide a question of valuation no other authority can discharge that duty. [p. 149, col. 1.]

Per Jawala Prasad, J.—In order that the decision of the Taxing Officer or Taxing Judge should be final there must be a contest between the officer whose duty it is to see that proper Court-fee is paid and the suitor, and an opportunity must be given to the parties to the contest, namely, the suitor and the Government, to be heard. The decision cannot be final if the question is determined ex parte and without giving an opportunity to the suitor to show, by adducing evidence or otherwise, what the value of the subject-matter of the appeal, and consequently the amount of Court-fee payable, should be. [p. 145, col. 2.]

Per Das, J.—The Taxing Officer has no jurisdiction to decide a question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of Court-fee payable by the appellant either on his plaint or on his memorandum of appeal, and if he assumes jurisdiction to decide such a question the Court may ignore his decision. [p. 152, col. 2.]

Messrs. N. C. Sinha and B. B. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—The question for determination in this appeal is formulated in the Order of Reference thus:—"Has the Taxing Officer jurisdiction to decide a question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of Court-fee payable by the appellant either on his plaint or on his memorandum of appeal under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act and if he assumes such a jurisdiction has the High Court any power to interfere?"

The Taxing Officer has not in fact assumed any jurisdiction to determine the fee payable on the plaint or on the memorandum of appeal in the lower Courts. The only order he has made relates to the fee payable by the appellant on the memorandum of appeal in this Court and no question arises for determination as to the Taxing Officer's powers with regard to fees payable in the subordinate Courts. I propose, therefore, to confine my judgment to his powers with regard to the fee payable upon the memorandum of appeal presented in this Court.

The facts are as follows:—The plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, sued in the Court of the Munsif at Bhagalpur for a declaration of title and for possession, together with mesne profits for two years, in respect of 3 bighas 10 cottahs 2 dhurs of jagir land. The mesne profits claimed for two years were valued in the plaint at Rs. 146-12-0. The land was valued at Rs. 11 being ten times the Government Revenue proportionate to the land claimed, making a total of Rs. 157-12-0. The Court-fee was paid on that valuation. The Trial Court considered that the Court-fee payable on the land should be calculated not on the Government Revenue but on the market value as provided in s. 7 (v) (d) of the Court Fees Act. The plaint was then amended by valuing the land at Rs. 70. This valuation was accepted in the Trial Court and the deficiency of the Court-fee in proportion to the higher valuation was paid. The plaintiff succeeded in the Trial Court and the defendant appealed to the Subordinate Judge paying a Court-fee on his memorandum of appeal upon the value above stated. The appeal succeeded and the plaintiff-filed a second appeal to this Court paying a Court-fee on his memorandum of appeal based upon the same valuation. The Stamp Reporter whose duty it is to see that the proper fee is paid upon documents presented in this Court reported that the claim was under-valued because it was manifest that if the mesne profits amounted in round figures to Rs. 70 per annum as stated in the plaint the market value of the land must be more than Rs. 70. He considered that the value of the land based upon the yearly profits alleged in the plaint would not be less than Rs. 1,260 or 18 years' purchase. He reported that the memorandum of appeal in this Court was insufficiently stamped and that the plaint and memorandum of appeal in the Trial Court and the lower Appellate Court respectively were also insufficiently stamped. The appellant being aggrieved the matter was referred under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act, 1870, to the Taxing Officer who found that the Stamp Reporter had correctly valued the land and that the Court-fee was payable on the increased valuation. He allowed the appellant three weeks' time to make up the deficiency on the memorandum of appeal failing which he directed the appeal to be placed before the Bench for orders. The appellant considering that the Taxing Officer was acting without jurisdiction refused to pay the Court-fee within the time ordered and the case came before the Bench for disposal. The appellant contended that the Taxing Officer had no jurisdiction to consider the question of valuation of the subject-matter of the suit for the purpose of deciding the amount of fee payable on the memorandum of appeal and that his order was ultra vires and not binding. It was contended on the other hand that the Taxing Officer had jurisdiction and that his order was final. The Bench before whom the case came, considered that the Taxing Officer had exceeded his powers and, differing from the earlier decision of this Court in Ramsekhar Prasad Singh v. Sheonandan Dubey (1), referred the case to a Full Bench formulating the question of law as above stated.

The Court Fees Act of 1870 as amended by subsequent legislation is divided into seven Chapters which, as indicated by their heading, purport to deal with different subject-matters. Section 5 under which the Taxing Officer acted in this case is included in Chapter II which is headed "Fees in the High Courts and in the Courts of Small Causes at the Presidency Towns." It provides as follows:—

"5. When any difference arises between the officer whose duty it is to see that any fee is paid under this Chapter and any suitor or attorney, as to the necessity of paying a fee or the amount thereof, the question shall, when the difference arises in any of the said High Courts, be referred to the Taxing Officer, whose decision thereon shall be final, except when the question is, in his opinion, one of general importance, in which case he shall refer it to the final decision of the Chief Justice of such High Court, or of such Judge of the High Court as the Chief Justice shall appoint either generally or specially in this behalf.

"When any such difference arises in any of the said Courts of Small Causes, the question shall be referred to the Clerk of the Court, whose decision thereon shall be final, except when the question is, in his opinion, one of general importance, in which case he shall refer it to the final decision of the First Judge of such Court.

"The Chief Justice shall declare who shall be Taxing Officer within the meaning of the first paragraph of this section."

In determining what is meant by fees paid under this Chapter the heading is important but reference must also be made to ss. 3 and 4. Section 3 provides as follows:—

"3 The fees payable for the time being to the clerks and officers (other than the Sheriffs and attorneys) of the High Courts established by Letters Patent by virtue of the power conferred by s. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or s. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, or chargeable in each of such Courts under No. 11 of the first, and Nos. 7, 12, 14, 20 and 21 of the Second Schedule to this Act annexed; and the fees for the time being chargeable in the Courts of Small causes at the Presidency Towns, and their several offices, shall be collected in manner hereinafter appearing."

The reference to the Government of India Act of 1915 was added by an amending Statute passed in 1917. The mode of collecting the fees mentioned in s. 3 is dealt with in s. 25 which provides that they shall be collected by stamps. The fees mentioned in s. 3 are such as would be payable in the High Courts under their ordinary original jurisdiction or in appeals from orders or decrees passed in the exercise of such jurisdiction and this is indicated in the margin by the words "Levy of fees in the High Courts on their original sides." Section 4, on the other hand, as the marginal notes indicate deals with the fees on documents coming before the High Courts in the exercise of their appellate or revisional jurisdiction in cases coming from the subordinate Courts, or in their extraordinary original jurisdiction. It provides, in effect, that none of the documents mentioned in the First or Second Schedules of the Act as chargeable with fees shall be filed, exhibited or recorded in, or shall be received or furnished by a High Court exercising the jurisdiction named unless the same are sufficiently stamped as provided in the Schedules. The section is a prohibition against the use of improperly stamped documents and in that sense may be said to make the fees on those documents payable, at least in so far as they are payable in High Courts. Section 6 which comes under Ch. III contains a similar prohibition in respect to the subordinate Courts. It would seem, therefore, that s. 5 which is part of Ch. II is referring to those fees mentioned in s. 4 which are payable in the High Courts when it refers to the duty to see that any fee is paid under this Chapter. Such fees would include a memorandum of appeal presented in the High Court in appeals from subordinate Courts and, if such a document requires to be stamped and a question arises between the Stamp Reporter, who is the officer charged with the duty mentioned in s. 5, and the suitor as to the amount thereof, the Taxing Officer, who is the Registrar in this Court, is the proper person to determine the question and unless he refers it to the Taxing Judge his decision is final.

The first question is whether such a document repuires a stamp. If a memorandum of appeal presented in a High Court when exercising the jurisdiction mentioned in s. 4 is a document referred to in either of the Schedules then until sufficiently stamped as prescribed in the Schedule it cannot be received in the High Court and the appeal is not properly instituted.

A difficulty arises at the outset owing to the wording of Sch. I, Art. 1 which prescribes the stamp fee for, inter alia, a memorandum of appeal. The language of Art. 1 of Sch. I would appear to exclude such documents when presented in a High Court. The documents there mentioned are those presented in any Civil or Revenue Court except those mentioned in s. 3. The Courts mentioned in s. 3 are High Courts and certain of the Small Cause Courts. Section 4 carries the case no further, for the prohibition in that section against the reception of documents extends only to documents of the kinds specified in either of the Schedules. We are, therefore, driven back to the Schedules. If the documents specified in Art. 1, Sch. I, are those presented in Courts other than High Courts and Small Cause Courts, there would appear to be no provision for stamping a memorandum of appeal presented in a High Court. The Act can hardly have been intended to exclude so important a document as a memorandum of appeal presented in the High Court exercising appellate jurisdiction and so far as I am aware the point has not been definitely raised but it has always been assumed that it was included. The wording of this Act is in some respects certainly unscientific and difficult to interpret and its interpretation has been the subject of a multitude of decisions in the Courts. It seems to me that the intention was to include a memorandum of appeal presented in the High Court amongst the documents referred to in s. 4, the words "documents of any of the kinds specified in the First or Second Schedules" being a description of the documents mentioned in the Schedules without reference to the words of exclusion appearing in Art. 1 of Sch. I. Or it may be that Sch. I, Art. 1 was intended to exclude from the documents there named only those presented to the High Courts on their original sides and the Small Cause Courts. In either case the wording is unfortunate. But as the point was conceded in argument it need not be futher discussed.

The substantial question which was argued before us was whether in ascertaining the fee payable on the memorandum of appeal presented to the High Court on appeal from the subordinate Courts the question of valuation can be taken into account by the Taxing Officer to whom the matter has been referred, or whether the Taxing Officer is bound by the valuation appearing on the memorandum of appeal where such valuation has been accepted in the lower Court either without question or after contest.

The wording of s. 5 is undoubtedly wide enough to cover any question which may arise, including valuation, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of fee payable in the High Court. It is contended, however, that all questions of valuation are under s. 12 to be determined by the lower Court and that the decision there arrived at is final and cannot be disturbed except under the express conditions referred to in the second clause of s. 12 which is contained in Ch. III. That Chapter is headed "Fees in other Courts and in Public Offices." Section 12 provides as follows:—

"I. Every question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of any fee chargeable under this Chapter on a plaint or memorandum of appeal shall be decided by the Court in which such plaint or memorandum, as the case may be, is filed, and such decision shall be final as between the parties to the suit.

II. But whenever any such suit comes before a Court of Appeal, Reference or Revision, if such Court considers that the said question has been wrongly decided to the detriment of the revenue, it shall require the party by whom such fee has been paid to pay so much additional fee as would have been payable had the question been rightly decided, and the provisions of s. 10, paragraph ii, shall apply."

It should be mentioned that ss. 9 and 10 in the same Chapter provide machinery for ascertaining the value of land and houses, the subject-matter of a suit when the Court thinks that the value has been wrongly estimated to the detriment of the revenue. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the power given under clause ii of s. 12 is confined to the Court of appeal in which the question arises and that the Taxing Officer is not the Court for the purposes of s. 12. Assuming without deciding that this contention is accurate it seems clear, in my opinion, that s. 12 has no application to a question of Court-fees payable on a memorandum of appeal presented to a High Court but only applies to the fees payable in other Courts. It is true the High Court would have the power conferred by clause ii but the fees dealt with or the fees paid in the lower Court, for the fees dealt with in Ch. III which includes s. 12 are stated to be the fees in other Courts and in Public Offices, that is in Courts other than those referred to in Ch. II, and questions relating to the fees payable in the High Court are not governed by any of the provisions in Ch. III unless it should appear from the context that they are necessarily included. It was suggested that Ch. III which includes ss. 6 to 19 does in fact in some cases, deal with fees payable in the High Court and s. 8 was referred to as an instance. This section deals with the fee payable on a memorandum of appeal against an order relating to compensation under any Land Acquisition Act for the time being in force, and under the land Acquisition Act of 1894 such appeals lie only to the Hight Court. The section, however, is not inconsistent with the heading of Ch. III, for in 1870, when the Court Fees Act was passed, by the Land Acquisition Act then in force such appeals lay to the District Judge and no inference can be drawn from this section that Ch. III was intended to deal with fees payable in the High Court. Section 15 was also referred to which provides for re-payment in certain cases of so much of the fee paid on an application for review as exceeds the fee payable on any other application to the Court under the Second Schedule, Art. 1, cl. (b) or cl. (d) where the Court reverses or modifies on review its former decision. Clause (d) in Art. 1 of the Second Schedule is an application presented to High Court. The fee, therefore, re-payable may be part of the fee paid upon an application for review in the High Court as the section now stands. But this also it must be remembered, is a piece of patch work legislation. In the Act as originally passed the words "plaint or memorandum of appeal" appeared instead of the word "application" and, although the word "application" was substituted in place of the words "plaint or memorandum of appeal" by a later Act of the same year, it would appear that the fee actually recoverable under the Act, as originally passed, was part of that paid on the plaint or memorandum of appeal. This was an obvious blunder and had to be rectified by an amending Act. As already stated in another connection the drafting of this Act is somewhat unscientific and its interpretation certainly gives rise to considerable difficulty, but even if there should be found in Ch. III an issolated instance of reference to fees payable in a High Court I think that the intention of the Act was to deal in that Chapter with fees payable in the subordinate Courts only unless the contrary must necessarily be inferred from the context.

The High Court may undoubtedly under the second clause of s. 12 require a party to pay an additional fee upon the plaint or memorandum of appeal in the lower Court and this power is conferred on the Court itself as distinguished from the Taxing Officer whose powers are confined under s. 5 to the fees payable in the High Court. Similarly, in my opinion, the fees mentioned in the first clause of s. 12 are those payable on a plaint or memorandum of appeal in the subordinate Courts and the section does not impose upon the High Court as distinguished from the Taxing Officer and the Taxing Judge the duty of deciding questions relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of the fee chargeable in the High Court on a memorandum of appeal. The powers of the High Court in this respect in so far as the fees payable in that Court are concerned are delegated under s. 5 to the Taxing Officer and the Taxing Judge. It would be contrary to the intention of the Act to allow the High Court to go into questions of valuation when no machinery is provided in Ch. II similar to that given in Ch. III for determining such questions. Sections 9 and 10 of Ch. III give the other Courts power to issue a commission to hold a local or such other investigation as may be necessary to determine the value of the subject-matter of suit but no express provision for this purpose is made in Ch. II. I am not much impressed by this argument, for once it is determined that the power of the High Courts to decide the amount of the fee payable on the memorandum of appeal presented in those Courts is delegated to the Taxing Officer and the Taxing Judge under s. 5 those officers could always if need be require evidence to be produced before them and to hold an investigation as to the value of the subject-matter for they would have all the powers incidental to the discharge of those duties which the High Court itself possessed.

In my opinion the Taxing Officer or Taxing Judge as the case may be, is under s. 5 the proper person to determine the fee payable on a memorandum of appeal presented to the High Court and, for this purpose, he may investigate the question of the proper valuation of the subject-matter of the appeal. Even under s. 12, cl. i it would appear that in the subordinate Courts it is the Appellate Court which alone can decide the question of valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of fee chargeable on the memorandum of appeal presented in that Court and for this purpose it could, if necessary, exercise the powers conferred by ss. 9 and 10. It can also, as can the High Court, exercise the powers conferred by cl. ii of s. 12 if it thinks the question has been wrongly decided in the Court below. It would, I think, be an anomalous state of affairs if the High Court alone had no power to decide the question of valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of the fee chargeable on the memorandum of appeal presented before it, a power which the lower Appellate Court possesses in determining the amount payable on its own memorandum of appeal. The scheme of the Act appears to me to be that in the subordinate Courts under s. 12 the Trial Court alone has power to decide what is the proper valuation for the purpose of determining the fee payable on the plaint and the Appellate Court alone has the like power with regard to the memoramdum of appeal presented in that Court even if the Trial Court has arrived at a different valuation, and each Court's decision is final subject to the provisions of the second clause of s. 12. Under s. 5 the High Court also has similar powers with regard to its own memorandum of appeal which powers, however, are delegated to the Taxing Officer or the Taxing Judge whose decision again is final. Even if those officers should make a manifest mistake in the exercise of their jurisdiction their decision is not subject to appeal to or review by the Court itself. In the present case I consider that the Taxing Officer was acting within his jurisdiction and his decision cannot be disturbed by this Bench. As the appellant has deliberately elected not to pay the fee ordered by the Taxing Officer after time was given to him for that purpose but has chosen to rely upon his right to question the Taxing Officer's jurisdiction I think that his memorandum of appeal should be rejected as not having been properly presented in time.

Before condluding this judgment I desire to point out that although there was some evidence before the Taxing Officer upon which he might arrive at a decision on the question before him it is essentially desirable that the Taxing Officer in determining questions of valuation should not, as a rule base his decision merely upon allegations in the plaint as to the annual profits of the property to be valued. It may be that such valuation was over-estimated in the plaint as some times happens. In order to arrive at a proper decision on such questions it would be better that the parties should be called upon to produce in such manner as may be convenient such documentary or other evidence as they may be prepared to tender to enable him to decide the question. He will then be in a position to deal adequately with the matters in dispute.

Jwala Prased, J.—The question referred to us for decision runs thus:—

Has the Taxing Officer jurisdiction to decide the question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of Court-fee payable by the appellant either on his plaint or on his memorandum of appeal under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act and if he assumes such a jurisdiction has the High Court any power to interfere."

Now, what is the power of the Taxing Officer under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act (Act VII of 1870)? That section occurs under Ch. II of the Court Fees Act headed "Fees in the High Courts and the Courts of the Small Causes at the Presidency Town," and it runs as follows:—

"When any difference arises between the officer whose duty it is to see that any fee is paid under this Chapter and any suitor or attorney, as to the necessity of paying a fee or the amount thereof, the question shall, when the difference arises in any of the said High Courts, be referred to the Taxing Officer, whose decision thereon shall be final, except when the question is, in his opinion, one of general importance, in which case he shall refer it to the final decision of the Chief Justice of such Court, or of such Judge of the High Court as the Chief Justice shall appoint either generally or specially in this behalf."

We are not concerned with paragraph 2 of that section which relates to the Courts of Small Causes. Paragraph 3 of the section says that the Chief Justice shall declare who shall be Taxing Officer within the meaning of the first paragraph of the section. Under this paragraph the Chief Justice of this Court has appointed the Registrar as the Taxing Officer. The Stamp Reporter is the Officer whose duty under the first paragraph of the section it is to see that proper fee is paid under Ch. II of the Court Fees Act. Chapter II which relates to fees in the High Courts consists of three sections, namely, ss. 3, 4 and 5. Section 3 relates to levy of fees in High Courts on their original sides. This High Court has no original jurisdiction and therefore we are not concerned with that section.

Section 4 deals with fees on documents coming before the High Courts in the exercise of their appellate or revisional jurisdiction in cases coming from the subordinate Courts or in their extraordinary original jurisdiction. It provides that no document of any of the kinds specified in the First or Second Schedule of the Act chargeable with fees shall be filed, exhibited or recorded in, or shall be received or furnished by a High Court exercising the jurisdiction named, "unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated in any of the said Schedule as the proper fee for such document." A memorandum of appeal is a document within the meaning of this section: Balkaran Rai v. Gobind Nath Tewari (2). Thus if a memorandum of appeal is filed in the High Court the Court-fee leviable will have to be determined with respect to Schs. I and II. Memorandum of appeal is mentioned in Art. 1, Sch. I and Arts. 11, 17, 20 and 21 of Sch. II. Articles 11, 17, 20 and 21 of Sch. II have prescribed fixed sums to be payable on memoranda of appeal filed in any Court and no question of valuation arises for the purposes of determining the Court-fee payable in those cases. Article 1 of Sch. I applies to memoranda of appeals presented to any Civil or Revenue Court except those mentioned in s. 3. Section 4 not having been excepted, a memorandum of appeal filed in the High Court will come under this article though it is not happily worded. The amount of fee payable under this Article depends upon "the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute" as mentioned in column 2 of the Schedule. Therefore, in order to ascertain the amount of fee payable upon a memorandum of appeal under Art. 1, Sch. I, the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute has to be determined.

In order to ascertain the fee payable upon a memorandum of appeal coming under the aforesaid Arts. 11, 17, 20 and 21 of Sch. II, the nature of the document has to be determined. For instance, in order to apply Art. 11 of that schedule it has to be ascertained whether the appeal is from a decree or an order having the force of a decree. If it is from a decree or an order having the force of a decree, Art. 11 does not apply and the Court-fee payable will be upon "the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute" under Art. 1 of Sch. I. Similarly, in order to apply Art. 17 of Sch. II it will have to be ascertained as to whether the memorandum of appeal is with respect to suits enumerated therein. For instance, whether or not it is with respect to a suit to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed. Likewise, the nature of the appeal will have to be ascertained in order to apply Arts. 20 and 21 of Sch. II. Therefore, in order to find out whether a memorandum of appeal filed in the High Court is properly stamped under the Schs. I and II, the nature of the suit, the nature of the decree or order appealed from or the amount or the value of the subject-matter in dispute as the case may be, will have to be determined. Upon the determination of this question will depend the proper Court-fee payable under Schs. I and II. There are certain documents which need not bear any Court-fee, such as, a written statement which does not plead a set off or a counter-claim. Therefore, the question as to the necessity of paying a fee with respect to a document filed in the High Court, say with respect to suits tried by the High Court in its extraordinary original jurisdiction, will have also to be determined and for this purpose the nature of the document has to be ascertained. Therefore, two questions arise with respect to a document filed, exhibited or recorded in or received, or furnished by a High Court, namely, (1) the necessity of paying a fee and (2) the amount of fee payable.

Reading s. 4 and Schs. I and II the fee payable upon a document filed in the High Court is a fee payable under Ch. II of the Court Fees Act.

Under s. 5 of the Act it is the duty of the officer appointed in this behalf by the High Court, say, the Stamp Reporter, to see whether and what fee is payable under Ch. II upon a document filed, exhibited or recorded in, or received or furnished by the High Court. His duty is to see under what Articles or Schs. I and II the aforesaid document falls. If it is a document with respect to which a fee is to be paid under the said Schedules it is his duty to find out the amount of the fee leviable upon it. Therefore, with respect to a memorandum of appeal filed in the High Court it is the duty of the Stamp Reporter as an officer of the Court to determine under which Article of the said schedules the document falls and the amount of fee payable with respect thereto. If he finds that the memorandum of appeal falls under Art. 1 of Sch. I of the Act, he has to find out "the amount or value of the subject-matter" as stated in column 2 of the Article in order to determine the amount of fee payable under column 3 of that Schedule. In other words, he has to determine the value of the subject-matter in dispute, for without it the amount of fee payable cannot be ascertained. Therefore, the question of valuation is involved in the determination of the amount payable upon a memorandum of appeal. If the suitor contests the amount fixed by the Stamp Reporter, a difference arises between him and the officer whose duty it is to see that proper fee is paid under Ch. II of the Court Fees Act upon the memorandum of appeal. When such a difference arises the question shall be referred to the Taxing Officer. This contest gives rise to an issue and that issue has to be determined by the Taxing Officer. The issue may be with respect to the nature of the document in order to find out in which category of the Schedules the document falls, or it may be as to the value of the subject-matter in dispute upon which the amount of fee payable depends. In the latter case the question of valuation is involved in the determination of the issue. The Taxing Officer has, therefore, jurisdiction to determine the question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of Court-fee payable under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act.

It has, however, been argued at the Bar that if the Legislature had intended to give jurisdiction to the Taxing Officer to determine questions of valuation under s. 5 of the Act, provisions similar to ss. 9 and 10 in Ch. III would have been made in Ch. II providing proper machinery for the purpose of determining valuation. As was pointed out in the Full Bench case of Amjad Ali v. Muhammad Israil (3), the procedure enjoyed by the Statute and the practice of the High Court and of the District Courts is so very different in these matters that no useful analogy can be drawn from them. The duty of determining the fees in the subordinate Courts, original and appellate, under s. 6, Ch. III of the Act rests in those Courts, whereas such a duty is cast upon the officer appointed under s. 5 of the Act with respect to fees payable on documents filed in the High Court. The subordinate Courts have been given powers under ss. 9 and 10 of Ch. III to determine the net profits or market value of the subject-matter in dispute. In the High Court the duty of determining the fee payable upon a document, such as memorandum of appeal presented to the High Court, is cast upon the officer appointed under s. 5 of the Act to see that proper fee has been paid. It is only when a difference arises between the said officer and the suitor that the matter is referred to the Taxing Officer for his decision. The power of deciding the question given to the Taxing Officer implies the power to make an enquiry as to the amount payable upon the document, and if the amount of Court-fee payable depends upon valuation the Taxing Officer has power to inquire into question relating to valuation. Therefore, in vesting the Taxing Officer with power to give decision with respect to a dispute between the suitor and the officer of the Court referred to therein as to the amount of fee payable depending upon the value of the subject-matter in dispute the Legislature has impliedly vested the Taxing Officer with power to make inquiries into the question of valuation and to fix the amount of Court-fee payable.

Lastly it has been argued that cl. (ii) of s. 12 gives power to the High Court to determine the question of valuation in order to determine the proper fee payable upon a plaint or memorandum of appeal when the matter comes before it in appeal, reference or revision. That clause relates only to plaint and memorandum of appeal filed in the subordinate Courts, and does not relate to memorandum of appeal filed in the High Court, and the power given thereunder can only be used when the question of valuation is wrongly decided by the Courts "to the detriment of the revenue." Therefore, the contention based upon s. 12 is not tenable. Besides, the language of s. 12 is different from that of s. 5. Under s. 12 it is merely the decision of the subordinate Courts as to valuation, and not as to the category in which the suit or appeal falls which is final, whereas under s. 5 the decision of the Taxing Officer is final as to the amount of fee determined by him to be payable upon the memorandum of appeal or other documents filed in the High Court: no matter how he arrives at his conclusion, namely, by determining the valuation or the cateogry: Karan Singh v. Gopal Rai (4), (Tudball, J.)

It would thus appear that the Taxing Officer has not only jurisdiction to decide questions relating to valuation but that his decision thereupon shall be final for the purpose of determining the amount of Court-fee payable by the appellant on the plaint or the memorandum of appeal under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act and a Division Bench has no right to question it. This High Court has taken this view in the cases of Chanderbati Kuer v. Gorey Lal Singh (5), (Mullick and Atkinson, JJ.,) and Lagan Barat Kuar v. Khakhan Singh (6). The other High Courts took the same view: vide Khachera v. Kharag Singh (7) (Tudball, J.); Larkhur Chaube v. Ram Bhajan Chaube (8), Chhunnu Lal v. Bank of Upper India, Ltd., Delhi (9), Amjid Ali v. Muhammad Israil (3), Ranga Pai v. Baba (10), Shephard and Davies, JJ); Jugul Pershad Singh v. Parbhu Narain Jha (11), Badri Prasad v. Kundan Lal (12),(Edge, C. J.) Karan Singh v. Gopal Rai (4), (Tudball, J.,) and Balkaran Rai v. Gobind Nath Tewari (2), (Edge, C. J.).

Now in order that the decision of the Taxing Judge shall be final, the following conditions would seem to be necessary: (1) there must be a contest between the officer whose duty it is to see that proper Court-fee is paid and the suitor, and (2) that an opportunity is given to the parties to the contest, namely, the suitor and the Government. Therefore, the decision of the Taxing Officer cannot be final if he determines it ex parte and without giving an opportunity to the suitor to show by adducing evidence or otherwise what the value of the subject-matter of the appeal and consequently the amount of Court-fee payable should be: Jugal Prasad Singh v. Parbhu Narain Jha (11), Kasturi Chetti v. Deputy Collector, Bellary (13), (Collins, C. J. and Benson, J.) and Amjid Ali v. Muhammad Israil (3).

Apart from authorities, upon general principles also there can be no decision upon a contest between two disputants if the aforesaid principels are violated. There must, therefore, be an inquiry into the questions such as those relating to valuation in order to determine the amount of Court-fee payable under s. 5 by the Taxing Officer.

Now, let us examine the decision of the Taxing Officer in the present case in the light of the aforesaid principles. The learned Taxing Officer says: "The learned Vakil for the appellant appears to dispute the corrections of the Stamp Reporter, asking that it should be referred to the Bench. This is, however, a matter for the Taxing Officer so far as the appeal is concerned." In my opinion the Stamp Reporter has "rightly assessed the value of the land in dispute at Rs. 1,406-12 including mesne profits and Court-fee is payable on it. I allow three weeks' time to make good the deficiency on the memorandum of appeal, failing which place before the Bench for orders."

The appellant in the present case disputed the correctness of the stamp report. There was, therefore, a dispute as to difference between him and the Stamp Reporter as to the amount of fee payable. The Taxing Officer had, therefore, jurisdiction to determine the dispute and to give a decision thereupon under s. 5 of the Act. The suitor disputed the jurisdiction of the Taxing Officer and asked for a reference of the question to a Bench. The Taxing Officer refused this request and said that the matter was entirely for him to decide, and not for a Bench. So far it is all right. Thereafter, the Taxing Officer atonce says that in his opinion the Stamp Reporter rightly assessed the value of the land in dispute. It does not appear that the Taxing Officer exercised his mind to determine the question judicially, nor does he seem to have made any inquiry into the matter. The order sheet does not show that any opportunity was given to the appellant to prove the value of the land, that is, the subject-matter in dispute in the appeal. It is, therefore, doubtful whether his decision in the present case is in consonance with the principles enunciated above and whether his decision is final.

As set out in the beginning of the judgment the question referred to us for determination is a general one as to the jurisdiction of the Taxing Officer to decide the question relating to valuation for determining the amount of Court-fee payable by the appellant, and I would answer the question in the affirmative. I confess that I felt considerable difficulty in deciding this question. The difficulty felt by me was so insurmountable that I was almost inclined to say that the question raised by the Division Bench and referred to us for decision was incapable of solution, and it is after a long and careful consideration that I have tried to give effect to the plain words of the Statute in s. 5 of the Act. The Act is so inartistic and unscientific that upon every question of importance it hardly affords sufficient solution. For instance, there is no provision in the Act whereby the principles enunciated in s. 7 for the determination of the class applicable to suits and memoranda of appeals in the subordinate Courts can be applied to the memorandum of appeal filed in the High Court. Under s. 7 (5) the Court-fee payable is not upon the market value of the subject-matter of the land but upon the revenue assessed upon the land if it forms an entire estate or a definite share of an estate paying annual revenue to Government. Under s. 7 cl. (2) the Court-fee is payable not upon the value of the subject-matter of the suit but upon ten times the amount of maintenance or annuity payable for one year In other words, in certain classes of cases Court-fee is payable not upon the actual amount in claim but upon principles fixing some fictitious amount as the value of the suit. These principles are, however, in practice applied by the Stamp Reporter, the Taxing Officer and the Taxing Judge to appeals filed in the High Court, whereas under the strict construction of the law the amount of fee payable in the Courts below will be upon fictitious valuation under the principles enunciated in s. 7 and in the High Court in the appeals in those cases the amount of fee payable will be payable upon the actual amount or value of the subject matter in dispute under Sch. I, s. 7 not being applicable to the High Courts but only to the subordinate Courts. The power is given only to demand an additional fee in the interest of revenue and does not in any way give relief to a suitor from whom the subordinate Courts on account of any wrong decision as valuation have levied a higher fee than was payable upon the plaint or memorandum of appeal in those Courts, except in certain contingencies arising under s. 13 of the Act. It would appear that the Act does not purport to give any relief to a suitor from whom an improperly excessive fee has been taken in the subordinate Courts or in the High Court. Mr. Justice Mahmud while concurring with the decision of Chief Justice Sir John Edge in Balkaran Rai v. Gobind Nath Tewari (2) says: "The enactment, as the learned Chief Justice has explained, is most anxious to collect money from those who seek to obtain justice, but there is not one word in that Statute to enable the litigant who is to be subject to these stringent rules to re-obtain the sum of money which he, by dint of a wrongful user of the powers given to the Taxing Officer, does pay as Court-fee, say, for example, Rs. 3,000 instead of Rs. 10, as may be the case where difficulty may arise as to whether a suit or an appeal deals with a declaratory claim or a claim including reliefs of a consequential character. I mention this on purpose, as I hope that this enactment will soon be considered fit to be amended, and that a difficulty such as has arisen in this case may not arise in future, and that no pleas admiseri-cordiam such as were addressed in this very case might be made the subject of consideration by the Judges of a whole High Court established by Her Majesty's Charter. The stringency of the Act as it has been now interpreted is probably a good thing for the litigant, because it indicates the necessity of amendment in his behalf. I hold, following the views of Jeremy Bentham, that law taxes, the most stringent they are, the less do they achieve their aim, for they are stringent not in the interests of justice, but make the administration of justice difficult and in many cases impossible."

These are some of the anomalies, and I wish that the Act which is coming down from 1870 be soon placed on a scientific basis.

I have already discussed the actual question referred to us and I have indicated my answer. Accordingly, I agree with the learned Chief Justice in the answer proposed by him.

Mullick, J.—I agree with the judgment just delivered by the learned Chief Justice and I still think that the case of Ram Sekhar Prasad Singh v. Sheonandan Dubey (1), was rightly decided. The Court Fees Act in spite of its obscure drafting seems to me to lay down the following scheme for the taxation of plaints and memoranda of appeals.

Suits and memoranda of appeals are classified according to the subject-matter or the subject-matter in dispute or the nature of the relief claimed. Schedules I and II endeavour to give a comprehensive classification of the various kinds of suit with reference to these heads of classification. The Schedules also provide that the proper fee payable on some documents shall vary according to the Court in which they are filed and that in regard to others there shall be no such variance.

Again in Sch. II it is declared that the plaints and appeals in the suits therein specified shall bear the fixed fees prescribed, while in Sch. I are specified various suits in which the plaints and appeals shall bear an ad valorem fee. Article 1 of Sch. I provides that the fee payable on plaints and appeals in suits not otherwise provided for in this Act when presented to any Civil or Revenue Court except those mentioned in s. 3 of the Act shall be levied upon the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute according to certain rates given in a table at the end of the Schedule. The words, "not otherwise provided for in this Act" refer to certain sections in the body of the Act and to the remaining Articles of Schs. I and II.

Section 3 of the Act which falls in Ch. II provides that in respect of certain proceedings in the Original Side of a Chartered High Court and in all suits in the Small Cause Courts in Presidency Towns court fees on plaints and applications shall be collected in the manner provided in Ch. V of the Act. The section is not a charging section and merely prescribes the mode of collection. The fees leviable on the Original Side of a Chartered High Court and in the Presidency Small Cause Courts are prescribed by enactment other than the Court fees Act.

Section 4 of the Act is a charging section and declares that no document, which is chargeable under Shcs. I and II, shall be received in the High Court in exercise of its Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction or Extraordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction, or Appellate Jurisdiction, or its jurisdiction as a Court of Reference and revision unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated by either of the said Schedules as the proper fee for such document The language of the section when read with Art. 1, of Sch. I may raise a doubt as to the fee chargeable on a memorandum of appeal; but in my opinion the meaning of the Legislature is that the fee on a memorandum of appeal preferred in the High Court shall not be less than that which would have been payable on the document if it had been filed in the Courts referred to in Art. 1 Sch. I.

I next turn to Ch. III which deals with fees in Courts and Public Offices other than those referred to in Ch. II. Section 6 in this Chapter is the charging section and it declares that no plaint or memorandum of appeal shall be received unless in respect of it there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated in Schs. I or II as the proper fee for such document.

Let us next refer to the procedure to be followed when a plaint or a memorandum of appeal is filed in a Court other than a Chartered High Court or a Presidency Small Cause Court.

The Court will first of all decide into which of the various classes enumerated in Schs. I and II the document falls. This has sometimes been called deciding the category of the suit. The process involves the construction of the plaint and a determination of the real relief prayed for. It is essentially judicial and requires the Court to be a Statute to see that reliefs are not so cast as to secure an evasion of the Court Fees Act. A familiar instance is when declarations are only asked when consequential relief is the real claim.

The Court will then proceed to see whether the proper fee is a fixed fee under Sch. II or an ad valorem fee under Sch. I. No question or valuation arises if the fee is a fixed fee; but if an ad valorem fee is leviable then the Court will proceed to value the subject-matter or the subject-matter in dispute or fix the amount of the relief claimed according to rules for computation set out in ss. 7 and 8 of the Act. If a local or further investigation is necessary the Court may proceed under s. 9. This computation is the valuation referred in s. 11 of Ch. III and the Court's adjudication on a question relating thereto is final in respect of a plaint or memorandum of appeal under the first clause of s. 12.

It has been held that a question of valuation does not include a question of category and although the two questions may in practice often overlap and a decision on a question of valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of fee chargeable may involve a decision on the question of category, it has been conceded here before us that a decision on a question of category is not final within the meaning of clause (i) of s. 12, while a decision on a question of valuation pure and simple as defined above is final as between the parties to the suit. The second clause of s. 12 however, gives a Court of Appeal power to collect deficit Court-fees in respect of fees payable in subordinate Courts, and it seems now settled that the High Court as a Court of Appeal, Reference and Revision is competent to exercise this power in respect of all Courts subordinate to it.

Section 12 does not apply to the Original Side of the High Court but does the first clause of it apply to the Appellate Side of that Court? I think the answer is in the negative.

The scheme of the Act does not permit us to hold that the first clause is applicable to High Courts, and the heading of Ch. III in which s. 12 falls specifically states that this Chapter applies to fees in Courts other than those referred to in Ch. II. It is true that s. 8 deals with the fee payable in land acquisition appeals which lie now exclusively to the High Court and that s. 15 which also falls under Ch. III deals with the refund of Court-fees upon applications for review in certain Courts including the High Court. I agree with the learned Chief Justice that s. 8 does not raise any difficulty. When that section was first enacted, appeals in certain land acquisition cases lay to Courts other than the High Courts and the inclusion of the section in Ch. III of the present Act merely means that in the event of the former jurisdiction of these latter Courts being restored, the Court fee shall be computed in accordance with the section. The section does not in terms provide for fees on a memorandum of appeal to the High Court and in my opinion the charging section for such appeals still remains s. 4 of the Act.

With regard to s. 15, it is to be observed that the section deals not with the payment of fees but with refunds, and it does not assist us in deciding whether the first clause of s. 12 is applicable to a High Court. Further I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the reference to a High Court in this section is probably due to some carelessness in drafting and it seems to me that the proper place for the section was in Ch. VI which deals with miscellaneous matters.

Next let us inquire who is the authority competent to determine a question of valuation or a question of category with respect to a memorandum of appeal presented to a High Court on the Appellate Side. In my opinion s. 5 designates the authority. It prescribes that in all High Courts there shall be, firstly, an officer whose duty it is to receive the memorandum; secondly, an officer who shall be the Taxing Officer; and thirdly, when the Chief Justice so directs a Judge of the High Court who shall be appointed to determine disputes arising between the suitor and the Taxing Officer. It is not necessary to consider what would be the position if there was no Taxing Officer appointed; but the law states in clear and unequivocal language that so long as there is a Taxing Officer his decision shall be final as regards the amount of the Court-fee payable. This decision must include a determination not only on the question of category but also on the question of valuation. It is conceded that the Taxing Officer of this Court has jurisdiction to decide the question of category, but it is urged that he has no jurisdiction to decide a question of valuation which requires the exercise of judicial functions, and it is suggested that by s. 12 the High Court is the only authority that can decide that question.

Now in the first place I have already expressed the opinion that the first clause of s. 12 does not apply to High Courts and in the second place if it is sought to create jurisdiction by the application of s. 107 of the C. P. C. the answer is that in view of the unrestricted language of s. 5 of the Act it must be assumed that the Legislature intended to divest the Court and to transfer its jurisdiction to the Taxing Officer. The decision of a question of category often requires the exercise of judicial powers of a higher order than the decision of a question of valuation this is recognized in s. 12 which confers finality only as to the latter, and it could not have been intended to grant to the Taxing Officer jurisdiction as to the more difficult question and to deny it as to the less difficult.

If on the other hand it is contended that the Taxing Officer has jurisdiction neither to determine a question of category nor a question of valuation, then his jurisdiction must be limited to an exercise in arithmetic only and this could not possibly have been intended by the Act.

But it is pointed out that the Act provides nothing of the nature of s. 9 for the Taxing Officer. The answer to this is that the jurisdiction to fix the amount of the Court-fee being given the law implies that the Taxing Officer shall have power to adopt such procedure as may be necessary for the exercise of that jurisdiction. Certainly a Taxing Statute must be strictly construed, but in this case the power to hold an inquiry is in aid of the subject and in no way to his prejudice; nor is it repugnant to the Act. The fact is that where the High Court has delegated its jurisdiction to a Taxing Officer, it has no jurisdiction left to do any of the acts which it could otherwise have performed, and if the Taxing Officer cannot decide a question of valuation no other authority can discharge that duty.

I agree, however, that in the case before us the inquiry has been too summary and that the Taxing Officer would have been well advised to have called upon the suitor to give further evidence of the value of the subject-matter in dispute. The Taxing Officer had power either to take evidence himself or to refer the matter to the Trial Court, but though it is unfortunate that he preferred to rely on the somewhat meagre materials on the record it cannot be said that he has acted without jurisdiction. His decision is, therefore, final.

Das, J.—I adhere to the opinion which I have expressed in the Order of Reference. The question for consideration is whether the words employed by the Legislature in s. 4 of the Court Fees Act are of sufficient amplitude to authorize the special officer brought into existence by s. 5 to investigate a question of valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of any fee chargeable on the memorandum of appeal in the High Court. The liability of the suitor to pay the fee is determined by s. 4; s. 5 provides for the procedure to be adopted in cases of difference between the officer and the suitor as to the necessity of paying a fee or the amount thereof. It is not open to doubt that, unless an enquiry into the question of valuation is implied in the terms of s. 4, there is no power in the officer under s. 5 to undertake that enquiry.

It seems to me that s. 4 is clear on this point. That section provides, inter alia, that no document of any of the kinds specified in the First or Second Schedule to the Act annexed as Chargeable with fees, shall be filed, exhibited, or recorded in the High Court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated by either of the said Schedules as the proper fee for such document. The memorandum of appeal in this case is undoubtedly comprehended within the terms of s. 4; as expressly provided by that section, it is necessary for the suitor to pay a fee of an amount not less than that indicated in one or other of the Schedules as the proper fee for the memorandum of appeal, before the memorandum of appeal can be filed in this Court.

This is not denied. What is denied is that the special officer can correct the valuation and require the suitor to pay the fee on the cerrected valuation. I shall presently deal with the problem whether it is possible for the special officer to investigate the question of valuation in the absence of machinery enabling him to decide such a question. I am more concerned at the present moment to show that the authority to hold such an investigation is denied by the terms of s. 4.

Now I attach some importance to the words "such document" in the last clause of s. 4. In my opinion, these words clearly refer to the document sought to be filed exhibited or recorded in the High Court. Can it be said that the document as corrected or rectified by the officer is "such document", within the meaning of s. 4, in respect of which the officer is entitled to claim a fee from the suitor? In this case the appellants tendered a memorandum of appeal, valuing the subject-matter of the appeal at Rs. 70. The valuation is part of the document as tendered by the appellants ; and if I am right in the view which I have taken, all that the officer had to do was to refer to to the tables of rates of ad valorem fees in the Act and ascertain the fee payable by the appellants. But this is not the course which was adopted by the officer. He read the plaint and made the discovery that the appellants, who were the plaintiffs in the action, had claimed Rs. 70 per year as mesne profits due to them. He concluded that the appeal was undervalued, and he thought that the appeal should be valued at eighteen times the yearly profit. He directed the valuation to be corrected and he called upon the appellants to pay the fee on the memorandum of appeal as corrected by him.

In my opinion, there was no authority in the officer to adopt this course. To assent to the procedure adopted by the officer is to say that there is authority in the officer to rectify the document sought to be filed, exhibited or recorded in the High Court. For this view, I can find no justification in the terms of s. 4. In my opinion, the words "such document" (in respect of which the suitor is to be taxed) mean the document sought to be filed, exhibited or recorded, not the document as corrected or rectified by the officer.

A consideration of some of the provisions of the Third Chapter, lends strong support to the arguments advanced on behalf of the appellants. The Chapter deals with the question of fees payable in Courts other than the High Courts and Courts of Small Causes at the Presidency Towns. Now the terms of s. 6 are identical with those of s. 4, and must, in my opinion, receive the same construction. If the words, "fee of an amount not less than that indicated by either of the said Schedules" in s. 4 mean such fee as is payable, not on the memorandum of appeal as sought to be filed, but after an investigation of the question of valuation, then those words in s. 6 must receive the same interpretation, and would authorize the Court under s. 6 to deal with the question of valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of any fee chargeable. But this was clearly not the intention of the Legislature, for there is a special provision, contained in s. 12, which specifically deals with the question of valuation. If the interpretation put on the Statute on behalf of the Crown be right, then it was wholly unnecessary to enact the first paragraph of s. 12, with the exception of the words, "and such decision shall be final as between the parties to the suit", for an enquiry as to valuation has already been provided for in s. 6. A construction which will lead to such a conclusion ought to be avoided. I have no doubt that the subject to which ss. 3 and 6 apply is different from that to which section 12 applies. Sections 3 and 6 vest the officers with power to decide the amount of fee payable on the document sought to be filed. Section 12 vests the Court with power to hold a judicial enquiry into the question of valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of fee chargeable. The function to be performed under ss. 3 and 6 is ministerial ; the function to be performed under s. 12 is to be performed by the Court and is purely judicial.

But it will be objected that there is no provision corresponding to s. 12 in the Second Chapter of the Act; and that consequently, if the arguments on behalf of the appellants are to prevail, there are no means of compelling the suitor to pay so much additional fee as would have been payable, had the High Court the power to decide the matter. In my opinion, the second paragraph of s. 12 gives the High Court complete power in this respect. That paragraph runs as follows:—

to pay so much additional fee as would have been payable had the question been rightly decided, and the provisions of s. 10, paragraph (ii) shall apply".

The words in s. 12 para. 2 are general, and, in my opinion, they authorize the High Court to require the suitor to pay an additional fee both on the plaint and on the memorandum of appeal in the High Court. Let me illustrate my meaning by a concrete example. A suitor files a suit in the Munsif's Court and values the subject-matter of the suit at Rs. 216-12. He pays a Rs. 16-8-0 as the fee due on the plaint. His suit is dismissed, and he files an appeal, paying Rs. 16-8-0 again on the memorandum of appeal. His appeal is dismissed, and he presents a second appeal to this Court, paying Rs. 16-8-0 again on the memorandum of appeal in this Court. This Court considers that the question of valuation was wrongly decided to the detriment of the revenue and comes to the conclusion that the subject-matter should have been valued at Rs. 1,406-12-0. Now this Court has complete power to require the party by whom such fee has been paid to pay so much additional fee as would have been payable had the question been rightly decided. Now had the question been rightly decided, Rs. 100 would have been payable by the suitor both on the plaint and on the memorandum of appeal in the Court below, and Rs. 135 would have been payable on the memorandum of appeal in this Court. The total loss to the revenue, amounting to Rs. 282-8-0, has flowed from the circumstance that the question was wrongly decided in the Court of first instance. In other words, had the question been rightly decided, an additional fee of Rs. 282-8-0 would have been payable by the suitor; and, in my opinion, the High Court, under the express provision of s. 12 para. 2, can require the suitor to pay the additional fee of Rs. 282-8-0 and stay the appeal until the additional fee has been paid.

I suggest that this is a far more reasonable interpretation of the Statute than that which is suggested on behalf of the Crown. The enquiry by the Stamp Reporter into the question of valuation can only be on speculative lines, since the Legislature has not provided him with the machinery appropriate to such an enquiry. A critical examination of the Act will show that whenever the Legislature has given any power to the appropriate authority to hold an enquiry into the question of valuation, it has also given it the power to examine witnesses and take evidence in the matter. Under s. 12 every question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of any fee chargeable under the Third Chapter has to be decided by the Court in which the plaint or memorandum of appeal as the case may be is filed. Section 9 provides the Court with the machinery appropriate to such an enquiry and empowers the Court to issue a commission to any proper person directing him to make such local or other investigation as may be necessary and to report thereon to the Court. Section 19H (2) deals with applications for Probate or Letters of Administration in the High Court. The fifth para. of s. 19H authorizes the Court to hold an enquiry into the value of the property of the deceased and the sixth para. empowers the Court to authorize a person to hold the enquiry and for that purpose to examine the petitioner on oath and to take such further evidence as may be produced to prove the true value of the property. It will be seen that the Legislature has shown some anxiety to secure a judicial enquiry into the question of valuation and I cannot regard the absence of such provision in connection with the power vested in the officer under ss. 4 and 5 as a mere omission to be supplied by the Court on an equitable construction of the Court Fees Act. It is well established that judicial function cannot be delegated without statutory authority and I can find no authority in the Court Fees Act in support of the proposition that the officers under ss. 4 and 5 can embark upon a judicial investigation for the purpose of determining the value of the subject-matter. The High Court has all the powers of the primary Court and undertakes the investigation under s. 12 (2) of the Act. But no express power has been given to the Stamp Reporter or to the Taxing Officer to take evidence or to direct a local enquiry and I do not see how it is possible for those officers to decide a question of valuation except on speculative lines. In this case the Stamp Reporter thought that as the suitor had claimed Rs. 70 a year as mesne profits due to him he should have valued the subject-matter of the suit at eighteen times the yearly profit. But the suitor valued his land at Rs. 70 is obvious that either his valuation was wrong or he had exaggerated his claim for mesne profits, and I do not see how the Stamp Repoter could possibly have proceeded on the mesne profits claimed since it was not decided that the claim was well founded. We are entitled to expect the most scrupulous fairness in a proceeding between the Crown and the subject especially in a proceeding to tax the subject and I cannot assent to the method adopted by the officers for determining the value of the land.

But if this method is not to be pursued by the officers there is no other method available to them. I regard the omission on the part of the Legislature to provide the officers with a machinery appropriate to an enquiry into valuation as deliberate and as marking an intention not to vest them with a judicial function. It has been suggested that though no express power has been given to the officers to take evidence or to direct a local enquiry such a power must have been given to them by implication since where a Statute is passed for the purpose of enabling something to be done but omits to state in terms some detail which is of great importance (if not actually essential) to the proper and effectual performance of that which the Statute has in contemplation the Courts are at liberty to infer that the Statute contains that detail by implication. But there is high authority for the view that, if there be admissible in any Statute, what is called an equitable construction, such a construction is not admissible in a Taxing Statute where you can simply adhere to the words of the Statute. See Parlington v. Att. General (14). We are, therefore, not entitled to read into the Act words which are not there so as to hold that there is power in the officers under ss. 4 and 5 of the Act to take evidence or to direct a local enquiry for the purpose of deciding a question of valuation. If this be the right view then it is difficult to see how the Legislature could have intended that these officers should decide a question of valuation especially when it is remembered with what scrupulous care the Legislature has secured a judicial enquiry into the question of valuation whenever it has in express terms given power to undertake such an enquiry. It is a general rule of construction of Statutes that unless you are obliged to do so you must not suppose that the Legislature intended to do a palpable injustice see, Ex parte Corbett, In re, Shand (15). There is no question that a palpable injustice has been done to the suitors if the Legislature has authorized those officers to decide a question of valuation for the purpose of taxing the subject without giving them the power to hold a judicial enquiry.

I would answer the question put to the Full Bench as follows:—The Taxing Officer has no jurisdiction to decide a question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of Court-fee payable by the appellant either on his plaint or on his memorandum of appeal, and, if he assumes jurisdiction to decide such a question the Court may ignore it.

Foster, J.—I concur with the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. Any attempt to displace the generally accepted view must, I think, and only in conclusions which still remain open to reasonable controversy. The Court Fees Act is, I believe, about to be reconstructed; if so, the present question, if so far as it is a question of law, is of transitory importance.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 21—Territorial jurisdiction, transfer of—Pending suits, effect on—Jurisdiction of Court to pass final decree—Waiver of objection—Suit to set aside decree, maintainability of.

Section 21 of the C. P. C. enacts an exception to the general rule that parties by mutual consent cannot confer upon a Court jurisdiction where it has not, the exception enacted being that when the question is one of territorial jurisdiction the plea may be waived. [p. 158, col. 1.]

Where an objection to territorial jurisdiction is cured by waiver, it is cured not merely for the purpose of the Appellate or Revisional Court but cured entirely and for all purposes, whether there was want of jurisdiction at the institution of the suit or at any stage during the progress of it. [p. 156, col. 1.]

In a suit on a mortgage, the preliminary decree was passed by the Kumbakonam Sub-Court. Subsequently in virtue of a Government Notification, the territorial jurisdiction over the place wherein the mortgage property was situated was transferred from the Kumbakonam Sub-Court to the Mayavaram Sub-Court, but nevertheless the former Court passed the final decree in the suit. In a suit by one of the mortgagors-defendants to set aside the decree as being absolutely void for want of jurisdiction:

Held, that the objection to want of jurisdiction had been waived and s. 21, C. P. C., cured it and the decree could not, therefore, be challenged as being without jurisdiction even in collateral proceedings. [p. 155, col. 2.]

Per Phillips, J.—When a case has been properly instituted in a Court and is pending, the mere transfer of territorial jurisdiction affecting that case does not transfer the proceedings which were actually pending in the Original Court. [p. 154, col. 2.]

The jurisdiction of a Court consists in its power to entertain suits. Once the suit has been entertained, the remaining proceedings taken therein are not taken by reason of any particular territorial jurisdiction, but in the exercise of the powers vested in the Court to try suits generally and consequently the only time at which the territorial jurisdiction comes into operation is at the time of filing the suit. Appeals against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in O. S. Nos. 29 and 34 of 1917 respectively, dated 12th July 1920.

ARGUMENTS.—Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyengar (with him Messrs. K. Bhashyam Aiyengar and K. Narasimha Aiyengar), for the Respondents.—The suit on the mortgage was pending till the final decree. The change of territorial jurisdiction by general notification to Mayavaram Court cannot take away the jurisdiction of the Court over the suits pending in the Kumbakonam Court. The principle really is that unless pending suits are also expressly transferred by the notification, the Court in which the suit was instituted does not cease to have jurisdiction merely by the notification. Where once the suit was validly entertained by a Court, the party has got the right to have his case heard by that particular Court to which he originally went under the then law and that right cannot be taken away by a change in the territorial jurisdiction by notification. Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (1).

Though there is no direct case on this question of change of territorial jurisdiction by notification in the exact form it arises in the present case, there are other cases of jurisdiction on notifications under other Acts, wherein it has been held that pending suits are not affected by such notifications.

See Subbaraya Mudaliar v. Rakki (2) Ramakrishna Chetty v. Subraya Iyer (3) Sadasiva Pillai v. Kalappa Mudaliar (4) Vedavalli Narasiah v. Mangamma (5) and Nana v. Sheku (6).

In any case though s. 21, C. P. C., does not in terms apply yet the principle of the section clearly applies. In fact it has been applied to execution proceedings and there is no reason why it should not also be applied in reference to a suit to set aside such a decree. The plaintiff who was a party in the other suit is estopped from raising the question of jurisdiction. The objection has been clearly waived. The waiver operates for all purposes including an independent suit to set aside the decree.

decree even after the territorial jurisdiction was transferred to the Mayavaram Sub-Court and that final decree was, therefore, valid.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar (with him Mr. K. Sankara Sastriar), for the Appellant.—Under ss. 3 and 10 of the Madras Civil Courts Act the Local Government may vary the local limits of the jurisdiction of any Court and the venue is changed from the date of notification. All suits pending as well as those to be instituted must be tried by the Court to which the new jurisdiction has been conferred. The word "district" in s. 3 is material and must be given its due significance.

Territorial jurisdiction must subsist in the Court with regard to subject-matter till judgment is delivered whatever may be the case with regard to personal jurisdiction. The jurisdiction as to subject-matter of the suit must exist throughout the proceedings. If the Court loses its jurisdiction during the pendency of the proceeding, it cannot pronounce a decision and if one is pronounced it is void for want of jurisdiction.

The principle that the state of things existing at the time of the institution of the suit is sufficient to determine jurisdiction is applicable only to cases of local jurisdiction. The cases referred to by the respondents were all cases dealing what may be called "vested rights" of appeal or right of suit in a Civil Court and it was held that Statutes cannot ordinarily retrospectively affect the vested rights, substantive or remedial.

With regard to s. 21 and principle thereunder is that objection to territorial jurisdiction can be waived. It is true it has been applied to execution proceedings but with special reference to the words "which passed the decree" in ss 37 and 38 of the C. P. C. Those cases, therefore, have no applicability to the present case—a case of pending suit. Being an exception to the general rule that a Court should try a suit must have territorial jurisdiction over the subject-matter, s. 21 must be strictly construed and applied and should not be widely extended.

Setrucherla Ramabhadraju v. Maharaja of Jeypore (10), Prem Chand Dey v. Mokhoda Debi (11), C. R. P. No. 344 of 1921, not printed Monna Gurusamy Naicker v. Sheikh Muhammadhu Rowther (12), Srinivasa Rao v. Hanumantha Rao (13).

Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyengar in reply explained the two cases in Jyoti Prokash Chatterjee v. Bagala Kanta Chodhury (14) and Setrucherla Ramabhadaraju v. Maharaja of Jeypore (10). On the ground that in those cases it was really a case of the change of the subject-matter, relating to cognizability by a Court rather than a change of mere territorial jurisdiction.

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—This suit (O. S. No. 27 of 1917) has been brought to set aside the final decree in (O. S. No. 15 of 1903) in the Kumbakonam Sub-Court and for recovery of the properties comprised therein. The first question we have to deal with in this appeal is whether that decree can be set aside as being absolutely void for want of jurisdiction. It is a decree in a mortgage suit instituted in 1903 when the Kumbakonam Court had jurisdiction over the place wherein the mortgaged property is situated. In 1907 the jurisdiction over this particular place was transferred from the Kumbakonam Court to the Mayavaram Court; and, at the time of passing the final decree, the Kumbakonam Court had no jurisdiction over the place where the mortgage properties lie. The Subordinate Judge, relying on Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (15) has held that this decree was absolutely viod, but has for other reasons, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

In urging the appeal, the respondents support the decree on the ground that this finding of the lower Court is not correct; and it is argued that when the case has been properly instituted in a Court and is pending, the mere transfer of territorial jurisdiction affecting that case does not transfer the proceedings which were actually pending in the Original Court. It is also argued that inasmuch as the plaintiff not only consented to the jurisdiction of the Kumbakonam Sub-Court but actually invoked its jurisdiction in this particular case, he is barred by the principle of s. 21, C. P. C., from raising the objection now. No doubt in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (15) it was observed that, "unless the authority which changes the venue reserves the right to the Court which has lost the jurisdiction to continue pending proceedings (affecting the property so transferred to another jurisdiction), such proceedings also ipso facto transferred by the change of venue to the new Court."

This observation in this particular case was made obiter; and when this case was considered by another Full Bench in Suni Nadan v. Muthuswamy Pillai (9) some of the obiter dicta in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (15) were overruled, although this one was not particularly specified. So long ago as 1900 in Sadasiva Pillai v. Kalappa Mudaliar (4) it was held that the right of appeal which existed when the suit was filed in a District Court was not taken away by a subsequent notification which removed the jurisdiction of the District Court to try such a suit and in the course of the judgment we find the following.—

"The District Judge held, quite rightly, that notwithstanding the notification he had jurisdiction to hear the suit on the ground that it had been instituted before the notification came into force."

Similarly in Vedavalli Narasiah v. Managamma (5) it was held that where the jurisdiction of Civil Courts was taken away by s. 33 of Act II of 1894, this did not affect the suit which had been filed in a Civil Court before that section became applicable to the subject-matter of the suit. Again in Subbaraya Mudaliar v. Rakki (2) it was held that the Madras Estates Land Act did not take away the jurisdiction of Civil Courts to hear and determine suits which had been taken cognizance of by them before the Act came into operation. It is difficult to discover any difference in principle between those cases and the present case where the territorial jurisdiction has been altered; and in fact, it would appear that when the entire jurisdiction of the Civil Court has been taken away, such removal would apply with more force to pending suits than in a case where the jurisdiction of the Court over the particular place in which the property is situated has alone been removed. A large number of cases have been cited which deal with the jurisdiction of a Court to execute a decree properly passed by it, when territorial jurisdiction has been taken away after the passing of the decree. I do not think that much importance can be attached to these cases because there are certain special sections of the C. P. C. i.e., 37, 38, 39 and 150 which specifically deal with this point and there is no special provision in the Act which deals with pending suits. The jurisdiction of a Court consists in its power to entertain suits, and when once a suit has been properly entertained, it is difficult to understand how that jurisdiction is removed unless it is specifically so done by the order of a competent authority. Once the suit has been entertained, the remaining proceedings taken therein are not taken by reason of any particular territorial jurisdiction, but in the exercise of the powers vested in the Court to try suits generally and consequently the only time at which the territorial jurisdiction comes into operation is at the time of filing the suit. Once the Court has seisin of the case, it has jurisdiction to try it to its conclusion, unless there is any reason for holding that that jurisdiction has been removed. If this be the right principle and, I think it is, it would account for the fact that there is no provision in the C. P. C. for the trial of suits, pending in a Court which had territorial jurisdiction at the time of their institution, after such jurisdiction has been removed before the trial is concluded. In this view, it appears to me that the final decree passed in this suit was not passed without jurisdiction.

Support to the view that territorial jurisdiction is not more important than and in fact probably not so important as the other form of jurisdiction of a Court is given by the provisions of s. 21, C. P. C. Under that section unless objection is taken to the place of suing, which has been held to mean territorial jurisdiction, at the earliest possible opportunity, no objection can be taken in appeal or in revision. That section is not strictly applicable to the present case for this is not an appeal from the original decree but it has been extended in Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v. Chidambaram Chetty (8) to execution proceedings and in that case, it was held that the effect of the section is, that objections which the Appellate or Revisional Court is thereby precluded from entertaining must be considered cured for all purposes unless taken before the passing of the decree in the Original Court. In principle, there is no distinction between applying the provisions of s. 21 to execution proceedings and applying them to a suit specially brought for the purpose of setting aside a decree. The principle underlying the section is that waiver of territorial jurisdiction is recognised by law, whereas it has been consistently held that other forms of jurisdiction such as jurisdiction of the subject-matter or pecuniary jurisdiction cannot be waived by consent of parties. If territorial jurisdiction can be thus waived, it has admittedly been waived in the present case. I would, therefore, hold that for this reason also, the final decree was passed with jurisdiction and it is, therefore, binding upon the plaintiff who was a party thereto.

[His Lordship then dealt with questions of fact not material for the report and concluded:—]

I would, therefore, allow the appeal in part and give plaintiff a decree for the recovery of one veli of land out of the five velis mortgaged and order the parties to pay and receive proportionate costs.

It follows that Appeal No. 329 of 1920 must be dismissed with costs.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—This appeal raises two questions, first, a question of law which refers to the entire subject-matter of the suit and, secondly, a question of fact which has a bearing only upon a portion of that subject-matter.

The point of law to be determined is, whether the final decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam dated the 25th of January 1913 in O. P. No. 15 of 1903 is a nullity, for the reason that previous to the date of that decree, in virtue of a Government Notification dated the 24th August 1907 the Kumakonam Sub-Court had ceased to have jurisdiction over certain tracts within the limits of which the suit properties are situated. The learned Subordinate Judge has decided the question in favour of the plaintiff holding that the decree is void as it was passed without jurisdiction, but he gave findings adverse to the plaintiff on the other issues raised and dismissed his suit. In my view the lower Court's judgment can be supported on the ground that the decree is not a nullity and it is, therefore, unnecessary to deal with the other points adverted to in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge.

The facts are these. The suit properties belonged to Muthusami Pillai and his son Ramasami Pillai who mortgaged them to a certain person and the latter assigned the mortgage to one Venkatachala Chetty. A second mortgage was effected in favour of Ponnambala Chetty. Venkatachala Chetty filed a suit on the first mortgage without impleading the second mortgagee, obtained a decree, brought the mortgaged properties to sale and purchased them himself. Then Ponnambala Chetty filed O. S. No. 15 of 1903 on the file of the Sub-Court of Kumbakonam on the footing of the second mortgage impleading Venkatachala Chetty as 3rd defendant and the original mortgagors as defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Venkatachalam Chetty died and his son Ponnuswamy Chetty was brought on record as the 10th defendant. The suit was apparently dismissed by the Sub-Court and there was an appeal to the District Court. On the 22nd of April 1910, a preliminary decree (Ex. H) was passed by the District Judge of Tanjore which recites that there was an order of remand by the High Court dated 30th September 1909 and that there was a finding submitted by the Subordinate Judge's Court of Kumbakonam in pursuance of an order of the District Court dated 16th December 1909. The relevancy of the order of remand and the finding I shall show later on, but I shall now proceed with my narration of the fact. The preliminary decree passed by the District Court was confirmed by the High Court on 19th July 1912. The decree of the High Court is marked Ex. H1. It was ordered that the amounts due to the plaintiff and the 10th defendant in O. S. No. 15 of 1903 should be paid on or before the 19th of October 1912, and that on such payment being made, the 10th defendant was ordered to deliver the properties to the mortgagors and to execute in their favour a proper document of retransfer. The mortgagors, that is, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in that suit, were not able to raise the money and on the 21st of October 1912, they entered into an agreement with Chockkalinga Mudali (Ex. I, dated 21st October 1912) whereby it was arranged that the latter should pay about Rs. 15,500 the amount due to the 10th defendant who represented the first mortgagee, Rs. 2,000 to the plaintiff in that suit who was the second mortgagee and further pay Rs. 1,000 to the mortgagors, and that thereupon Chockkalinga Mudali should be entitled to all the remedies under the preliminary decree in the place of the mortgagors. Accordingly, on the same date Chockkalinga Mudali paid into Court about Rs. 15,500 the amount due on the first mortgage and he also settled the claim of the second mortgagee by executing to him a promissory note for Rs. 2,000 and the second mortgagee undertaking to enter up satisfaction of the decree to the extent to which it was in his favour (See Ex. 4). Thereupon, the mortgagors Muthusami Pillai and Ramasami Pillai presented a petition to the Court (Ex. 2) praying that a final decree might be passed in favour of Chockkalinga Mudali. As, however, it was pointed out that the application was defective in form inasmuch as the proper party to make it was Chockkalinga Mudali, an endorsement was made on the petition by Ramasami Pillai and by his Vakil that in due course Chockkalinga Mudali himself would apply and thereupon a record was made to that effect and the petition was thus disposed of. This was on the 2nd of December 1912. Three days later, Chockkalinga Mudali himself applied to the Court by Ex. 22 for being brought on the record and for a final decree being passed. Ramasami Pillai one of the mortgagors, filed a statement in Court Ex. 6-A stating that he had no objection. The 10th defendant who represented the first mortgagee filed another statement Ex 6-B also consenting. The second mortgagee, the plaintiff in the action, had of course no objection, because he had already treated the decree in his favour as satisfied. The only other person who could be heard in the proceedings was Muthusami Pillai the other of the mortgagors. He objected to the passing of the final decree on the ground that the agreement in favour of Chockkalinga Mudali was not an assignment of the preliminary decree but was only an agreement. That objection was overruled and on the 25th of January 1913, an order (Ex.6) was made directing that Chockkalinga Mudali should be added as the 11th defendant and that a final decree should be passed in his favour. Accordingly Ex. 8, the final decree, was passed on the same date. Cockkalinga Mudali applied for execution and obtained on 26th January 1913 delivery of the properties from the 10th defendant. He also later executed a deed of transfer in favour of the former. So far it will be seen that Chackkalinga Mudali did everything he was bound to do and obtained what was presumably a legal title to the property and also possession. At this place I may just pause to observe, in order to remove any possible confusion, that though it may look strange that the mortgagors whose right to redeem was extinguished by the decree in the suit of the first mortgagee were treated by the preliminary decree in question as having a subsisting right to redeem it was stated to us in the course of the argument by all the parties concerned that no objection would be taken to the preliminary decree on this score. To proceed with my narrative, Muthuswami Pillai died in June 1913 and owing to some misunderstanding with Chockkalinga Mudali, Ramasami Pillai ignoring the entire proceedings sold the suit properties to one Chockkalinga Pillai by Ex. A on 4th September 1915 and the latter has instituted O. S. No. 29 of 1917 for the recovery of the properties from Chockkalinga Mudali and his son. The appeal is from the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit. I may also mention that Chockalinga Mudali instituted a counter suit O. S. No. 34 of 1917 to compel Ramaswami Pillai and his son to execute in his favour a sale-deed in terms of the agreement of 21st October 1912 and to this suit Chockkalinga Pillai was made a party. Both the suits were tried together and the second suit also was dismissed.

I shall now state the point of law raised. The Subordinate Judge's Court of Kumbakonam had jurisdiction to try O. S. No. 15 of 1903 when, it was filed in his Court. But the notification referred to already was passed on the 24th August 1907 and runs thus:—

"It is also hereby directed that the Subordinate Judge's Court of Kumbakonam shall after the said date (2nd September 1907) cease, to have and exercise jurisdiction over the Munsifs of Valangiman, Mayavaram and Shiyali and shall continue to have and exercise jurisdiction over the Kumbakonam Munsif only."

It is urged on behalf of Chockkalinga Pillai that the final decree passed by the Kumbakonam Sub-Court is not valid as that Court ceased to have jurisdiction over the mortgaged properties, and next it is said, the final decree and all that followed upon it, being, therefore, of no effect, the plaintiff is entitled to ignore the whole proceedings and recover from Chochkalinga Mudali the properties.

On the question as to whether the old Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam or the new Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram had jurisdiction to pass the final decree, a long argument was addressed to us. But I refrain from expressing any opinion on it as in my view it is immaterial which of the two Courts had jurisdiction to deal with the further proceedings in O. S. No. 15 of 1903 which included the passing of a final decree in it. The question that has been raised is a very important one and the law upon it is uncertain. Whatever may be the right view, so long as there remains any doubt in regard to the Court having jurisdiction, great inconvenience and in many cases grave injustice is bound to result and it is very essential that at an early date the Legislature should enact clearly which Court in such circumstances has jurisdiction to proceed with the suit.

I am disposed to base my judgment on the ground that there has been a waiver of the plea of want of jurisdiction. It was open to the parties to waive objection regarding want of territorial jurisdiction and in this case not only did the mortgagors waive the objection, but as will appear from my statement of the facts they themselves invoked jurisdiction of the Kumbakonam Sub-Court and it is not, therefore, open to the plaintiff Chockkalinga Pillai to impeach the decree on the ground of want of jurisdiction. The principle underlying s. 21 of the C. P. C. is that the plea of want of territorial jurisdiction may be waived. This section enacts an exception to the general rule that parties by mutual consent cannot confer upon a Court jurisdiction where it has not, the exception enacted being that when the question is one of territorial jurisdiction the plea may be waived. Section 21 runs thus:—

"No objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any Appellate or Revisional Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice."

Under the section, objection will not be allowed unless it was taken at the earliest possible opportunity and unless there has been a failure of justice. The section in terms no doubt does not apply, because it refers to the disallowing of the objection by an Appellate or Revisional Court. But the principle is of general application and if in appeal or revision the decree cannot be impeached it is equally reasonable that in a collateral proceeding it should not be allowed to be attacked. I respectfully adopt the statement of the law contained in Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v. Chidambaram Chetty (8) to the effect that the principle underlying s. 21 is that the objection to territorial jurisdiction is cured not merely for the purpose of the Appellate and Revisional Court but cured entirely and for all purposes. In my opinion, again, this section applies when there is want of jurisdiction not merely at the institution of the suit but at any stage during the progress of it. It is difficult to believe that a more stringent rule was intended to be applied to cases where there has occurred a cessation of jurisdiction than to those where there has been initial absence of jurisdiction.

There is another aspect of the case which should not be overlooked. The foundation of the plaintiff's title is the preliminary decree. But if his argument that the Sub-Court of Kumbakonam lost jurisdiction subsequent to the notification is correct, the preliminary decree based as it was on a finding submitted by that very Court, would be itself ineffectual and the plaintiff would thus be out of Court.

On the point of law, therefore, that this appeal raises, I concur with the finding of my learned brother.

[His Lordship then deals with the questions of fact, which are not material for the report.]

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 174 OF 1923.

December 18, 1924.

Present:—Justice Sir Hugh Walmsley, KT., and Mr. Justice B. B. Ghose.

Srimati DAYAMOYI alias BIDDUTLATA DEBI—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

SANKAR NATH MUKHOPADHYA—PLAINTIFF AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

*Will, construction of—Devise of absolute estate—Alienation, restriction on, validity of—Religious endowment—Deity, foundation of, worship of—*Shebaitship, devolution of, rule of—Subsequent grant, effect of—Procedure—Person interested in worship of idol, whether can maintain suit for declaration—Suit for declaration as shebait*—Cause title, amendment of.*

Where a suit is brought by a plaintiff to recover possession of certain properties belonging to an idol, as shebait of the idol, the omission to describe the plaintiff in the cause title of the suit as shebait of the idol is a misdescription which may be cured at any stage by amendment of the cause title, without any hardship being caused to the defendant. [p. 160, col. 2.]

A person who is interested in the worship of an ancestral idol can maintain a suit for a declaration that certain properties are the debuttar properties of the idol. [ibid.]

A Hindu testator by his Will devised certain property to his daughter-in-law with power to make gift, sale, mortgage, or any permanent morusi mukarrari settlement. By a subsequent clause, however, it was provided that any transfer by the devisee should be made only with the consent of her husband and the other sons and grandsons of the testator:

Held, that the intention of the testator was to make an absolute gift in favour of his daughter-in-law and that the subsequent restriction on her power of alienation must be regarded as repugnant to the gift and consequently void. [p. 161, col. 1.]

When the worship of an idol has been founded, the shebaitship is vested in the founder and his heirs, unless he has disposed of it otherwise or there has been some usage or course of dealing which points to a different mode of devolution. If a donor subsequent to the foundation makes a grant of any property to the idol, it becomes the property of the idol, and unless conditions are attached to the gift, the existing shebait of the idol would have the power to manage that property on behalf of the idol. [p. 161, col. 2.]

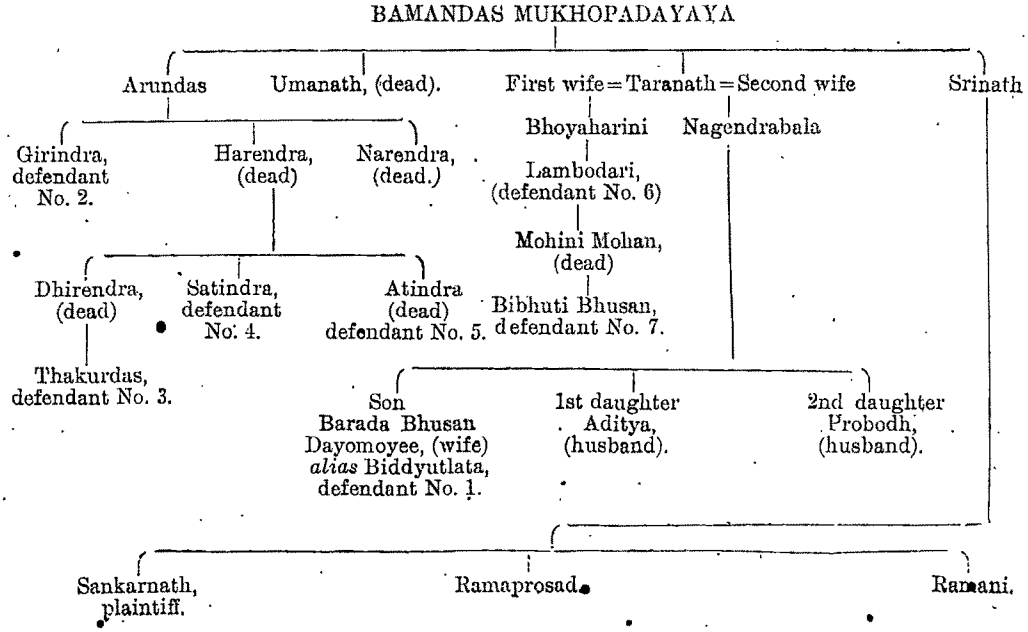
JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—This appeal arises out of an action in ejectment brought by the plaintiff on the allegation that the defendant No. 1 is in possession of certain properties as trespasser. In order to understand the facts, it is necessary to refer to the following genealogical table:



Bamandas Mukhopadhyaya died possessed of considerable property. He made a Will dated the 7th January 1875 making certain dispositions of his property. A portion of the property disposed of by the Will was given to his daughter-in-law Bhoyaharini—first wife of his son Taranath and this is the property now in dispute. Bhoyaharini died on the 18th November 1881 after having executed a Will dated the 16th November 1881. By cl. (1) of her Will, she dedicated certain properties as debutter to the ancestral Thakur of her father-in-law Sri Sri Sridhar Salagram Thakur and certain other properties for the performance of the ancestral Durga Puja, Syama Puja and Jagadhwatri Puja. After her death, her husband Taranath obtained Probate of her Will and he died on the 15th of August 1908 after having executed a Will on the 21st February 1908. Before Taranath obtained Probate of his wife's Will, some of the descendants of Arundas, the eldest son of Bamandas, had taken out Probate of that Will. But that grant was revoked on the application of Taranath and Taranath himself obtained Probate as already stated. Taranath, it is said, was in possession of the disputed properties and performed Sheba of the idol and the Pujahs. Taranath had a son named Barada Bhusan by another wife Nagendrabala. This Barada Bhusan died on the 10th March 1909. Defendant No. 1 is the widow of Barada Bhusan and she is in possession of the properties. After Barada's death, it appears that the present plaintiff Sankarnath who is one of the sons of Srinath—the youngest son of Bamandas Mukerji, applied unsuccessfully for Probate of the Will of Bhoyaharini on the allegation that he had been appointed executor. The Court found that there was nothing to administer and, on that ground, Sankarnath's application for Probate was refused. The present suit has been brought by Sankarnath on the ground that he is the sole shebait appointed under the Will of Bhoyaharini and is, therefore, entitled to possession of the debutter properties as against the defendant No. 1 who has no right to possession. The plaintiff has impleaded in the suit all the descendants of Arundas and the daughter and daughter's grandson of Bhoyaharini as defendants. He appears to have brought the suit in his personal capacity. In the body of the plaint, however, he describes himself as shebait and the principal prayers in the plaint are, (1) that a decree be given declaring that the properties mentioned in schedules ka and kha are debutter properties according to the Will of Bhoyaharini Debi, and, (2), that it may be declared that the plaintiff has a right to the said properties as manager or shebait and that a decree be given to him for khas possession of those properties by evicting the defendant No. 1. The other prayers are subsidiary to these two principal prayers.

The defendant No. 1 resisted the plaintiff's claim on various grounds which it is unnecessary to mention in detail.

A large number of issues were framed in the lower Court; but the Subordinate Judge has decided the three main points. He has found, first, that the properties in dispute are absolute debutter properties created by the Will of Bhoyaharini, secondly, that the plaintiff was appointed shebait and, thirdly, that as such shebait, the plaintiff is entitled to possession by ejecting the defendant No. 1.

The defendant No. 1 appeals to this Court and some formal grounds have been taken on her behalf; (1) that the plaintiff's suit has not been properly constituted as he has brought the suit in his personal capacity and (2) that there is defect of parties as the two brothers of the plaintiff have not been joined as defendants. It is also stated that there is no allegation in the plaint that the plaintiff asked the pro forma defendants to join as plaintiffs in the suit and they refused to do, so and on that ground the suit ought to fail. In my judgment, none of these grounds is sufficient for the dismissal of the suit. The omission to describe the plaintiff in the cause title as shebait of the idol is certainly a misdescription but it may be cured by amendment without any hardship to the defendant. With regard to the other objections, the answer seems to be that the plaintiff alone can maintain a suit for declaration that certain properties are the debutter properties of his ancestral idol, he being a person interested in the worship of that idol.

Of the principal points, that were urged on behalf of the appellant the first was that the properties were not debutter on the ground that Bhoyaharini had no right to dedicate the properties as she had no absolute title in them. It is contended that the object of Bamandas in making the gift in favour of his daughter-in-law was that she should hold the property for the benefit of the heirs of Taranath and that she was in the position of a mere trustee. Reliance has been placed upon a passage in the second clause of the Will of Bamandas that any transfer by Bhoyaharini should be made only with the consent of Taranath and the other sons and grandsons of Bamandas. In the previous portion of that very clause of the Will, however, the property was given to Bhoyaharini with power to make gift, sale, mortgage or any permanent maurasi mukurari settlement. That clearly shows that the intention of the testator was to make an absolute gift in favour of the lady. The subsequent restrictions must, therefore, be considered as repugnant to the gift. In my opinion there was an absolute gift to the lady. Further, her husband Taranath himself took out Probate of the Will of Bhoyaharini by which the properties were dedicated for devasheba. The defendant No. 1 claiming through Taranath as the heiress of his son Barada Bhusan can hardly raise any question as to the validity of the dispositions made under the Will of Bhoyaharini. I am of opinion that the decision of the Subordinate Judge that a valid debutter was created by Bhoyaharini by her Will is correct.

The next question that arises is whether the plaintiff can claim the properties as the sole shebait of the Thakurs. This claim is based upon the fourth clause of the Will of Bhoyaharini where she names a number of persons besides her husband Taranath as executor. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that assuming that under that clause Bhoyaharini had appointed the plaintiff as shebait, she could not appoint a new shebait of the ancestral idols, the shebaits of those idols being all the heirs of the original founder of the worship according to Hindu Law. The question has been considered by this Court in two recent cases. Kali Krishna Roy v. Makhan Lal Mukherjee (1) and Ananda Chandra Chakrabarti v. Broja Lal Singha (2). In the last mentioned case, it was held that when the worship of an idol has been founded, the shebaitship is vested in the founder and his heirs, unless he has disposed of it otherwise or there has been some usage or course of dealing which points to a different mode of devolution; and the cases of Gossami Sri Girdharji v. Ramanlalji Gossami (3) and Jagadinra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (4) were cited in support of that proposition. It has been endeavoured on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent to distinguish these cases on the ground that in those cases there was some pre-existing property of the idol and any grant to the idol by a person other than the founder is only an accretion to the pre-existing endowment and the subsequent donor cannot, therefore, appoint new shebaits. It is contended that there being no evidence in this case that the idols had any endowed property prior to the gift by Bhoyaharini she was entitled to appoint shebaits for the idols who would manage the property. But it seems to me there is really no difference in principle between the two positions. Where the worship of an idol has been founded there must be some shebait of the idol and, if any donor subsequent to the foundation makes a grant of any property to the idol, it becomes the property of the idol and unless conditions are attached to the gift the existing shebait of the idol would have the power to manage that property on behalf of the idol. In that view, the plaintiff and all the heirs of the founder of the Thakurs including the defendant No. 1 are shebaits of the idols in question and have the power to manage the properties on behalf of the Thakurs. Further, it seems to be extremely doubtful whether by cl. (4) of her Will Bhoyaharini purported to appoint any shebait. It may be conceded that the meaning of the word "executor" is not properly understood in the muffussil and in some cases it may include the office of a shebait having reference to the contest. But in cl. (4) of her Will, Bhoyaharini does not mention anywhere that the executors will perform the sheba of the idols and in cl. (5), the duties imposed upon the executors with reference to the debutter properties are laid down and they do not include the sheba of the idols. That being so, it cannot be held that plaintiff is the sole shebait and the defendant No. 1 cannot be considered to be a trespasser being herself a shebait of the Thakurs as the heir of her husband, a descendant of the founder. On these grounds the suit for ejectment must fail. It must, however, be declared that the properties dedicated by Bhoyaharini Debi are debutter properties of the Thakurs mentioned in cl. (1) of her Will.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed in part and the decree of the Subordinate Judge is modified in this way: It is declared that the property mentioned in schedule ka of the plaint is the debutter property of Bamandas Mukerji's ancestral diety Sri Sri Sridhar Salagram Thakur and that the property mentioned in schedule kha is the debutter property for Bamandas Mukerji's ancestral pujahs of Durga, Syama and Jagatdhatri Thakurs, and that the plaintiff as well as the defendant No. 1 along with all the other heirs of Bamandas are shebaits of those Thakurs. The decree of the Subordinate Judge allowing ejectment of the defendant No. 1 is set aside and the plaintiff's suit in that respect is dismissed. As the plaintiff's suit in ejectment has failed, the defendant No. 1 appellant will be entitled to recover her costs in this Court from the plaintiff-respondent. We assess the hearing fee at twenty gold mohurs. But as the defendant No. 1 resisted the suit on the ground that the properties were secular properties and as that contention has failed she will not be entitled to the costs of the Court below and each party should bear his own costs in that Court. The other parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Budaun, dated the 19th August 1924.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Sastry, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against a judgment of a Court of Small Causes under the following circumstances.

The applicant was the plaintiff in the Court below. He held an instalment bond by which he was to receive from the respondent a sum of Rs. 11 every year for eight years. There was a stipulation in the bond by which the obligor agreed that in case of any default in the payment of any instalment he would pay the entire amount due on the bond, irrespective of the instalments. None of the instalments were paid. The plaintiff stated in the plaint that his claim with respect to three of the instalments was barred by time, that he did not want to sue for the entire sum due and thus, leaving out the last two instalments, he sued for three which according to him fell due within three years of the institution of the suit.

The respondent met the claim with a plea of limitation. The learned Judge of the Court below held that the suit was time-barred, there being no evidence of any waiver.

In this Court it is contended that the applicant had an option to sue either for the whole money or for some of the instalments as he was advised and that as he waived his right to sue in respect of the first three instalments he came within the period of limitation as laid down by Art. 75 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act.

Article 75 of the Limitation Act lays down that a suit based on an instalment bond which provides that in case of default made in payment of one or more instalments the whole shall be due, the period of limitation would be three years and would begin to run from the date of default, unless there has been a waiver with respect to any such default. It provides that where there has been a waiver in respect of any defaulted instalment the period would run from such default in respect of which there is no waiver. In the case before me there is no allegation that on a default having occurred any payment was made after the default and was accepted. There is no allegation whatsoever as to the parties having in any way agreed to change the terms of the bond. It is, however, argued that the mere fact that the plaintiff did not sue for the first three instalments amounted to waiver and the plaintiff's suit was within time.

As I read the provision of column 3 of the Limitation Act I do not think that it was ever meant to lay down that the question of waiver would depend on the sweet will of the plaintiff. If that were the meaning the result would be this, on the same facts if a claim be made for a portion of the amount due the suit would be within time, but if a claim (equally maintainable on the terms of the bond) be made for the entire amount due on the bond, the suit would be timebarred.

Waiver is a technical word and so far as I am aware the word has never been applied to a circumstance which amounts to nothing more than this that the plaintiff has stayed his hands in seeking his remedy. In Wharton's Law Lexicon, 12th Edition, the word "waiver" is defined as follows:

"The passing by an occasion to enforce a legal right whereby the right to enforce the same is lost; a common instance of this is where a landlord waives a forfeiture of a lease by receiving rent, or distraining for rent, which has accrued due after the breach of covenant causing the forfeiture became known to him.....Mere lying by is not waiver for this purpose there must be some positive act on the part of the landlord, which act, however, if done, is a waiver in law, notwithstanding any protest."

The question of waiver was considered in some Calcutta cases and it was laid down that a mere staying of the hand in enforcing the remedy could not amount to a waiver. In the case of Jadab Chandra Bakshi v. Bhairab Chandra Chuckerbutty (1), at page 299* the learned Judges remark as follows:—

"It is argued in support of the rule that his (plaintiff's) abstinence from suing amounts to a waiver of his right to sue for the whole. We do not agree with that contention, but we agree with the observation made by the learned Judges, who decided the case of Hurri Pershad Choudhury v. Nasib Singh (2)."

The same opinion was re-iterated in the same Court in the case of Abinash Chandra Bose v. Bama Bewa (3) by two other learned Judges. It was held that mere omission to sue was not such a waiver as was contemplated by Art. 75 of Sch I of the Limitation Act.

The law of waiver has been considered in its various aspects by Lord Halsbury in his work, viz. "Laws of England." With respect to a contract the law laid down would appear in Volume VII at page 423, Art. 868. I need not quote all that is considered there. But what has been said there leads me to think that waiver is, in effect, a substituted contract for the previous one. This may be express or implied. As an illustration it is said that where one party consents, at the request of the other, to extend the time for performance or to accept performance in a different mode from that contracted for etc. there is a waiver. Again the same authority in Volume XIII of the book, page 165, Art. 197, lays down rules with respect to a waiver when it relates to enforcement of a right. It is said that waiver of this kind depends upon consent and the fact that the other party has acted upon it is sufficient consideration. Where the waiver is not express, it may be implied from conduct which is inconsistent with the continuance of the right. It is pointed out there that where the right is a right of action, an express waiver depends upon the same considerations as a release. I need not labour the point any further. But it seems clear to me that a mere abstinence from enforcing a right at the time when the cause of action arose will not amount to waiver.

As I have already said, if we accept the argument advanced on behalf of the applicant the result would be that, on the same facts, if a claim is made for a part of the amount due it would be within time, while, on the same facts, if the claim be made for a larger amount which is also due the suit must be treated as barred by time. This is a position which could not have been contemplated by the Legislature, nor does such position follow from the language used. If the language used had compelled the Courts to come to the conclusion contended for, the matter would have been different.

On behalf of the applicant reliance has been placed on the case of Ajudhia v. Kunjlal (4). In that case the language to be found in the bond was materially different from the language in the bond before me. There it was expressly stated that in case of default the creditor "would be entitled to sue for the whole amount due etc." The learned Judges of this Court were of opinion that it would go very hard with the debtor if he was deprived of the benefit, which the creditor was prepared to give him, of his forbearance. At page 125* their Lordships remarked as follows:—

"It is conceivable that a bond might be so worded as to compel a creditor to sue for the whole amount immediately if any default occurred."

This remark really distinguishes the case of Ajudhia v. Kunjlal (4) from the case before me. Under the circumstances I need not express any opinion as to the value of that case as an authority.

The result is that the application in revision fails and it is hereby dismissed with costs.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 299 OF 1923.

October 15, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Dalal, J. C.

LAL BAHADUR SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

MATHURA SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Adverse possession—Possession of Hindu widow, nature of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 142, 144—Suit to recover possession from Hindu widow—Limitation applicable.

Where the widow of a deceased co-parcener in a joint Hindu family took possession of certain plots of sir land and a house belonging to the joint family, set up her own independent title thereto, was continuously shown in the village records as sir holder, realized rents and made transfers:

Held, that the possession of the widow was adverse to her deceased husband's co-parceners. [p. 165, col. 2.]

Under certain circumstances the possession of a Hindu widow may be adverse to the reversioners of her deceased husband to the extent only of a widow's estate, but where she has no right to a widow's estate when she takes possession and there is no allegation on the other side that she is holding property on a widow's estate, and she makes transfers of the property as absolute owner thereof, her possession must be regarded as that of an absolute owner and not as that of a Hindu widow. [p. 165, col. 2.]

Obiter dictum.—To a suit for possession involving the question as to whether possession of certain property by a Hindu widow is in lieu of her maintenance or is adverse the Article applicable is Art. 144 and not Art. 142 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 165, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 3rd July 1923, preferred against that of the Sub-Judge, Unao, dated the 18th October, 1921.

Mr. Ishri Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are not marshalled in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and there has been in both Courts an unnecessary insistence on the application of Art. 142 of the Limitation Act. The parties are Lal Bahadur Singh plaintiff and the defendants are the widow of his deceased brother Drigpal Singh and the transferees of this widow and of Musammat Girja Kuar deceased widow of another deceased brother. The real question at issue is whether these widows have been in possession of certain plots of sir land by way of maintenance from Lal Bahadur or adversely to him. A house is also in dispute and admittedly the widows have been in possession thereof. The claim of Lal Bahadur Singh was for possession of a certain share of zemindari property and in the alternative for a declaration that certain transfers made by the defendant Musammat Rukmin Kuar be declared to be inoperative as against him on her death. Both the lower Courts gave a decree for possession of the share of the zemindari property but excluded from it certain sir plots of which they held the widow to have been in possession adversely to Lal Bahadur.

The property in dispute here, therefore, consists of the house and certain number of sir plots. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court proceeded only on the ground of burden of proof. He argued that the plaintiff himself came to Court saying that he was formerly in possession of the property and had been dispossessed, so Art. 142 of the Limitation Act applied and it was incumbent on him to prove that he had been in possession within 12 years of the institution of the suit. He held as a fact that no such proof was forthcoming and dismissed the appeal. In my opinion the case of the widows or rather of the transferees is much stronger than that. As the matter is not essential to be decided in this appeal I refrain from giving my opinion as to whether Art. 142 or Art. 144 should apply. If judgments of their Lordships of the Privy Council in similar cases are referred to, it will be found that there is a tacit admission of the application of Art. 144. In Satgur Prasad v. Raj Kishore Lal (1), the question was as to the nature and effect of the possession of property by a Hindu widow whether the possession was in lieu of her maintenance or adverse and their Lordships observed at page 155* of the report that the period prescribed by the Limitation Act, 1877, s. 144 of Sch. II, as that within which a suit for possession has to be brought was 12 years from the time when the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiff. In the case of Sham Koer v. Dah Koer (2), a similar question arose for decision before their Lordships and they considered it from the point of view of the application of Art. 144. It is quite true, as pointed out by the learned Counsel for the defendants-respondents, that no argument as to the distinction between the two Arts. 142 and 144 was raised in either appeal. At the same time if I had been called upon for a decision of the question I should have been inclined to apply Art. 144. The incident at issue in a case like the present is not of the dispossession of the plaintiff but of the nature of the possession of the widow.

In the present case, even if Art. 144 is applied, the Court must arrive at the same result. The plaintiff did not enter the witness-box and there is no evidence of any arrangement under which the widows took possession of the sir plots in lieu of maintenance. On the other hand there is definite evidence that the widows set up their own independent title as far back as 1906. A certain sale of part of the property of which the widows took possession was effected jointly by Lal Bahadur and the widows in favour of one Sheo Dulare. Sheo Dulare sued for foreclosure of the property on foot of two mortgages, one executed by Lal Bahadur and the other by Musammat Bhagole, mother of Lal Bahadur and by the three brothers of Lal Bahadur who were deceased husbands of the widows who took possession. In that suit the widows at first pleaded that they had no interest in the property. This was obviously a collusive defence so that the second mortgage executed by Musammat Bhagole and her three sons other than Lal Bahadur may prove ineffective. Subsequently the suit was compromised and Lal Bahadur and the three widows executed the sale-deed declaring that the defence of the widows in the suit was false. This is very strong evidence of full proprietary possession of the widows against Lal Bahadur. Subsequently the widows were shown in the village records continuously from 1313-1324 Fasli as sir holders of the plot in dispute here. They realized the rents and as noted already made transfers of the property unhindered by Lal Bahadur. I hold that the possession of the widows was adverse ever since 1905, when they took possession of the plots, and of the house in dispute in this appeal.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff raised an ingenious argument that even if the possession of the widows be adverse it would be adverse to the extent of a widow's estate. This may happen under certain circumstances but is not the case here. The widows had no right to a widow's estate when they took possession because their husbands were joint with Lal Bahadur. In the plaint no allegation was made that the widows were holding a widow's estate. There is no such mention of a widow's estate in the transfer made to Sheo Dulare in 1906. This argument will not prevail.

In the result I dismiss the appeal with costs.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT No. 4729 OF 1922.

March 6, 1923.

Present :—Mr. Justice Mulla.

BACHOO BHAIDAS—PLAINTIFF—

versus

VELJI BHIMSEY & CO.—

DEFENDANTS.

Execution of decree—Erroneous decree—Damages, action for.

No action will lie against any person for issuing execution or otherwise acting in pursuance of a judgment or order of a Court of Justice even though it is erroneous. A valid order, however erroneous in law or in fact, is a sufficient justification for any act done in pursuance of it. [p. 168, col. 1.]

FACTS.—V. & Co. sued B. and his two minor brothers as surviving members of a joint family, to recover Rs. 510 due on a promissory note executed by the B.'s father. A decree by consent was passed and the decretal amount was made realizable from such property of B.'s father as might have come to the hands of B. and his brothers as heirs and legal representatives. On the motion of the decree-holders, a notice was issued under O. XXI, r. 22 of the C. P. C., requiring B. and his brothers to show cause why the decree should not be executed against them. None of them appeared on the date of hearing but the defendants appeared by one of their partners T. and the Court ordered "execution to issue against 1st defendant only," i. e., B. This order was endorsed on the notice and on the decree, and the decree with the endorsement was given to T. who thereupon consulted his Pleader and on being advised that he could proceed both against the person and property of B. got a warrant issued for the arrest of B. in pursuance whereof B. was arrested and brought before the Registrar of the Small Cause Court. The Registrar held that the warrant was illegal and directed B. to be released. B. then filed the present suit to recover Rs. 2,000 as damages for wrongful arrest and imprisonment.

Mr. M. V. Desai, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Setalvad, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—[After stating the facts his Lordship proceeded as follows :—] It was not suggested at the hearing of the suit before me that the defendants were actuated by malice or that there was absence of reasonable or probable cause in suing out the writ, Counsel for the plaintiff took his stand on the fact that the decree being against the estate of the plaintiff's father in the hands of his sons, the Court had no jurisdiction to direct a writ to issue against the person of the plaintiff. In support of his contention he relied on Brooks v. Hodgkinson (1) and Barker v. Braham (2). On behalf of the defendants it was contended that the writ was justified by the order of the Court and reliance was placed on Raj Chunder Roy v. Shama Soondari Debi (3) and Thakdi Hajji v. Budrudin Saib (4). I do not think that either of the two Indian cases has any direct bearing on the present case.

Section 52 of the C. P. C., 1908, which relates to enforcement of decrees against legal representatives, is as follows :—

"(1) Where a decree is passed against a party as the legal representative of a deceased person, and the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased, it may be executed by the attachment and sale of any such property.

(2) Where no such property remains in the possession of the judgment-debtor and he fails to satisfy the Court that he has duly applied such property of the deceased as is proved to have come into his possession, the decree may be executed against the judgment-debtor to the extent of the property in respect of which he has failed so to satisfy the Court in the same manner as if the decree had been against him personally."

At the hearing of the suit it became material to inquire how it was that the learned Judge came to pass the order which he did, namaly, "Execution to issue against first defendant only." But the evidence of what happened when the order was made is very meagre. The notes taken down by the learned Judge are as follows :—

"Defendants absent. Tokersey plaintiff No. 3 s. a. proves service and claims. Execution to issue against defendant No. 1."

Tokersey, who appeared to me to have seen very little of litigation, stated in his evidence before me as follows :—

"That notice was returnable on 24th June 1922. On that day I appeared before the learned Judge Mr. De Quadros. I had not engaged any Pleader. I do not remember whether the defendant appeared on the notice. My name was called out and I entered the witness-box. The interpreter asked me what I wanted. I said 'as the Judge orders.' The interpreter then said 'Execute the decree against the 1st defendant.' I then left the Court. I had a piece of paper and the interpreter made an endorsement on it and gave it to me."

Mr. Ishwarlal says in his evidence that the Judge has the decree before him when orders are made on notices issued under O. XXI, r. 22. The piece of paper referred to in the evidence of Tokersey was evidently the decree of the Court. I have no reason to disbelieve Tokersey's evidence and I accept it.

I do not understand what the learned Judge meant by "claim" mentioned in his notes. I am not sure whether it refers to the defendant's claim to proceed against the plaintiff personally. But the fact stands that the writ, which the Registrar pronounced illegal, had the order of the learned Judge behind it, and in this respect the present case differs from the two English cases cited by Counsel for the plaintiff, which I proceed to consider.

In Brooks v. Hodgkinson (1), the defendant had obtained a judgment against the plaintiff for £13:. The defendant caused a writ of ca sa sued, and the plaintiff was arrested under the writ. The writ was issued in disregard of the Statute 7 & 8 Vic. c. 96, s. 57, by which it was provided that "no person shall be taken or charged in execution upon any judgment whereon the sum recovered shall not exceed the sum of £20." Section 59 of the Statute enabled the Judge who tried the cause to order the defendant to be taken in execution even if the judgment was for less than £ 20, if it appeared that he had obtained credit from the plaintiff under false pretences. No order to take or detain the plaintiff in execution upon the judgment was made under s. 59. The plaintiff brought an action for damages against the defendant for false imprisonment, and it was held that he was liable, It is to be observed that in Brooks case (1), the writ was issued not under any order of the Judge, but on the application of the defendant's Solicitor. This point is brought out prominently in the replication, and it is expressly mentioned in the head-note of the case. Further, the writ in Brooks case (1) was issued in spite of the statutory prohibition contained in the enactment referred to above.

In Barker's case (2), a judgment was obtained by Mrs. Braham against the plaintiff, who was the administratix of the estate of her deceased husband, for £ 400 to be recovered out of the assets of the husband. Mrs. Braham employed a Solicitor who first sued out a writ of fi fa, and the Sheriff seized the plaintiff's husband's goods worth about £ 164. For the balance, the Solicitor without obtaining any order of the Court sued out a ca sa against the plaintiff and himself delivered the same to the Sheriff, and gave orders and directions to the Sheriff to take and arrest the plaintiff. The plaintiff was thereupon arrested and committed to prison. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for damages for wrongful arrest and imprisonment. It was held that both Mrs. Braham and her Solicitor were liable. In the course of his argument Counsel for the plaintiff laid great stress on the fact that the writ was not supported by any order of the Court. De Gray, C. J., said (page 376*):

"A Sheriff, or his officers, or any acting under his or their authority, may justify themselves by pleading the writ only, because that is sufficient for their excuse, although there be no judgment or record to support or warrant such writ; but if a stranger interposes and sets the Sheriff to do an execution, he must take care to find a record that warrants the writ, and must plead it; so must the party himself at whose suit such an execution is made..... Mr. Norwood (the Attorney) has pleaded not guilty; but could not justify by a special plea, because there is no record to warrant a capias ad fatisfaciendum against Mrs. Barker (the plaintiff); nor could he have justified himself by pleading that he ignorantly sued out the writ, for ignorance is no excuse."

In the present case there is a record (Ex. No. 2) that warranted the writ. It was the direction of the learned Judge that execution do issue against the first defendant. It may be that the learned Judge had no materials before him to justify the order which he passed. But assuming it was so, the case is one of an erroneous order passed by a Court, and not one of absence of jurisdiction. It is well-established that no action will lie against any person for issuing execution or otherwise acting in pursuance of a judgment or order of a Court of Justice even though it is erroneous. A valid order, however, erroneous in law or in fact, is a sufficient justification for any act done in pursuance of it. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff has no cause of action against the defendants and dismiss the suit with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 15—Execution of decree—Attachment—Claim petition, whether can be heard after sale.

An application for the release of certain property from attachment cannot be heard after the property has been sold.

Rule against an order of the Munsif, Third Court, Diamond Harbour, 24-Parganas, dated the 29th March 1924, in Claim Case No. 1 of 1924.

Mr. M. Syed Nasim Ali, for the Petitioner.

Babu Bijan Kumar Mukherjee, for the Opposite Parties.

ORDER.—The petitioner before this Court was the claimant in the claim case. His claim was rejected on the ground that it could not proceed as the property with regard to which the claim had been preparad had already been sold in execution of the decree. It appears that the claim was put in shortly before the date of the sale of the property. The petitioner must have satisfied the Court that he had not designedly or unnecessarily delayed in making his claim. Afterwards, the petitioner applied for an adjournment of the sale; but his application was rejected and the sale took place. The petition of claim subsequently came up for hearing and it was, as already stated rejected.

It is contended by the learned Vakil for the petitioner that the petitioner's case was not heard not on account of any fault of his but because of the Court rejected his petition for stay of the sale pending the disposal of his claim case and that he was thus placed in a disadvantageous position. It seems to me, however, that there was no help for the situation that arose. After a property which had been attached in execution of a decree has been sold, it seems to me that the Court has no jurisdiction to hear an application putting forward a claim which, if successful, would have only one result, namely, the release of the attached property. That position cannot take place after the property has been actually sold. As the learned Munsif observes, the claimant has other remedies and he may possibly have recourse to such remedy as he may be advised. Under these circumstances, the Rule must be discharged. I make no order as to costs.

Nidha v. Ram Prasad, 46 Ind. Cas. 6; 5 O. L. J. 176, referred to.

The expression "third person" in s. 138 of the Oudh Rent Act means a person who has not the ostensible right to recover the rent and cannot include a co-lambardar who has a legal title to recover it. [p. 170, col. 2.]

A thing is deemed to be done in good faith where it is in fact done honestly and there can be no question of honesty where rent is paid to a person who has a legal title to receive it. As between a tenant and his landlord there is no doubt that a co-lambardar has such a title. [p. 170, col. 2.]

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

Wazir Hasan, A. J. C.—(December 8, 1924).—This appeal involves a point of general importance arising with reference to the construction of s. 138 of the Oudh Rent Act. It is argued on behalf of the appellants that the provisions of that section do not apply to a case where a tenant has paid his rent to a person who had admittedly a legal title to receive it. In support of that argument reliance is placed upon a decision of a Single Judge of this Court in the case of Mahadei Kuar v. Sant Bakhsh Singh (1). On the side of the respondent reference was made to the case of Nidha v. Ram Prasad (2). I think it advisable that the matter should be decided by a Bench consisting of two Judges. I make the Order of Reference accordingly.

JUDGMENT.—This is the defendants' appeal in a suit by the plaintiff-respondent for the recovery of arrears of rent under s. 108, cl. (2), of the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, for the years 1324, 1325 and Kharif 1326 Fasli. The plots in respect of which the rent is claimed are situate in one of the thoks of village Nahwaiya, Pargana Gondlamau, Tahsil Misrikh, District Sitapur. The total amount of the rent claimed was Rs. 356-0-6. The original defendant to the suit was Govinde tenant. He died during the pendency of the suit in the Court of first instance. On his death his sons, Maya Ram, Ajudhia Prasad and Gajadhar Prasad, were substituted on the record in place of their deceased father and finally by an order of this Court dated the 20th December 1921 one Randhir Singh was also made a defendant to the suit. The plea in defence raised by Govinde was one of payment.

The Court of first instance held that the plea was established except as regards the sum of Rs. 35-7-0. The result was that a decree for the amount just now mentioned was passed in favour of the plaintiff and the rest of the claim was dismissed. In deciding the suit the Court of first instance found that the tenant Govinde had paid the rent to Randhir Singh. The plaintiff appealed against the decision of the First Court. The learned Additional District Judge of Sitapur has given no definite finding as to the actual payment of the rent in suit by Govinde to Randhir Singh. On this question of fact our finding in agreement with the Court of first instance is that the rent was paid by Gobinde to Randhir Singh.

The lower Appellate Court accepted the plaintiff's appeal, reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and granted a decree to the plaintiff in terms of the claim. The three sons of Govinde and Randhir Singh are the appellants before us. The lower Appellate Court has found and the finding is accepted on both sides that Randhir Singh is a joint lambardar of the thok of 8-annas in which the lands in question are situate with the plaintiff. It has further found that in the years previous to those in respect of which the rent is claimed Govinde paid rent to the plaintiff. The ground of the decision of the lower Appellate Court may be stated in its own language: "It is true there are certain receipts to show that the rent for the period in question was realized by the fourth respondent (Randhir Singh) but a tenant has no right to depart from the previous practice and to pay his rent for the period in suit to a third person [Nidha v. Ram Prasad (2)] and in the absence of any evidence justifying the departure it cannot be said that the payments by Govinde were made in good faith." This ground is challenged in second appeal and we are of opinion that the appeal succeeds.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court was sought to be supported by the learned Advocate for the respondent, firstly, on the ground that under an arrangement subsisting between the two lambardars the plaintiff is entitled in virtue of that arrangement to realize the rent payable to Govinde for the lands in question. In this connection reference was made to a compromise dated the 19th March 1915 (Ex. A-4) and to the finding of the lower Appellate Court that in the years previous to those now in suit the plaintiff realized rent from Govinde. The answer to this argument is that no such arrangement was pleaded. The plaint is wholy silent even as to the fact that Randhir Singh was a co-lambardar. Ordinarily the power in regard to the recovery of the arrears of rent shall not be exercised by a sharer or a single lambardar when there are more lambardars than one in a joint estate—vide s. 126 of the Oudh Rent Act, 1886. It would, therefore, seem to follow that had there been any such arrangement as is now put forward on behalf of the respondent it would have been placed at the fore-front of the plaint. As to the compromise of 1915 (Ex. A-4), it was entered into between Govinde and the respondent's father in a suit brought by Govinde to contest a notice of ejectment issued by the father of the respondent. To this compromise Randhir Singh or his predecessor-in-interest was no party. Besides, Govinde professed to accept the tenancy of the lands in suit from the plaintiff at a certain rate of rent mentioned in the compromise and did no more.

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 237; 1 O. L. J. 570.
(2) 46 Ind. Cas. 6; 5 O. L. J. 176 at p. 178.

As to the 'practice' in the years previous to those in suit, there is an important piece of documentary evidence filed by the defendants and validly proved, which the lower Appellate Court entirely ignored to consider. This evidence diminishes to a large extent the evidential value of the so-called practice. This is Ex. B-1. It is a receipt for rent paid by Gobinde and is signed both by Randhir Singh and Madhoram. Madhoram is the uncle of the plaintiff. The Court of first instance was also of opinion that there was no valid arrangement amounting to a division of the joint lands or of the tenants concerned. We, therefore, reject the contention advanced on behalf of the respondent.

The second line of argument of the learned Advocate for the respondent was based on the provisions of s. 138 of the Oudh Rent Act and this is the argument which seems to be the basis of the decision of the lower Appellate Court. It is contended that Randhir Singh is the "third person" to whom the tenant Govinde has paid the rent but not in good faith because according to the finding of the lower Appellate Court he paid the rent to the plaintiff in the years previous to those in suit. We are of opinion that the "third person" in the section means a person who has not the ostensible right to recover the rent and cannot include a co-lambardar, who has also a legal title to recover it. A thing is deemed to be done in good faith where it is in fact done honestly and there can be no question of honesty where rent is paid to a person who has a legal title to receive it. As between a tenant and his landlord there is no doubt that a co-lambardar has such a title.

On behalf of the respondent reliance was placed upon a decision of a Single Judge of this Court in the case of Nidha v. Ram Prasad (2): "The answer is that no such point was raised for decision."—Per Viscount Haldane, L. C., in Secretary of State for India v. Moment (3).

We, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs throughout.

The High Court has general powers of superintendence over all inferior Courts and in the exercise of such powers it can direct the transfer of a case, where a District Judge has refused to exercise the power vested in him by law under s. 24 of the C. P. C.[p. 171, col. 2:]

Hari Nath Biwas v. Debendra Nath Biswas, 5 Ind. Cas. 771; 11 C. L. J. 218, referred to.

Rule issued in the matter of transfer of Money Suit No. 1099 of 1923 pending in the Court of the Munsif at Kalna, for trial with Title Suit No. 11 of 1924 pending in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Burdwan.

JUDGMENT.—In this Rule we are invited to transfer a case pending in the Court of the Munsif at Kalna to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan. The petitioner is a Hindu widow and her case is that the opposite party managed the properties which she and her co-widow inherited from their husband from the years 1320 to 1329. A suit was brought by the opposite party in the Munsif's Court at Kalna upon a hand-note alleged to have been executed by the petitioner in 1325. The defence taken by the petitioner in the hand-note suit is that the opposite party was managing her property during the time the hand-note is alleged to have been executed and that she had occasion to sign blank papers in the course of the litigations connected with the properties and that the opposite party got the hand-note fabricated in his favour. This suit was instituted by the opposite party in the Court of the Munsif at Kalna on the 27th November 1923 and the petitioner instituted her suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Burdwan on the 1st February 1924 for account from the opposite party for the period during which she alleges he was in management of her properties. The petitioner subsequently applied to the District Judge of Burdwan for transfer of the suit at Kalna to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, so that both the suits might be tried together. The learned District Judge refused that application but has assigned no reason for doing so. We are asked to transfer the Kalna case to Burdwan on the ground that the same issue is to be tried in both the Courts, namely, whether the opposite party was in charge of the properties belonging to the petitioner; and if so, whether the opposite party had occasion in the course of such management to have papers signed by the petitioner and to have fabricated the hand-note on one of them.

A preliminary objection is taken to the hearing of this Rule on the ground that the learned District Judge having refused to act under s. 24, C. P. C., this Court will not in the exercise of its concurrent jurisdiction deal with the same question. This is urged on general principles, especially in matters criminal, that where two Courts have been given concurrent jurisdiction and if one of them exercises that jurisdiction, the other ought not to exercise the same jurisdiction. This point came up for consideration in the case of Hari Nath Biswas v. Debendra Nath Biswas (1). The learned Judges there held that even though the District Judge refused to exercise the power vested in him by law under s. 24, C. P. C., this Court had jurisdiction to act under that section. Had we felt bound to investigate this point we would have tested the correctness of this view, but we think that we have general power of superintendence over all inferior Courts and our such powers are not limited by any course taken by the District Judge. We, therefore, propose to examine this case on its merits.

There is one issue common between the two cases, namely, whether the opposite party acted as agent of the petitioner. If we allow the two suits to be tried separately the issue as to the genuineness of the hand-note will have to be tried in both the suits. It is directly in issue in the hand-note suit before the Munsif and it will be directly in issue if the account suit is decided in the petitioner's favour and it is held that the opposite party is accountable to the petitioner. It will, therefore, be convenient to both parties to have the Kalna suit transferred to Burdwan so that the evidence on this point may not have to be given twice over.

There is another view of the matter. If the Munsif decides against the petitioner, she has yet the right to re-open the matter before the Subordinate Judge in the account suit and the decision of the Munsif will not have the legal effect of a decision of a Court of equal jurisdiction. Taking all the circumstances into consideration we think that the suit pending in the Court of the Munsif at Kalna (being Suit No. 1099 of 1923) be transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Burdwan. But in order to avoid delay in the hearing of the suit brought by the opposite party against the petitioner at Kalna for an indefinite period and to the inconvenience of examining witnesses on the same point twice over we recomend that the learned Subordinate Judge will find it convenient to try both the suits together.

The Rule is made absolute. We make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 10, O. XLI, r. 25, O. XLIII, r. 1 (a) Order returning plaint for presentation to proper Court Appeal - Remand order, legality of - Procedure.

The plaint in a suit was returned by the Subordinate Judge for presentation to the proper Court on the ground that the relief had been overvalued and that the suit was cognizable by a Munsif. An appeal was preferred against this order to the District Judge before whom it was admitted by both parties that the Trial Court's decision on the question of valuation was erroneous. The District Judge accepted the appeal and remanded certain issues to the Subordinate Judge for findings under O. XLI, r. 25 of the C. P. C.:

Held, (1) that the order of remand was entirely illegal as the appeal which was preferred to the District Judge was not an appeal from a decree but an appeal from an order;

(2) that the proper order for the District Judge to pass was an order setting aside the order of the Court below and directing the Subordinate Judge to re-admit the suit to its file and dispose of it on the merits.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, dated the 22nd December, 1923, modifying that of the Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 29th March 1923.

Mr. Radha Krishan, for Mr. Haider Husain, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Wasim, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a preliminary plea is raised by the plaintiff-appellant that the order of remand of the Court below against which the appeal is filed was passed without jurisdiction. This plea was not originally taken in the grounds of appeal, but as it raises a question of jurisdiction I have allowed the appellant to urge it and have heard respondent against it. The facts out of which it arises are as follows: The suit is one for possession of property formerly in possession of Musammat Bhagwanta. One of the principal questions in controversy was whether Musammat Bhagwanta held house No. 298 with absolute right or merely with a widow's estate. It was said that the other house never belonged to her at all. The Subordinate Judge framed seven issues. He decided the issue of the nature of Musammat Bhagwanta's ownership against the plaintiff, but he then went on to hold on the 6th issue that the relief had been overvalued and that the suit was cognizable by a Munsif. He, therefore, returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court under O. VII, r. 10, C.P.C. An appeal was preferred to the District Judge under O. XLIII, r. 1 (1), C. P. C. Before the District Judge it was admitted by both parties that the Trial Court's decision on the question of valuation was erroneous. The proper order for the District Judge to pass was, therefore, an order setting aside the order of the Court below and directing the Subordinate Judge to re-admit the suit to his file and dispose of it on the merits. Instead of this the learned District Judge tried the appeal as an appeal from a decree and remanded issues for findings under O. XLI, r. 25. This order was clearly illegal. By the terms of s. 2, C. P. C., an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court is not a decree. It is an order for an appeal against which special provision is made in O. XLIII. In my opinion the learned District Judge acted without jurisdiction in passing the order which he did pass. It has, no doubt, been held in a number of cases that where an Appellate Court remands a case under O. XLI, r. 25, where it should have been remanded under O. XLI, r. 23, or passes an order under r. 23 in a case not strictly covered by the rule, this is a mere defect in procedure and not a question of jurisdiction. The distinction between these cases and the present case is that in all those cases the Appellate Court was dealing with an appeal from a decree. It, therefore, had complete jurisdiction to make an order of remand and an error as to the precise grounds on which the remand is allowed or as to the precise rule under which the remand should be made is merely a question of procedure and not of jurisdiction. In the present case there being no decree the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to make a remand at all. I am, therefore, reluctantly compelled to set aside his order. It is not necessary, nor does the appellant desire, that the evidence should be recorded all over again. After the remand the Subordinate Judge did what he would have done if the proper order had been passed, namely, he heard evidence and recorded a decision on all the issues. The only difference between what he did and what he would have done if the correct order had been passed is that instead of embodying these findings in a judgment and decree from which an appeal could be preferred in the usual way he clothed them in the form of findings submitted to the Appellate Court in connection with the previous appeal. There has thus been no decree of the Trial Court at all. I, therefore, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and direct the Trial Court to record a judgment and decree in the case on the evidence which is already on the record after hearing arguments from the parties. In view of the late stage at which this objection has been made I allow no costs to the appellant.

Rule against an order of the Additional District Judge, Howrah, dated the 27th June 1924.

Babus Surendra Nath Ghosal and Jatindra Nath Batabyal, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against an order of the District Judge of Howrah, dated the 27th June 1924 rejecting the appeal preferred by the petitioners on the ground that no appeal lay from the order of the Court below and in the alternative the Rule is directed against an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Howrah dated the 28th July 1923 (wrongly mentioned as dated the 8th July 1923 in the order-sheet issuing the Rule). No one appears on behalf of the opposite parties, though the service upon them has been found to be in order. The facts are that one Becharam Singh instituted a suit against the petitioners in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Howrah. Subsequent to the institution of the suit he died, according to the petitioners, on the 21st February 1922 and according to the opposite party, on the 21st March 1922. On the 2nd June 1922, an application was made on behalf of the widow for substitution in place of the deceased plaintiff on the allegation that the plaintiff had died on the 21st March 1922. On the 7th June 1922, the learned Subordinate Judge passed an ex parte order granting the application and ordering substitution as prayed for. On the 2nd August 1922 the defendants-petitioners applied to have that order set aside on the ground that on the date on which the application for substitution was made by the opposite party the suit had already abated and in proof of it they produced a copy of the extract from the Register of births and deaths kept by the Calcutta Corporation. The learned Subordinate Judge, by his order dated the 12th August, held that, as a matter of fact, Becharam had died on the 21st February 1922 and that the suit had abated on the date on which the application was made. On the 16th September 1922 the opposite party again filed an application purporting to be one under O. XXII, r. 9, C. P. C., to set aside the order of abatement and to direct substitution of her name in place of the deceased plaintiff. That application was heard after a long time ex parte in the absence of the petitioners. The learned Subordinate Judge granted that application on the 28th July 1923 holding that the petitioners' right to apply under O. XXII, r. 9, C. P. C., for substitution and to pray for extension of time under cl. (3) of that rule was not lost by the previous order of his predecessor holding that the suit had abated. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the opposite party was not aware of the death of her husband within three months of his death. He accordingly set aside the order of abatement and restored the suit to its file in the original number and ordered the issue of summonses upon the defendants. The petitioners thereupon filed an appeal to the District Judge who held that no appeal lay to him. We have heard the learned Pleader who appears for the petitioners and have gone through the papers in connection with this case and have come to the conclusion that the order passed by the learned District Judge is a correct one and cannot be disturbed. Under O. XLIII, there is no appeal from an order setting aside an abatement. Besides the petition that was filed on the 16th September 1922 by the opposite party was virtually one for review of the order passed on the 12th August 1923; but the application itself does not purport to be one for review. The prayer made in the application was that the order holding that the suit had abated might be discharged under O. XXII, r. 9 and substitution made. The Subordinate Judge before whom the matter came held that the petitioners had still the right to apply under O. XXII, r. 9 for setting aside the order of abatement. Be that as it may, the real question that we are called upon to decide is whether the order passed by the Subordinate Judge on the 28th July 1923 is one under O. XXII, r. 9, C. P. C. We are of opinion that the order is bad in law. The learned Subordinate Judge has not taken into consideration the period of limitation that is fixed by law for a party to apply to set aside an order of abatement passed under O. XXII, r. 9. The period fixed for the purpose under Art. 171 is two months from the date of abatement. In the present case the abatement took place on the 21st May according to the petitioners or on the 21st June according to the opposite party. Whichever date is taken, the application filed by the opposite party for setting aside the order of abatement on the 16th September 1923 must be held to be barred by limitation. In this view we do not think that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in allowing the application of the opposite party for setting aside the order of abatement.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly on the 28th July 1923 set aside. We make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal which raises a rather interesting point. One Badal owned a certain property and he left behind him a widow Musammat Talashi. On her death disputes arose as to who was the heir of Badal, and two claimants came forward, one Ram Sunder and the other Bhawani Prasad. In mutation proceedings the Court declared in favour of Ram Sunder, and proceedings were taken with regard to the redemption of a mortgage, and there was an arbitration and an award which as between mortgagee and mortgagor fixed the price of the redemption of this mortgage at Rs. 250-8-0. Bhawani Prasad disregarded the mutation proceedings and the award by which the property could be redeemed on payment of Rs. 250-8-0 and sued for redemption. He included in that action Jai Karan Singh and Ram Sunder. He withdrew the action against Ram Sunder, and came to a compromise with Jai Karan Singh, which compromise was embodied in a decree and provided that he (Bhawani Prasad) might claim redemption.

Thereupon Ram Sunder commenced a suit asking that the compromise decree above mentioned was not binding upon him, and he, undoubtedly, set himself up as having been the legal heir of Badal, and as the property had by virtue of the compromise decree passed into the hands of Bhawani Prasad, Ram Sunder sought possession of that property on payment of Rs. 250-8-0. In that action the principal and, indeed, from looking into the record, the only substantial issue was whether Ram Sunder was the legitimate son of Bhikha? He contended that he was. Bhawani Prasad said he was not, and that he was an illegitimate son. In support of his legitimacy Ram Sunder put one Dukharan Dube into the box. Dukharan Dube was obviously going to support Ram Sunder, and thereupon Bhawani Prasad made, with the permission of the Court, an offer to the plaintiff through his Vakil, which offer was reduced to writing. Bhawani Prasad offered that if Dukharan Dube, a member of the biradri, would eat kachcha food cooked by Musammat Pargashi and served by Ram Sunder, "the plaintiff's suit may be decreed." That offer was accepted by the plaintiff, and the hearing of the suit temporarily suspended. Musammat Pargashi cooked food, it was served by Ram Sunder and eaten by Dukharan Dube, and on the acceptance of that offer and due performance of all the conditions the Munsif, in our opinion, with perfect propriety decreed the suit. Bhawani Prasad was a man who put forward that offer upon the advice of his Vakil, and it was an offer which could have been accepted, and all conditions that he made were complied with, and he having made the offer expressed his willingness that the plaintiff's suit should be decreed if the conditions were complied with. It is surely open to a litigant, be he plaintiff or defendant, at any stage of the proceedings to make an offer to the other side to bring litigation to a close. That is all that Bhawani Prasad did. If the offer made by him had not been accepted, he would have relied on its refusal as a strong ground for rejecting the evidence of Dukharan Dube and that was the advantage which he sought to gain. That was no doubt the purpose that he sought to get by making the offer. He cannot now be heard to say, every thing having been done by the offeree, the person to whom the offer was made, that the promise that he made that the suit should be decreed should not thereafter take effect. The learned Single Judge of this Court looking at the matter said, "Apart from authority, I should have been disposed to accept the view taken by the Courts below." But he felt himself overborne by a decision in which cases of this kind were supposed to have some relation to "adjustment of suits" within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 3 of the C. P. C. In our opinion this type of cases have nothing to do with adjustment of suits at all, but must be regarded in each case as an offer capable of acceptance or rejection by the person to whom it is made. If the offer is accepted in its terms and complied with accurately and fully, the promises made by the offerer must be carried out by him.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the judgment of the lower Court restored with costs including fees of both hearings in this Court on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1 -Application for leave to withdraw suit—Formal defect, absence of—Order granting leave—Revision.

Where, on an application for leave to withdraw a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, which merely alleges that there is a formal defect in the plaint but does not specify what the defect is, the Court, without applying its mind to the question at all and without considering what the alleged formal defect is, grants leave for the withdrawal of the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, it acts with material irregularity and its order is liable to be set aside in revision.

Mr. M. A. Aziz (with him Mr. Iqbal Ahmad), for the Applicants.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision against an order passed by a Munsif allowing a plaint to be withdrawn under O. XXIII, r. 1 of the C. P. C. It is admitted that the order cannot be supported on the merits. The question is whether any revision lies. In Rahmat Ullah v. Dharam Singh (1), Banerji, J., allowed an application in revision in precisely similar circumstances. The Bombay and Calcutta High Courts have taken the same view in Rajendra Lal v. Atal Bihari (2) and Bai Kashibai v. Shidappa Anapa Pujari (3). It is urged for the respondent that the same Judge who decided Rahmat Ullah v. Dharam Singh (1) was a member of a Bench which held that no revision lay in Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (4). An examination of the two cases shows that they are not really contradictory. In Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (4), the plaintiff based his application upon the fact that formal proof of a certain plaint had not been given. The Court had to consider whether this amounted to a sufficient cause within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 1. It applied its mind to the question and decided erroneously that it did. As the Court had applied its mind to a question which it had jurisdiction to decide, it was held that even though the decision was wrong no revision lay under s. 115 of the C. P. C. The facts here are different. The Court never applied its mind to the question at all. The plaintiff merely alleged that there was a formal defect in the plaint but did not specify what the defect was and, in fact, as is now admitted, there was no formal defect whatever. The learned Munsif in his judgment does not state what the formal defect is. He simply says in general terms "the frame of the suit is bad." Under these circumstances the decision in Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das (4) is no bar to my holding, as I do hold, that the Munsif acted with material irregularity in allowing the suit to be withdrawn with liberty to file a fresh suit. I, therefore, set aside his order and direct him to restore the suit to his file and dispose of it according to law. If the plaintiff wishes to withdraw he must do so unconditionally. The respondents will have their costs of this revision.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—Muhammadan Law—Transfer in lieu of dower, whether sale—Registration, whether necessary.

Where a transfer of property is made in lieu of a sum of money, whether the money is paid in cash or by the extinction of a dower debt, the transaction comes within the definition of sale contained in s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act which is applicable to a transaction between Muhammadans. Where the value of the property transferred is over Rs. 100, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument. [p. 177, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 7th January 1924, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 29th September 1923.

Mr. Naim Ullah, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether a transfer by a Muhammadan husband of immoveable property of the value of over Rs. 4,000 to his wife in lieu of her dower debt which is said to have amounted to Rs. 6,000 requires a registered instrument or not. The question depends on whether it is a gift of the kind known in Muhammadan Law as hiba-bil-ewaz or a sale. The Chapter of the Transfer of Property Act which deals with gifts does not effect any rule of Muhammadan Law, whereas the provisions of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act are applicable to persons of all religions.

The suit arises out of execution proceedings. The property in suit was attached in execution of a decree as being the property of Jafar Khan to whom it originally belonged. The appellants are Jafar Khan's sons and daughter, and their case is that Jafar Khan made an oral gift of the property to their mother Musammat Maksuman Bibi in lieu of her dower debt. The Court below has held that the transaction amounted to a sale and could only be made by a registered instrument, and the only plea argued before me in appeal is that this finding is incorrect. The Court below relies on the decision in Asalat Fatima v. Shambhu Dayal (1). That decision is directly opposed to the appellants' contention. It lays down that a transfer of immoveable property of the value of over Rs. 100 in lieu of dower cannot be recognized unless made by a registered instrument. The appellants, however, rely on the decision in Ram Prasad v. Rahat Bibi (2), where a similar transaction was treated as one of hiba-bil-ewaz. I have, therefore, to consider which of these two decisions I should follow. I might have referred the decision to a Bench but I have not been asked by the parties to do so, and the question appears to me to be free from any real doubt. The decision in Ram Prasad v. Rahat Bibi (2) was given in a pre-emption case and the question whether a registered instrument was necessary did not arise. The decision was also a very short one, it does not contain any discussion of authority, and the contrary decision in Asalat Fatima v. Shambhu Dayal (1) does not appear to have been cited.

The appellants' learned Counsel has referred me to the discussion of the question of hiba-bil-ewaz in Tyabji's Muhammadan Law Second Edition, pages 460 to 463. The authority of that learned author is really against the appellants. He describes a hiba-bil-ewaz as consisting of two separate acts of donation, i.e., of mutual or reciprocal gifts of specific property between two persons each of whom is alternately donor and donee. A makes a gift to B and B makes a gift in his turn to A, so that the gift is a return for the gift made to him by A. He says that such reciprocal gifts are quite familiar to us in modern times, though in these days the return gift would usually be made on a subsequent occasion and not immediately after the original gift. This is entirely different from the transfer of property in lieu of a money price even though that price consists of the extinction of a debt, and indeed the same learned author states on page 494 of the same book that the provisions of Ch. VIII of the Transfer of Property Act would, in his opinion, cover a gift of an actionable claim. Where the transfer of property is made in lieu of a sum of money, whether the money is paid in cash or by the extinction of a dower debt, the transaction comes within the definition of sale in s. 54 which is applicable to a transaction between Muhammadans. Besides the case of this Court the high authority of Mahmood, J., is in support of the same view. In Fida Ali v. Muzzaffar Ali (3) he held that a transfer in lieu of dower was a sale. There is a Calcutta decision to the same effect in which it was directly decided that s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act applied to a transaction of this kind [Abbas Ali Shikdar v. Karim Bakhsh Shikdar (4).] The view taken by the learned Judge is supported both by principle and by authority. I affirm his decree and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 7, Sch. I, Art. 144—Hindu Law—Joint family—Eldest brother, whether represents minor brothers—Decree against father—Sale of family property in execution of decree—Suit by sons to set aside sale—Limitation.

Where several Hindu brothers constitute a joint family, the eldest brother represents the entire family and can give a valid discharge within the meaning of s. 7 of the Limitation Act on behalf of his minor brothers.

Rati Ram v. Nadar, 49 Ind. Cas. 990; 17 A. L. J. 649; 41 A. 435, followed.

After a decree was passed against a Hindu the latter died and his minor sons were brought on the record as his legal representatives. In execution of the decree property belonging to the family was attached and sold. More than twelve years after the sale of the property but within twelve years of the delivery of possession, the sons brought a suit to have the sale set aside on the ground that they were not properly represented in the execution proceedings and that the property could not be sold because the father having died as a member of a joint Hindu family, the property had become the sole property of the sons by survivorship. At the date of the institution of the suit the eldest brother had attained the age of twenty-one years, while the youngest was just over eighteen years of age:

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 8th February 1923.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT:—The plaintiffs' suit has failed in the Courts below, inter alia, on the ground of limitation.

It appears that a decree was obtained against the plaintiff-appellants' father by one Ram Prasad. In execution of that decree the property in suit was attached and sold. Before the attachment the father had died and his sons the appellants were brought on the record with the Nazir as their guardian for the suit. Over 12 years after the sale of the property, and just within 12 years of the delivery of possession, the appellants brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen to have the sale set aside and to recover possession, on the ground that they were not properly represented in the execution proceedings and that the property could not be sold because the father having died as a joint member of a Hindu family it had become the sole property of the appellants.

The Court of first instance found that the debt was one which was binding on the plaintiffs. It found that there was no proper representation of the plaintiffs in the execution department but it found that the suit was barred by limitation.

On appeal the learned Judge found that there was a proper representation of the appellants in the execution department and he also found that the suit was barred by 12 years' limitation.

On the question of limitation we are clear that the decree of the Court below was right and we do not propose to consider the question of the proper representation by the Nazir. In this case, at the date of suit all the plaintiffs were majors two were more than 21 and the youngest of them was found to have been just over 18 years of age when the suit was filed. It is urged on behalf of the appellants that the youngest of the appellants could maintain his suit because he had three years from his attaining majority and as he could maintain the suit, the suits of his elder brothers would also be within time, the family being joint. This argument however is concluded by the recent case of Rati Ram v. Nadar (1). It was held that where there was an adult brother who could execute a decree on behalf of himself and the minor brother it must be assumed that the former could give a discharge within the meaning of s. 7 of the Limitation Act and that the younger brother could not execute the decree more than three years after the application of the elder brother. In other words it was held that a joint elder brother in a Hindu family represented the entire family and could, therefore, give a discharge within the meaning of s. 7 of the Limitation Act on behalf of his minor brother. This case, in our opinion, is on all fours with the case before us and the appeal fails and is, hereby, dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fee in this Court on the higher scale.

Babu Bipin Chandra Bose, for the Appellants.

Babu Jahnabi Charan Das Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question raised in this appeal is what is the rate of interest on arrears of rent payable by the defendants to the plaintiff. The plaintiff-appellant has brought the present suit for arrears of rent against the defendants charging interest at the rate of 150 per cent. per annum in accordance with the terms of the kabuliyat dated 1874. Both the Courts below have held that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover interest at such high rate as 150 per cent. per annum on the ground that the rate of interest was hard and unconscionable. They further held that the stipulation as to payment of interest was penal and was inserted by way of threat and was not intended to be acted upon and was never acted upon. In this view they held that the stipulation was in the nature of penalty and fixed the rate of interest at 25 per cent. per annum.

The plaintiff appeals and argues that there is no evidence on the record to show that the bargain was hard and unconscionable or brought about by undue influence on the part of the plaintiff. We think that this contention is right. According to the recent decisions of the Judicial Committee reported in the 23rd Volume of the Calcutta Weekly Notes at pages 130, 233 and 918* [Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (1) and Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (2)] it is clear that where a contract is challenged as providing a very high rate of interest, it is necessary to prove that one party had undue advantage over the other in the matter of settlement of the rate of interest. As regard the stipulation being of a penal character, there is nothing to support it; and we do not think that it will be right to hold that in every case where there is a stipulation for payment of interest on non-payment of rent within a certain time, it must be taken to be penal. The ground upon which the decision of the Courts below is based is, therefore, unsustainable.

Hence we have to consider the question raised before us in the light of the documentary evidence produced by the parties. The claim is based upon a kabuliyat executed by the defendants' predecessors in favour of the plaintiff's predecessor so long ago as 1874. It is headed as a raiyati kabuliyat. The lease is not for any term. It lays down the mode of calculation of rent which is a progressive one from 1881 to 1886. Some of the terms of this lease are that the tenant and his heirs will have no right to transfer the holding by gift or sale or Will, nor will it be attached in execution of a decree against the tenant or his heirs. There is a condition that if the rent is not paid according to the instalments fixed in the document every month, interest will be charged at the rate of 2 annas in the rupee per month. The learned Vakil for the appellant argues that the tenancy having been created before the Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation it is governed by the terms in the kabuliyat as to the rate of interest and is not affected by the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the first place, it is contended that the kabuliyat creates an occupancy right, and secondly, it is argued that it creates a permanent heritable raiyati lease. As we understand the scope of the lease, we take it to be a lease creating raiyati tenancy without fixing any period of the lease. There is no word in the lease signifying permanancy nor are there any expressions which can be taken to mean that it was intended to be heritable. The use of the word "heir" in connection with the restriction of the right of transfer does not necessarily mean that the lease is a heritable one. It is possible that the landlord anticipating that he might not have any occasion to eject the tenant inserted the above condition that it could not be transferred by the tenant himself or any one succeeding him. Such being the character of the lease the next question that arises for consideration is how far it is to be governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Bengal Tenancy Act came into operation when the tenant had not acquired the right of occupancy. As we have said, there was no period fixed for the lease. It must, therefore, be considered to be a lease from year to year. In 1885 when the Bengal Tenancy Act came into force the tenant had the status of a raiyat holding the land from year to year. The consideration, therefore, which influenced the decision in the case of Chandra Nath Sarma Motayed v. Shaikh Inamdi (3) would, in our judgment, weigh in this case also. In that case there was a lease executed before the Bengal Tenancy Act for a certain period which had terminated before the Act came into operation. It was held that the tenant in that case was holding over and must be supposed to be a tenant from year to year and if rent is claimed for any period after the termination of the lease, the claim must be governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We think the same principle will apply to the present case. Under s. 67, Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover more interest than is fixed by that section. In this view of the matter we think that the plaintiff has been awarded more than what he would be entitled to under the law, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

* There is no case on page 918 of 23 C. W. N. The correct case is on page 980 of the same Volume which is of the Calcutta High Court, not of the Privy Council, Ektar Sikdar v. Wajuddi Tati, 52 Ind. Cas. 722; 23 C. W. N. 980.—[Ed.]

The father of a joint Hindu family is competent to represent the family for purposes of litigation in suits. [p. 181, col. 1.]

Kishan Prasad v. Har Narain Singh, 9 Ind. Cas. 739; 33 A. 272; 15 C. W. N. 321; 8 A. L. J. 256; 9 M. L. T. 343; 13 C. L. J. 345; 21 M. L. J. 378; 13 Bom. L. R. 359; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 395; 38 I. A mortgagee of joint family property from the father brought a suit to recover possession of the property against the father. The Trial Court directed that the sons of the mortgagor should be brought on the record as defendants, and when they were so brought the suit was dismissed as barred by limitation on the ground that the sons were made parties to the suit more than twelve years after the date of the mortgage:

Held, (1) that the suit could be carried on properly against the father alone who represented the joint family for the purposes of the litigation and to whom it was open to raise the defence that though he admitted the execution of the mortgage deed the money due thereunder could not be recovered by sale of the joint family property unless the plaintiff proved legal necessity for the debt or payment of antecedent debts out of the loan; [ibid.]

(2) that, therefore, the sons were not necessary parties to the suit and the suit could not be dismissed as barred by time. [ibid.]

A recital in a deed of mortgage executed by the father of a joint family that the money has been borrowed for family necessity is merely a piece of evidence and in the absence of any other evidence it does not amount to proof of family necessity. [p. 181, col. 2; p. 182, col. 1.]

Ramman Lal v. Ram Gopal, 47 Ind. Cas. 987; 5 O. L. J. 629; 21 O. C. 200, referred to.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated 30th November 1923 confirming that of the Munsif, Akbarpur, dated 29th March 1923.

Mr. Naimullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. M. Ahmad for Mr. H. N. Dass, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Musammat Rajwanta sued Rameshar to recover possession as mortgagee over a certain area of land on foot of a mortgage-deed executed in her favour by Rameshar on 30th May 1910. The area mortgaged was 14 bighas of which 9 bighas are at present in the possession of the plaintiff mortgagee. The suit related to the balance of the area of 5 bighas.

The Trial Court directed that the sons of Rameshar, Chunni and Srinewas minor, under the guardianship of Chunni, may be brought on the record and when they were so brought the Court held that the suit was barred by limitation because the sons were made parties to the suit more than 12 years after the date of the mortgage. That Court decided the other issues as well and held that legal necessity so as to make the consideration binding on the joint family property was proved to the extent of Rs. 510 out of Rs. 1,000 which was the consideration of the deed.

The lower Appellate Court on appeal by the plaintiff dismissed the appeal only on the ground of limitation. In this second appeal I am of opinion that the suit cannot be dismissed on the ground of limitation. If the sons do not desire to be parties to the suit, the suit can be carried on against the father who represented the joint family for the purposes of the litigation. The defence would be open to him alone to say that though he admitted the execution of the bond the entire money due thereon could not be recovered by sale of the joint family property unless the plaintiff proved legal necessity for the debt or payment of any antecedent debt out of the loan. Under O. I, r. 9, no suit shall be defeated by reason of non-joinder of parties and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it.

The principle of representation by the father of the joint family for the purposes of litigation is well recognised. In Kishan Prasad v. Har Narain Singh (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down the principle of representation by the managing member of a joint Hindu family as regards the carrying on the joint family business and suits brought to enforce contracts made on behalf of the joint family. Earlier in the same year in 1911 Bench of the Madras High Court decided in Sheikh Ibrahim Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar (2) that the manager of a joint family property has, as such manager, the right to represent the family in suits. That was a case where the manager had brought a suit by himself and their Lordships were of opinion that a suit by such a manager on behalf of the joint family will be maintainable without making the other members parties to the suit. In the following year a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court laid down in Hori Lal v. Nimanan Kunwar (3) that where in a suit for sale on a mortgage the defendants mortgagors were the managing members of a joint Hindu family who in that capacity had purchased the mortgaged property the family was sufficiently represented by the managing members and that the suit would not fail by reason of the non-joinder of the other members of the family. The case quoted by the other side of Ram Kinkar Biswas v. Akhil Chandra Chaudhuri (4) is not relevant to this discussion. It merely pointed out that the provisions of s. 22 of the Limitation Act would apply where new defendants were added to a suit. In the present case even if the suit be considered to be barred against the sons, relief can be granted to the plaintiff against the joint family property with only the father the manager of the family, as sole defendant to the suit.

Both the Subordinate Courts were influenced by an absence of the allegation in the plaint that Rameshar was sued as manager of joint family. Rameshar alone was sued at the time and no occasion had arisen then to make a statement as to his representative character. The sons themselves offered to be made parties on the allegation of the jointness of the family which necessarily implied that the father was the manager, so the plaintiff is merely adopting the case put forward by the defence.

The other issues may also be decided here. The Trial Court has given excellent reasons for holding that legal necessity for the debt, so as to bind the joint family property, is proved for part of the consideration only to the amount of Rs. 510. It was argued here that the recital by the father, the manager of the family, was binding on the sons and in support of this contention a Bench ruling of this Court in Ramman Lal v. Rim Gopal (5) was quoted. The judgment does not contain any such pronouncement. It merely says that such recital shall be evidence. In the absence of any other evidence the recital does not amount to proof. It was the duty of the plaintiff to prove the prior mortgage-deed of 27th June, 1899 but he failed to do so and as regards the two sums of money amounting to Rs. 180 paid in cash to the manager, there is no evidence that the debt was contracted for joint family purposes.

I hold that the mortgage is binding on the joint family property to the extent of Rs. 510.

The appeal, however, cannot succeed because the plaintiff is already in possession of more than half mortgaged property. It will be inequitable to permit her to take possession of the balance of the property when only half the amount of the consideration of the mortgage was proved to be binding on the joint family property. It was suggested by the plaintiff's learned Counsel that the balance of the money Rs. 490 may be received from the plaintiff and possession granted to her of the balance of the mortgaged property. I do not think that would be fair method of deciding this case. The Court cannot order the father to enter into a fresh contract on behalf of the family when there is no family necessity for a further loan of Rs. 490.

In the result I dismiss the appeal but having regard to the plaintiff's success on the main question I direct that parties shall bear their own costs of all the Courts.

An agreement between a vendor and a vendee as to the amount of rent to be paid by the former as an ex-proprietary tenant is not by itself void. So long as a reasonable rent is fixed by the parties the Revenue Court can accept it as a fair estimate of the rent to be paid under s. 36 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act by the ex-proprietary tenant. The ultimate word on the question of the amount of rent, however, lies with the Revenue Court. [p. 183, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Budaun, dated the 19th of March 1923.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Appellant.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal must be decreed. The plaintiff is the respondent in this Court. He sold to the defendant-appellant certain zemindari property and became thereby an ex-proprietary tenant of certain sir lands. On the very day on which the sale-deed was executed the plaintiff executed an agreement of rent by which he agreed to pay a sum of Rs. 170 a year as the rent of the ex-proprietary holding. On foot of this agreement the purchaser made an application in the Revenue Court under s. 36 of the Land Revenue Act to have a rent assessed. The Revenue Court assessed it at the same sum of Rs. 170 as the plaintiff had agreed to pay. The order was an ex parte one. The plaintiff made an attempt to have the order to set aside and the case re-heard, but he failed. Thereupon he brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen.

The plaintiff alleged in the plaint that the kabuliyat had been obtained from him by exercise of undue influence and pressure. He also alleged that the rent fixed was much higher than the rent which could lawfully be fixed for the holding. The suit failed in the Court of first instance. The learned Munsif came to the conclusion that no case of fraud or undue influence had been made out. He was also of opinion that evidence was adduced to prove fraud of a kind other than that alleged in the plaint. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal agreed with the Court of first instance that the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief on the ground of fraud. But he accepted the argument that the kabuliyat was void as a matter of law, the effect of it being a contravention of the provisions of s. 36 of the Land Revenue Act.

The sole question for determination in this appeal, therefore, is whether on the ground taken up by the Court below a declaratory decree could be granted in favour of the respondent.

There have been some cases discussing the question whether it was open to a vendee and a vendor to arrive at an agreement as to what rent should be paid by the vendor with respect to his ex-proprietary tenancy. The latest case on the point is that of Jahangira v. Karrar Husain (1). An earlier case is Prag v. Sital Pershad (2). In the former case it was held that an agreement between the vendor and the vendee as to the rent to be paid by the former was not by itself void. So long as it was a reasonable rent that was fixed by the parties the Revenue Court could accept it as a fair estimate of the rent to be paid under s. 36 of the Revenue Act by an ex-proprietary tenant. Thus, it is clear that an agreement by itself is not enforcible in a Court of justice. On the other hand it is not a void contract. The ultimate word on the question of the amount of rent must be said by the Revenue Court and that has been done in this case. The Revenue Court held definitely that the rent should be Rs. 170.

It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiff-respondent should not be granted any declaratory decree. The agreement by itself is not void and a prayer for its avoidance cannot be made the object of any suit. If it is allowed to stand it cannot do any harm to the plaintiff. Further, a mere declaratory decree should not be granted where the grant of the decree would be an useless affair. The grant of a declaratory decree is a matter within the discretion of the Court and the Court is not bound to make a declaratory decree simply because it is within its competence to do so.

The appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below is set aside and the decree of the First Court is restored. The appellant will have his costs throughout. The costs in this Court will include Counsels fees on the higher scale.

Second appeal under s. 100, C. P. C., against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 17th January 1924, setting aside the decree of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated 23rd September 1922.

Mr. Naimullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Daya Kishen Seth, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued for possession of five specified plots and the defence was so far as this Court is concerned only one of adverse possession. The Trial Court dismissed the suit as regards two plots and part of a third but on appeal by the plaintiffs the entire suit was decreed. The defendant Nageshar has instituted this second appeal.

No argument was advanced as regards plot No. 1533. As regards the other plots the only evidence of adverse possession on which the learned Counsel for the appellant has relied was the entry of Nageshar as tenant of the plots in suit during a large number of years in the khasra of the village from 1315 to 1326 F. When this is the only evidence it can be regarded as evidence of the defendant being a tenant of the plaintiffs and not of the defendant putting forward adverse title as proprietor as against the plaintiffs. I do not think I can accede to the learned Counsel's argument that I must look at the entries only for the purpose of establishing possession and not as to the character of the possession. The rulings quoted by him are not applicable here. In Nadir Singh v. Anpurna Kunwar (1) the entry in the village record was of an under-proprietary title; so it was held there by a learned Judge of this Court that adverse possession as under-proprietor was established. In the other case of Sheo Gobind v. Ambika Prasad (2) it is not clear as to whether the evidence of adverse possession consisted of entires in the village record. There is no mention in the report of an entry of the name of the claimant by way of adverse possession in the column of tenants in a khasra of any village. I agree with the observations of my learned brother Saiyed Wazir Hasan in Durga v. Rampadarath (3) that the question in such a case is whether these facts establish adverse possession so as to give title to the claimant by prescription, and that in the absence of any evidence to the contrary the entries in the revenue papers must be deemed to represent correctly the relation between the parties to the effect that the claimant was tenant and not in adverse possession by right of being proprietor. The tenant now claims adverse possession so he can be ejected as a trespasser through the Civil Court. In my opinion the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Riparian owners, rights and liabilities of—Obstruction—Injunction, suit for—Cause of action—Present use of water, whether necessary.

Every riparian proprietor has, subject to similar natural rights of upper and lower proprietors, the right to have the water of a natural stream come to him in its ordinary and accustomed course, undiminished in flow, quantity and quality, and unaffected in temperature and to go from him without obstruction. The same principle applies to a natural stream flowing in an artificial channel. [p. 185, col. 1.]

Ram Kripal Singh v. Hanuman Singh, 59 Ind. Cas. 929; 6 P. L. J. 6; 2 P. L. T. 122, relied on.

An upper proprietor has, in the absence of a right acquired by contract or by prescriptive use, no right to dam back a river running through his land and impound as much of the water as he may find convenient for the purpose of irrigation, leaving only the surplus, if any, for the use of the proprietors below. [ibid.]

Debi Pershad Singh v. Joynath Singh, 24 C. 865 at p. 874; 24 I. A. 60; 1 C. W. N. 401; 7 M. L. J. 120; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 209; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1245 (P. C.), followed.

In such a case in order to give a riparian owner a cause of action for a suit it is not necessary that the plaintiff or any other riparian proprietor should make any actual use of the water at the time of the suit; it is sufficient if he is prevented by the action of the defendant from any possible use of the water due to the obstruction caused by erecting the dam. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Bhandara, dated 31st August 1923, in Civil Appeal No. 5 of 1923.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. L. Subhedar and S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the landlord of Mouza Basipar, Tahsil Gondia, sued the defendants, who are the tenants of the same village, for the removal of a dam erected by them across a nala which flows from the plaintiff's tank through the land of the defendants and further down through the land of the plaintiff. The First Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit, but on appeal the Additional District Judge, Bhandara, set aside the decree and granted the plaintiff an injunction against the defendants, restraining them from obstructing the flow of the water by erecting a dam across the stream, and Rs. 5 as damages. No decree for removal of the dam was necessary as it had already ceased to exist at the time of the suit. The defendants make this second appeal.

There is very little to be said in this appeal. The learned Pleader for the appellants desired to argue that the lower Appellate Court was wrong because it treated the case as one of a natural stream, whereas it was really one of an artificial stream. I cannot however allow this argument to be raised because in the pleadings the defendants very clearly admitted on 18th January 1922 that the stream in question was a natural stream, and the case has been throughout tried on that supposition. The defendants cannot, therefore, be allowed in second appeal to alter this position and contend that the stream is an artificial one. The appeal must, therefore, be decided on the basis of the stream being a natural one.

The law as regards natural streams is very clear and has been stated over and over again in a number of cases, both English and Indian. The defendants are the upper riparian proprietors, and the plaintiff is the lower riparian proprietor, and as a general proposition every riparian proprietor has, subject to similar natural rights of upper and lower proprietors, the right to have water come to him in its ordinary and accustomed course, undiminished in flow, quantity and quality, and unaffected in temperature, and to go from him without obstruction. A large number of cases on the point will be found collected in Peacock's Easements Law, 3rd Edition, p. 273. I need not repeat them here, but it has also been held in Ram Kripal Singh v. Hanuman Singh (1), that the same principle applies to a natural stream flowing in an artificial channel. Under no circumstances can the defendant claim to erect a dam across the stream, thus depriving the lower riparian proprietor of the use of water.

It has been contended that the plaintiff does not make any use of the water of the stream, and at the close of the case an application was put in, asking the Court to make a personal inspection of the place in order to satisfy itself that the level of the stream is such that the plaintiff's land cannot be irrigated from it. I refused this application because it is not necessary under the law that the plaintiff or any other riparian proprietor should make any actual use of the water at the time of the suit. It is sufficient if he is prevented by the action of the defendants from any possible use of the water due to the obstruction caused by erecting a dam. It was clearly laid down by the Privy Council in Debi Pershad Singh v. Joynath Singh (2), that an upper proprietor has, in the absence of a right acquired by contract or by prescriptive use, no right to dam back a river running through his land and impound as much of the water as he may find convenient for the purposes of irrigation, leaving only the surplus, if any, for the use of the proprietors below.

In these circumstances I see no reason to differ from the view taken by the lower Appellate Court and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second civil appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 5th December 1923, confirming that of the Munsif, Haveli, Fyzabad, dated the 28th April 1923.

Mr. Haider Husain, for the Appellant.
Mr. M. Wasim, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellants and their elder brother Jagga Singh are members of a Hindu joint family. The name of the eldest brother Jagga Singh is alone recorded in the revenue papers. The present suit was brought for a declaration that the share of the joint family consisting of these three brothers is larger than the share recorded in their names in the khewat. The exact figures are given in the plaint but are not material for the purposes of this appeal. The question for decision is whether the plaintiffs are precluded from bringing this suit by reason of an order passed against them under ss 111 (1) (b) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act requiring them to institute a civil suit for the determination of the question of title within three months. Proceedings for the partition of this village had been instituted in the Revenue Court. In the course of these proceedings the plaintiffs filed an objection purporting to be under s. 111 of the Land Revenue Act raising the question of title which is raised in this suit. The Revenue Court purporting to act under cl. (b) of that section passed an order on 11th September 1922 requiring them to institute a civil suit within three months. They did not institute the present suit till 15th January 1923 nearly a month after the time given in the order had expired. It is established both by the authority of this Court and of the Allahabad High Court that where a valid order is passed under s. 111 (1) (b) and the suit is not brought within the period of three months no subsequent suit can be filed. This was laid down in Dhanesh Prasad v. Gaya Prasad (1) and Taimur Ali Shah v. Shah Mohammad Khan (2). The case of the plaintiff-appellants is that they are not recorded co-sharers in the mahal and, therefore, the order passed under s. 111 (b) was a nullity and is not binding on them.

The question turns on whether the plaintiffs can be treated as recorded co-sharers in virtue of the record of the name of their eldest brother Jagga Singh. It has been assumed by the Court below, and may fairly be presumed in the absence of anything to suggest the contrary, that Jagga Singh was manager of the joint family and that his name was recorded in that capacity. It is a common, though not an invariable, practice in the case of zemindari owned by a joint family for the name of the manager alone to be recorded in the revenue papers. It seems to me that in such cases the manager is recorded in a representative capacity, and it is really the joint family which is the recorded co-sharer. The power of the manager to represent the family in legal proceedings has been affirmed in a number of cases of which Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (3) may be cited as an example. If this were not the case, the curious result would be reached that while the head and natural representative of the family was bound it would be open to any junior member of the family to re-open the whole partition at any time on the ground that his name was not recorded. Incidentally it may be noted that the plaintiffs acted on this view and filed their objection under s. 111 of the Land Revenue Act in the Revenue Court. It is only after they had failed to comply with the order passed that they thought of raising the plea that the order was not binding on them.

The case of Bhagwan Dei v. Arjun Singh (4) relied on by the appellants is not really in point. That case only held that s. 333 (k) of the Land Revenue Act did not bar a suit by a junior member of the family to contest an alienation by the manager on the ground that it was made without legal necessity. The question of the validity of an alienation is purely one between the manager and the contesting co-parcener or co-parceners and did not arise at all in the partition proceedings. On the other hand the case of Ram Lakhan Singh v. Rampal Singh (5) is direct authority in favour of the respondents. In that case the plaintiffs who were minor sons of the manager sought to file an independent suit on the ground that they were not recorded co-sharers. The Court held that being joint in estate with their father they were fully represented by him in the proceedings and were bound by any order which was passed against him. In my view the suit has been rightly dismissed by the Court below and I accordingly dismiss the present appeal with costs.

Construction of document—Will, or authority to adopt—Principles applicable—Hindu Law—Adoption by widow, effect of.

It is not proper to interpret one document in the light of words used in another document. Each document must be considered with reference to words and expressions used in it and where the question is whether the document is a Will or an authority to adopt, and the document when read as a whole gives an impression that the executant intended to dispose of his property by it and that it should take effect after his life, then whatever may be the words used in the document, the general intention should not be overlooked. In construing the terms of the document the main thing to be considered is whether the executant had an intention to devise his properties to any one, in other words, whether the document contains clear words as to a testamentary intention on the part of the executant. [p. 188, col. 1.]

A Hindu executed a document giving his wife authority to make an adoption after his death and the document contained the following clause "my whole property shall be divided into two equal shares, one share being enjoyed by the adoptive mother and the other share by the adopted son. During her lifetime, the mother shall enjoy the said property to her own liking. After her death the whole property in respect of the said share shall pass to the adopted son":

Held, that from the words of the document the intention to devise the property to the wife could be clearly gathered and that, therefore, the document was a Will and not an authority to adopt and consequently did not require registration. [ibid.]

Under the Hindu Law the moment an adoption is made by a widow she is divested of her estate and the adopted son gets the whole of the property. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

IN S. A. No. 1048 OF 1922.

The only question argued in this second appeal is whether Ex. I is a Will. The Subordinate Judge has held that Ex. I is not a Will but an Anumathipatra an authority to adopt and, therefore, it required registration; and being unregistered it did not empower the 1st defendant to make a valid adoption. The finding is that the 2nd defendant has been adopted by the 1st defendant. The only question, therefore, is whether the 1st defendant had authority to adopt. If Ex. I is a Will then her authority to adopt would be unquestioned; if Ex. I is not a Will then the authority to adopt not having been given by an instrument in writing and registered would be of no use. Exhibit I is headed as "Will executed on 18th May 1918, by Kodivali Pedarama Krishnamma's son Bullayya," and the closing lines of the document are "I am at liberty to cancel this Will. This Will is executed on my free will relating to these things, while of a sound state of mind."

The contention of Mr. Somasundaram on behalf of the respondent is that this document is not a Will and the Court should not attach importance to a few expressions here and there that the document is a Will. He contends that there is no disposition in the Will and, therefore, it should not be construed as a Will. He relies upon two cases one Santhana Sooramma v. Santhana Mangayya (1) and the other Tirugnanapal v Ponnammai Nadathi (2). In the former case the executant addressed his wife in the second person and gave her certain directions; in the second case the executant addressed his adopted boy in the second person and gave him a number of directions. In the former case, a Bench of this Court held that the document was not a Will, in the second case their Lordships of the Privy Council held considering the general tenor of the document that it was not a Will notwithstanding the use of the word "Will" in the document. In both cases the construction turned upon the expressions used in the Will. As I have observed in another case, it is not proper to interpret one document in the light of the words used in another document. Each document must be considered with reference to the words and expressions used in it, and if the document when read as a whole gives an impression that the executant intended to dispose of his property by it and that it should take effect after his life, then, whatever may be the words used in the document the general intention should not be overlooked in construing the terms of the document. In Ex. I, I think the intention of the executant to devise property to his wife is clear. The operative clause of the document is "my whole property shall be divided into two equal shares, one share being enjoyed by the adoptive mother and the other share by the adopted son. During her lifetime, the mother shall enjoy the said property to her own liking. After her death the whole property in respect of the said share shall pass to the adopted son." I think these words clearly indicate that the executant did intend that his wife should get a benefit under the document. Under the Hindu Law, the moment the adoption is made, the widow is divested of her estate and the adopted son gets the whole of the property. The adoptive mother will be entitled thereafter only to maintenance. In order to avoid trouble in future the executant of Ex. I provided that in case of disputes between his wife and the adopted boy, the adopted mother should have half of the property for her life. I think from the words of the document, the intention to devise property to the wife can be clearly gathered. As I said the main thing to be considered in a document of this kind is whether the executant had an intention to devise his properties to any one, in other words, whether the Will contains clear words as to the testamentary intention on the part of the executant. Reading Ex. I as a whole I have no hesitation in holding that it is a Will. This finding necessarily involves the consequence that the 2nd defendant's adoption is a valid one.

In the result the second appeal is allowed and Original Suit No. 105 of 1919 is dismissed with costs throughout.

IN S. A. Nos. 1049 AND 1050 OF 1922.

In consequence of the finding in the connected case, Second Appeal No. 1048 of 1922, that the adoption is a valid one, these appeals also are allowed but in the circumstances it is unnecessary to allow costs to the appellant.

The memorandum of objections is not pressed and is dismissed.

Mr. Sailen Roy, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Wasim Girja Shankar and Ambica Datt Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiffs' appeal in a suit for possession of certain plots of land which together constitute a grove. The relief to possession is prayed by way of redemption of a mortgage which the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-interest made in favour of the defendant's ancestor in the year 1887. The defence to the suit was that three years after the alleged mortgage the mortgaged property was sold by the mortgagor to the mortgagee in full satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. This defence has succeeded in both the lower Courts with the result that the suit for redemption has been dismissed.

The necessary facts are that on the 29th April 1887 a mortgage of the property in suit, simple in its nature, was made by the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest in favour of the defendant's ancestor for a sum of Rs. 300. It is common ground that for a year or so the interest payable on the mortgage was paid by the mortgagor. It is also agreed that subsequently the mortgagor failed to pay the accruing interest and it is also common ground that on account of failure of the payment of interest the mortgagee was put in possession of the mortgaged property. The plaintiffs' case as set forth in the pleadings is that possession was delivered in lieu of interest, thereby converting the simple mortgage into a usufructuary one. The plea in defence was that the possession was delivered by virtue of a sale in satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. Both the Courts below are agreed that the plaintiffs have failed to establish their case as to the nature of the defendant's possession and they are also agreed that the defendant's plea as to the sale has been established.

The only ground on which this finding of fact could be challenged was that the sale not being evidenced by a registered instrument was invalid. That may be so but the sale having taken place as a matter of fact as is found by the Courts below it certainly gives a starting point for adverse possession in the character of purchaser. This is the view of law which was taken in the case of Bashir Husain v. Chandrapal Singh (1). With that view I agree. Both the Courts below have found that since the date of the invalid sale the defendant has been exercising proprietary possession over the property in suit and that finding holds good once the fact of the sale is established.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

In a case under O. XXI, r. 58 of the C. P. C., the Court is bound to decide the question of possession, and if a case is disposed of without deciding such a question, the High Court ought to interfere under s. 115 of the C. P. C. to set the matter right.

Rangammal v. Sevaugan Chetti, 29 Ind. Cas. 228; 28 M. L. J. 327 and Satkari Mandal v. Tirtha Narain Bhattacharjee, 24 Ind. Cas. 62, relied on.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, to revise an order of the City Civil Judge, Madras, in C. M. P. No. 846 of 1924, in E. P. R. No. 281 of 1924, in S. C. S. No. 6974 of 1922, on the file of the Court of Small Causes, Madras.

Mr. P. G. Krishna Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Muhammad Ibrahim and G. Ramakrishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I am asked in this civil revision petition to set aside an order by which the learned City Civil Judge has disallowed a claim under O. XXI, r. 61, C. P. C. The decree-holder in execution of the decree in Suit No. 6974 of 1924, on the file of the Court of Small Causes, Madras, attached house and ground No. 2150, in Swami Pandaram Street, Chintadripet, Madras, along with other properties, as properties belonging to the judgment-debtor. The claimant who is the petitioner before me, filed objections to the attachment, under O. XXI, r. 58 on the ground that he was in possession of the above house and ground, that it had been duly conveyed to him by its owners and that he had been in possession of it in his own right, ever since the sale. The learned City Civil Court Judge, holding that "he was not satisfied with the bona fides of the claim or of the sale in his favour" dismissed his petition.

I think the order of the learned Judge is wrong and must be set aside. In cases coming under O. XXI, r. 58, it has been held that the Court is bound to decide the question of possession and that, if a case is disposed of, without deciding such question, the High Court ought to interfere under s. 115 of the C. P. C; see Rangammal v. Sevaugan Chetti (1).

In this case, it is clear from the order that the learned Judge did not pay any attention to the question as regards the actual possession of the house. In this connection, the following observations of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Satkari Mandal v. Tirtha Narain Bhattacharjee (2) may be usefully referred to:

"The Court cannot found its decision on the question of the validity of the claim, or the determination of the title to the property attached..... The Court below has thus refused to determine the one question it was competent to decide, namely, the question of possession and has, on the other hand, determined the question it was not competent to investigate, namely, the question of title."

As the learned Judge has failed to consider the question of possession, which he is bound to decide, under the Code, I would set aside the order of the learned Judge and direct him to restore the petition to his file and dispose of it, according to law, in the light of the above observations. The petitioner will get his costs here and in the Court below.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c)—Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8—Suit for declaration and consequential relief—Valuation of reliefs—Court-fee payable.

In a suit falling under s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-Fees Act the valuation for purposes of Court-fees is to be determined first and that for the purposes of jurisdiction must follow on the same; but the plaintiff in such a suit cannot at one and the same time obtain the services of the highest Tribunal for the determination of his claim and evade the payment of ad valorem Court-fees. If for the purposes of jurisdiction he sets a high value on the relief by way of declaration and a merely nominal value on the relief by way of injunction, it is doing him no injustice to hold that the "relief sought", on which the Court-fee must be levied, is the sum total of the two reliefs. [p. 194, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mohendra Sundan Thakur v. Dinobandhu Thakur 21 Ind. Cas. 771; 19 C. L. J. 15, followed.

Plaintiff brought a suit on behalf of two idols for a declaration that the defendant had no power to supervise and manage the properties of the idols and that he was the lawful manager of the idols, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from supervising and managing the properties of the idols and for recovery of the moveables belonging to the idols. He valued the declaratory relief at Rs. 25,000, the relief for injunction at Rs. 1,000 and the relief for recovery of the moveables at Rs. 500. He paid ad valorem Court-fees on the reliefs with regard to the injunction and the recovery of the moveables but paid only Rs. 10 with regard to the declaratory relief:

Held, that the suit was one for a declaratory decree with consequential relief and fell within the purview of s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-Fees Act, and that the plaintiff having valued the different reliefs at Rs. 26,500 he was bound to pay ad valorem Court-fees on that sum and that the Court-fees payable on appeal must also be determined on the same basis. [p. 194, col. 1.]

Ghazaffar Husain Khan v. Yawar Husain, 28 A. 112 at pp. 117; 118; 2 A. L. J. 591; A. W. N. (1905) 208, followed.

Messrs. L. M. Banerji and N. P. Asthana, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. S. C. Das, for the Respondents,

OFFICE REPORT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought for the following reliefs:—

(a) It may be held that the defendant has no power to supervise and manage the properties of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and it may be declared that the plaintiff No. 3 is the lawful manager of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2.

(b) The defendant may be restrained by means of a perpetual injunction from supervising and managing the property of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and from entering the property of the plaintiffs.

(c) The moveables of the plaintiff No. 1, that may be proved may be recovered.

(d) The costs may be awarded.

(e) Any relief other than relief (a) which it may be deemed just to grant with any addition or alteration, may be granted. The plaintiffs will pay on it any Court-fee that is deemed necessary to be paid.

The suit was valued for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 26,500 the value of the property and the Court-fee was paid as follows:—

	Rs.	a.
Declaration of right valued at Rs. 25,000 ...	10	0
Issue of perpetual injunction valued by plaintiff at Rs. 1,000	75	0
Recovery of moveables and cash at Rs. 500 ...	37	8
Total ...	122	8

The injunction prayed for will be consequential relief and cl. iv, para. (c) of s. 7 of Court Fees Act VII of 1870 is applicable, vide an authority reported as Jageshra v. Durga Prashad Singh (1). Consequently the plaint should have been stamped with a Court-fee of Rs. 915. Rs. 122-8 having already been paid there is a deficiency of Rs. 792-8 payable by plaintiffs-respondents for the lower Court.

The lower Court passed a decree declaring that plaintiff No 3 was the manager and trustee of the estate of plaintiff No. 2 and perpetually restrained the defendants from managing the property of plaintiff No. 2 only or enter it. It further passed a decree for possession over moveable property of the value of Rs. 3-10. Against this decree the defendants preferred this first appeal valuing it at Rs. 4,000 and paying only Rs. 10 as Court-fee. The relief sought by the appeal is that the Hon'ble High Court will be pleased to allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs. The property of defendant No. 2 against which this appeal is preferred is valued by the appellant at Rs. 4,000. He should, therefore, pay an ad valorem Court-fee thereon which comes to Rs. 225. Rs. 10 having already been paid there is a deficiency of Rs. 215 payable by defendants-appellants for this Court.

The respondent has filed cross-objection with respect to the property of plaintiff No. 1 the value of which comes to Rs.21,000. He should, therefore, pay an ad valorem Court-fee which comes to Rs. 795. Deducting Rs. 47-8 already paid there is a deficiency of Rs. 747-8 for this Court.

The result is that the deficiency payable by the defendants-appellants for this Court is Rs. 215 and that payable by the respondent for this Court is Rs. 747-8 and for the lower Court is Rs. 792-8 in all Rs. 1,540.

(1) 24 Ind. Cas. 679; 36 A. 500; 12 A. L. J. 844.

Objection by Mr. S. C. Das, for the Respondents.

In order to determine the proper amount of Court-fee payable, the nature of the suit has to be looked at. In the present suit, no beneficial interest is claimed by plaintiff No. 3; the plaint alleged the property in suit to be endowed which was not seriously disputed by the defendant, who did not claim any personal interest in the property. In this connection the observations of Stanley, C. J., in Ghazaffar Husain Khan v. Zawar Husain (2) are very apposite: "As regards the Court-fee, in many cases the costs of such a suit as this fall on the trust estate, and...that as the decree in such a suit works no change in the beneficial ownership of the property, it would be a hardship to impose upon the trust estate the payment of the ordinary Court-fee payable in respect of a hostile suit for recovery of land on title." No question of transfer of title or ownership is involved in this suit.

The point now raised is exactly covered by Mohendra Sundar Thakur v. Dinobandhu Thakur (3). Jageshra v. Durga Prashad Singh (1) has no application to the facts of the present case, there the plaintiff was suing on his personal right and was claiming a beneficial interest in the mortgaged property. Then unless he could get the decree already passed out of his way, he was not entitled to any relief.

The present suit is, in substance, one by the idols, to prevent the defendant from meddling with their property and thus falls under s. 7 (iv) (d) of the Court Fees Act. Since the idols themselves are plaintiffs, it is sufficient for their purposes of obtaining the relief asked for, i. e., the removal of the defendant if the defendant be not allowed to manage the wakf property, and it does not matter who else is authorised to act as mutawalli.

Relief (a) is not so much a declaratory relief as a reason for granting relief (b), 'Consequential relief' must be such as necessarily flows from and is inseparably connected with the declaration asked for, that is to say, if the declaration is refused the consequential relief falls with it. This is not so in the present case.

The plaintiffs valued their relief of injunction at Rs. 1,000 and have paid the right Court-fee.

I ask to be heard also on this point. The matter is one for the decision of the Bench hearing the appeal, as was done in Jageshra v. Durga Prashad Singh (1).

OFFICE REPORT.—The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs-respondents has based his objections to the deficieney report on the authority of two rulings:—

Ghazafiar Husain Khan v. Zawar Husain (2), Mohendra Sundar Thakur v. Dinobandhu Thakur (3).

The ruling reported as Ghazaffar Husain Khan v. Zawar Husain (1) applies to a case which is brought under s. 92 of the C. P. C., (s. 539 of the old Code) by any two persons interested in the trust with the sanction of the Legal Remembrancer. In such suits the plaintiff does not claim any right for himself and, therefore, the Court had held that an ad valorem Court-fee is not leviable. But in an ordinary suit like the present where the diety-plaintiff claims an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the management of the property, the plaintiff claims proprietary right in himself and in his own interest. The case under consideration, therefore, cannot be distinguished from the case of the ordinary plaintiff.

The ruling reported as Mohendra Sundar Thakur v. Dinobandhu Thakur (3) also does not apply, because, there it was the case brought by a shebait of a temple to have his rights declared and also asked for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with his exclusive possession. It was not a suit by the idol itself to enforce the proprietary rights. To such cases the ruling reported as Ray Krishna Dey v. Bepin Behary Dey (4) is applicable, in which it was held that in such suits the Court-fee should be paid on the amount which is specified for purposes of jurisdiction. Our own High Court in Jageshra v. Durga Prashad Singh (1) has taken the same view and the facts of that case are indistinguishable from the present case. If it were held that in all suits brought by, or in the name of, an idol claiming the personal right a fixed fee is leviable then even in suits to enforce a mortgage, or recover possession of landed property, or for accounts etc., as fixed fee would be payable which view would be absurd.

(4) 17 Ind. Cas. 162; 40 C. 245; 16 C. L. J. 194; 17 C. W. N. 591.

The cross-objection filed here has been grossly undervalued at Rs. 630. The correct valuation should be Rs. 25,000 (value of the property as given in the plaint) minus Rs. 4,000 (decreed by the Court below, in favour of the plaintiffs) that is to say Rs. 21,000. The learned Vakil for the respondents has said nothing at all as to this.

As regards the contention of the learned Vakil that the matter is one for the decision of the Bench hearing the appeal. I would submit that under the recent ruling of the Hon'ble Taxing Judge reported as Bahal Kuar v. Narain Singh (5) the Taxing Officer has full power to decide such questions.

I may note here that the learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant has raised no objection to the deficiency payable by him and is willing to pay that as soon as this objection is disposed of.

Submitted for favour of decision and order.

TAXING OFFICER'S REPORT.—The suit, from which this appeal has arisen, was brought by plaintiff No. 3 with and on behalf of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, who are idols, for the following reliefs:—

(a) It may be held that defendant has no power to supervise and manage the properties of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and it may be declared that plaintiff No. 3 is the lawful manager of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2.

(b) The defendant may be restrained by means of a perpetual injunction from supervising and managing the property of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and from entering the property of the plaintiffs.

(c) The moveables of plaintiff No. 1, that may be proved, may be recovered.

(d) The costs may be awarded.

(e) Any relief other than relief (a), which it may be deemed just to grant with any addition or alteration, may be granted. The plaintiffs will pay on it any Court-fee that is deemed necessary to be paid.

The suit was valued for the purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 26,500, as a value of the property, and the Court-fee was paid as follows:—

	Rs.	a.
Declaration of right, valued at Rs. 25,000 ...	10	0
Issue of perpetual injunction, valued at Rs. 1,000 ...	75	0
Recovery of moveables and cash at Rs. 500 ...	37	8

The lower Court passed a decree declaring that plaintiff No. 3 was the manager and trustee of the estate of plaintiff No. 2 and perpetually restrained the defendant from managing the property of the plaintiff No. 2 or entering it. It further passed a decree for possession over moveable property of the value of Rs. 3-10. Against this decree the defendant preferred this appeal, valuing it at Rs. 4,000 and paying only Rs. 10 as Court-fee, praying that the appeal be allowed and the suit be dismissed with costs.

The respondent has filed a cross-objection with respect to the property of plaintiff No. 1, valuing it at Rs. 630 and paying Rs. 10 for a declaration and Rs. 37-8 for an injunction.

As against the parties to the suit and the appeal and cross-objection, it is maintained that in the plaint relief (b) prayed for is consequential to the declaration prayed for in relief (a), that, therefore, for the purpose of estimating Court-fees s. 7 cl. iv, para. (c) of the Court Fees Act is applicable and an ad valorem duty should be paid in both Courts. On this contention there is a deficiency of Rs. 792-8 payable by the plaintiffs-respondents in the Court below. With regard to their cross-objection, it is maintained that it should have been valued at Rs. 21,000 and that there is thus a deficiency of Rs. 747-8 due from them in this Court. From the defendant-appellant there is a deficiency of Rs 215 due in this Court.

It is understood that the Counsel for the appellant has seen the deficiency report submitted by the office and has raised no objection to payment. The Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents, however has, objected, that the suit does not fall under s. 7, cl. iv, para. (c) but para. (d) of the Court Fees Act. He points out that, as is stated in the judgment of the lower Court, the possession of the property by plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 is not in dispute, and that plaintiff No. 3 is not suing on his personal right and is not claiming any beneficial right in the property, and he relies on the case quoted in Mohendra Sundar Thakur v. Dinobandhu Thakur (3). There the plaintiff asked for a declaration that he was in possession as the sole shebait of certain endowed properties and that the defendants had not been validly appointed as such, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with the management of the property. The Court held that the substantial relief claimed was this injunction and proceeded to decide whether the valuation placed on this relief was arbitrary or not. Counsel contends with some force that the case quoted exactly covers the points raised in the present suit, namely, whether in the first place the relief claimed is consequential or merely an injunction and, secondly, whether if it is held to be an injunction, the valuation put upon it is arbitrary or not.

Now whatever may be the relief claimed "in substance", the words actually used in the prayer (page 4 of the paper-book) appear to be capable of only one interpretation. I am of opinion that this is clearly a claim for a declaration with consequential relief. The right to obtain an injunction against the defendant flows from the declaration which the plaintiff seeks of his right to the management: "If the plaintiff has that right, he is entitled to an injunction in consequence. If he has not that right, he is not entitled to an injunction". Bahal Kuar v. Narain Singh (5), Daniels, J. The fact that in this case it is a question not of possession but of management does not seem to me to be strictly relevant. If it is pleaded that the plaint might have been worded differently, I would draw attention to the remarks of Piggott, J., in a similar case in Rup Narain v. Bishwa Nath Singh (6).

But assuming that the relief claimed is consequential, Counsel refers to the remarks of Stanley, C. J., in Ghazaffar Husain Khan v. Zawar Husain (2): "As regards the Court-fee, in many cases the costs of such a suit as this fall on the trust estate, and it seems to me that as the decree in such a suit works no change in the beneficial ownership of the property, it would be a hardship to impose on the trust estate the payment of the ordinary Court-fee payable in respect of a hostile suit for recovery of land on title". As a matter of fact this was not an issue in the case. The above words are merely the expression of an opinion and the learned Judge did not come to any finding on the point.

In view, however, of the judgment of Mookerji, J., in Mohendra Sundar Thakur v. Dinobandhu Thakur (3), and of the remarks of Piggott, J., and Stanley, C. J., in the judgments referred to, I direct that this order be laid before the Hon'ble Taxing Judge for a decision of the issue whether this suit falls under para. (c) or para. (d) of cl. iv of s. 7 of the Court Fees Act, and for orders as to whether, if it falls under para. (c) the full ad valorem Court-fee is to be paid.

(6) 68 Ind. Cas. 265; 20 A. L. J. 587; (1922) A. I. R. (A.) 358; 4 U. P. L. R. (A.) 132; 44 A. 629

Should the learned Judge decide that the suit falls under para. (c) the second issue framed above need not be considered. On the other hand if the suit is held to fall under para. (d) it is contended that the valuation placed on the relief claimed by means of an injunction both in the lower Court and (in the cross-objection) in this Court is purely arbitrary, and that in the lower Court the valuation should have been that declared for purposes of jurisdiction, namely Rs. 25,000 and under the cross-objection, Rs. 25,000 less Rs. 4,000 the valuation of the appellant, i. e., Rs. 21,000.

On this question the remarks of Mookerji, J., in the judgment above quoted appear to be applicable since the benefit that is to accrue to the plaintiffs, if plaintiff No. 1 is made sole manager of the property and the defendant is excluded, has not been shown to be above the valuation put upon the relief claimed. But since this issue depends upon the decision of the first issue framed, I am of opinion that it too should be left for the orders of the Hon'ble Taxing Judge.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I cannot read the plaint in this suit as anything but a claim for a declaratory decree, with consequential relief, under s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, VII of 1870. This being so the case is covered by the ruling in Jageshra v. Durga Prasad Singh (1). I am not prepared to recommend a reconsideration of that decision. I can see the point that, on the wording of the section, it is arguable that the expression "the relief sought" means the "consequential relief" spoken of in sub-cl. (c). At the same time I do not think we ought now to unsettle the law laid down by a Bench of two Judges more than ten years ago. Moreover, I am impressed with the argument based upon s. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, VII of 1887. I accept the contention that the valuation for purposes of Court-fees is to be determined first and that for purposes of jurisdiction must follow on the same; but the plaintiff in a suit in which consequential relief is prayed cannot at one and the same time obtain the services of the highest possible Tribunal for the determination of his claim and evade the payment of ad valorem Court-fees. If for purposes of jurisdiction he sets a high value on the relief by way of declaration and a merely nominal value on the relief by way of injunction, it is doing him no injustice to hold that the "relief sought", on which the Court-fee must be levied, is the sum total of the two reliefs. It is beside the point to suggest that different consequences would have followed if the plaintiff in the present case had asked for a declaration only, or for an injunction only, the question under the Court Fees Act must be determined upon the plaint as framed.

I affirm the report of the Stamping Officer, and allow the parties concerned one month in which to make good the deficiency.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 92, 115—Trust—Scheme suit—Trustee, whether can be plaintiff—Revision—Interference in pending suit.

A trustee is a person interested in the trust within the meaning of s. 92 of the C. P. C., and there is nothing in the section to prevent his being one of the plaintiffs in a suit brought under the section, or even to prevent both the plaintiffs being trustees. The real plaintiff in such a suit, by whomsoever it may be represented, is the trust, and the representation may be either by the interested public or by a trustee and so long as the plaintiffs, whether trustees or not, are vindicating a public and not an individual right, the suit is maintainable. [p. 196, cols. 1 & 2]

Interference with findings in a suit not yet disposed of is not a matter which the High Court will view with favour and it will require very strong proof of want of jurisdiction or irregular exercise of jurisdiction to warrant interference. Where, however, it appears that a suit is not maintainable at all, it might in some cases be advisable for the High Court to interfere in revision and thus to prevent further waste of time and money, the ground of interference being that a Court has no jurisdiction to proceed with a suit which is not maintainable in law. [p 195, col. 1; p. 196, col. 1.]

Appeal and petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, in S. A. No. 405 of 1920, and in O. S. No. 27 of 1920 respectively.

Messrs. S. Muthiah Mudaliar and K. Narasimha Iyangar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswamy Iyer, S. Panchapakesa Sastriar and C. V. Rajagopalachari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this Civil Revision Petition, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in Original Suit No. 27 of 1920 on the file of the Sub-Court of Kumbakonam call for the interference of this Court in revision with certain findings of the lower Court on certain issues in that suit. The suit has not yet been disposed of. Interference with findings in a suit not yet disposed of is not a matter which the High Court will view with favour and it will require a very strong proof of want of jurisdiction or irregular exercise of jurisdiction to warrant interference. In this case the petitioners have before us restricted their case to three issues, on which the lower Court has given findings, Issues Nos. I, IV and V.

The suit is one under s. 92 of the C. P. C., for the removal of certain trustees of the Kumbakonam Sri Sarangapaniswami Temple, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and for other reliefs. It is filed by two plaintiffs with the sanction of the Advocate-General. The first plaintiff is himself a trustee of the temple and the second is a member of the public interested in the trust. Issue No. IV relates to the prayer in the plaint for divesting the Devastanam Committee of its superintendence over the temple. The plaintiffs have also added as defendants the members of this Committee. Before the lower Court, the plaintiffs did not press that prayer. The petitioners, who are defendants Nos. 1 and 2, wish us to interfere now because they are afraid that the lower Court may not separate this relief from the others prayed for, and thus prejudice their defence. They seem to apprehend that the lower Court will not be able to distinguish the reliefs which the plaintiffs have given up and those which they retain, or to restrict the evidence at the trial to these reliefs which are still being sought for by the plaintiffs. But we really cannot hold that such a vague apprehension is any reason for interference in revision.

Issue No. V is an issue on misjoinder. That is with reference to the members of the Devastanam Committee being added as defendants. How this misjoinder, supposing that it is misjoinder, damnifies the petitioners, it is difficult to see. The Committee members themselves do not complain. Had any necessary defendants been excluded, these excluded defendants might have had some grievance, but the addition of extra defendants cannot hurt the present petitioners in any way. The three cases cited by the petitioners have no application. Arunachalam Chettyar v. Arunachalam Chettyar (1) and Sitaramaya v. Ramappaya (2) were cited. In the former case the plaintiff's suit was liable to dismissal, unless it complied with the order sought to be revised. In the latter, the plaintiff was forced to add parties against his will. But, in the present case, neither the plaintiffs nor the added defendants have any objection. Shanmuka Nadan v. Arunachalam Chettiar (3) was also cited. It is a case where defendants ordered by the lower Court to be struck out of the records, were added by order of this Court in revision. We cannot hold that these rulings are authorities for the proposition that the alleged misjoinder in this case is an illegal or irregular exercise of jurisdiction.

We are then left with Issue No. I, which contains the only point worth attention, since it refers to the actual maintain-ability of the suit, and, so far as this suit is concerned, it is a pure question of law. If a suit is not maintainable at all; it might in some cases be advisable for this Court in revision to interfere and thus to prevent further waste of time and money, the ground of interference being that a Court has no jurisdiction to proceed with a suit which is not maintainable in law. From that point of view, we shall consider this issue. The contention is that the first plaintiff, being himself a trustee, is not entitled to be one of the "two persons having an interest in the trust", as required by s. 92 of the C. P. C. Now, clearly a trustee is a person interested in the trust, and prima facie, therefore, there is nothing in the section to prevent his being one of the plaintiffs or even to prevent both the plaintiffs being trustees. Petitioners contend that a trustee cannot be one of the plaintiffs in a suit under s. 92 because the essence of such a suit is relief claimed by the general public against the management and conduct of the body of trustees as a whole, and that, therefore, the whole body of trustees must be defendants. There is nothing in the section to justify such a narrow restriction of its scope. A suit may be instituted to remove only one trustee and to have another appointed in his place. Here the relief sought for is not against the whole body of trustees but against two trustees only. Such a narrow interpretation of the section will lead to the result that a body of trustees cannot by suit under s. 92 get rid of an obstructive or dishonest trustee who is ruining the institution, unless they persuade two public spirited men to undertake the trouble and expense of filing a suit.

The petitioners further point out that in this suit they are making counter-charges against the first plaintiff in his capacity as a trustee and asking for his removal, and urge that, if he remains as a plaintiff, the Court cannot investigate and record findings on these counter-charges or remove the first plaintiff, if the Court finds that it is advisable to do so. But we see no such difficulty, since the section itself gives the Court a very wide discretion as to what it may or may not do in such a suit.

We have been able to discover one direct authority on this point of law in Subramania Pillai v. Krishnaswami Somayajiar (4), where a Bench of this Court held that a suit by two trustees to remove a third trustee was a suit under s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. We agree with this view. The real plaintiff, by whomsoever it may be represented, is the trust, and the representation may be either by the interested public or by a trustee thereof and, so long as the plaintiffs, whether trustees or not, are vindicating a public and not an individual right, the suit is one maintainable under s. 92. In our view, the present plaint shows that the nature of the present suit is the vindication of the public right, and this is also indicated by the fact that one of the plaintiffs is a member of the general public. We hold, therefore, that the suit is maintainable and there is no case for interference in revision. The Civil Revision Petition is, therefore dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

As to Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 273 of 1922, the same petitioners appeal against the order of the lower Court appointing a Receiver to the temple trust property pending disposal of the suit mentioned above. We need not go into detail in this matter. It is clear from the statement of both parties that there are internecine quarrels between the trustees, each charging the other with mismanagement and suppression of accounts, and the issues in the case will entail an investigation of the charges against each. In these circumstances it is undesirable that either party should be left in exclusive control of the accounts or in exclusive authority over the temple servants. We are not prepared to interfere with the discretion of the lower Court, which considers it just and convenient to appoint a Receiver in such circumstances. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with two sets of costs one for respondents Nos. 1 and 2 and one for respondents who are members of the Devasthanam Committee.

Where a Record of Rights gives the lambardar a right to recover the rent, the lambardar must be deemed to be appointed as agent of the co-sharers within the meaning of s. 194 of the Agra Tenancy Act. [ibid.]

Where a lambardar is not entitled to bring a suit to recover arrears of rent he is not entitled to a decree even with regard to his own share of the rent. [ibid.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 6th of April 1923.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Appellant.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent claimed by the lambardar in respect of the years Rabi 1324 to Kharif 1327 F. The sole question for determination is whether the lambardar is entitled to recover.

The history of the village has been given in detail by the learned Assistant Collector who decreed the suit. The learned District Judge, in his appellate judgment, writes that all the facts found by the learned Assistant Collector in his judgment were accepted before him. Indeed, the question is only one of inference to be drawn from admitted facts.

The admitted facts appear to be these. The mahal Abu Bakar Khan was divided by an imperfect partition into two pattis, viz., patti Khudaija Bibi and patti Abdullah Khan. The plaintiff-appellant was recorded as the lambardar in the divided mahal as he had already been the lambardar of the undivided mahal. In the patti Khudaija Bibi, Khuadija Bibi herself had been making collections on behalf of herself and other co-sharers. Abdullah Khan had no share in patti Khudaija Bibi. Khudaija Bibi collected rents up to the year 1324*F. Kharif*. Thereafter, she having sold a large portion of her share to the defendants, ceased to collect rent. Abdullah Khan inherited a portion of the patti Khudaija Bibi from a co-sharer. He came upon the scene and began to collect rent from tenants. So far as the present defendants are concerned they were sued by Abdullah Khan in the Settlement Court, for enhancement of rent. The rent was enhanced with effect from 1327*F.* Abdullah Khan having brought the suit, it was contested on the ground that he had no right to recover. The defendants did not say that they would not pay rent to anybody and would appropriate it to themselves. But they said that they were paying rent to Khudaija Bibi and would pay rent to her alone.

The learned Assistant Collector found that, during the Settlement, a Record of Rights was prepared and the right to collect rent was expressly given to the lambardar in the patti of Khudaija Bibi. The other patti it appears belongs to Abdullah Khan in its entirety. The Settlement took place in the course of the years 1324 to 1326*F.* The Assistant Collector also found that the lambardar had been collecting rent from the other tenants of the patti. It has already been mentioned that the plaintiff-appellant successfully sued the defendants for enhancement of rent. Under these circumstances the question arose, whether the lambardar was entitled to recover rent or not.

It has been held in this Court that in the absence of a clear indication to the contrary, the lambardar is the person who would be entitled to recover the rent, vide Mojiz Fatima v. Ali Akbar (1). That is the usual law. In this particular case, the Record of Rights clearly gives the lambardar a right to recover the rent and thereby establishes the fact that the lambardar is the appointed agent of the co-sharers within the meaning of s. 194 of the Tenancy Act.

The learned Judge has given the appellant a decree for his share only. This decree is entirely untenable. Either all the co-sharers must join in bringing the suit or the lambardar alone should be entitled to bring it. If the lambardar is not entitled to bring a suit for arrears of rent he certainly cannot recover only his share of it.

I hold that in the circumstances and on the facts admitted the appellant is entitled to recover the rent.

I allow the appeal, set aside the decree

A deed executed by a Malabari in favour of one of his children recited that the properties of the executant were assigned in favour of the children named in the deed and "for those children, boys and girls who are uterine relations below you and your mother for your livelihood". In a suit to recover maintenance on the basis of the deed by some of the children:

Held, (1) that the donees under the deed with their mother constituted a tavazhi ;

(2) that, therefore, the karnavan of the tavazhi was a necessary party to the suit.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, South Malabar, in A. S. No. 728 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Calicut, in O. S. No. 356 of 1919.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kuttikrishna Menon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the appellant before me. The suit is for maintenance. The defendants contend that the suit is not properly constituted as necessary persons are not parties to the suit.

The suit is based upon Ex. A, a teer-deed, executed by plaintiff's father Raman Menon in favour of Narayani Amma. Raman Menon had four daughters and two sons. He executed the document in 1888 in favour of Narayani Amma, but the document recited that Raman Menon's properties were assigned in favour of Narayani Amma and "those children, boys and girls who are uterine relations below you and to your mother for your livelihood." The only difference that I can find between this case and Chakkara Kannan v. Kunhi Pokker (1) is that in that case the document was executed in favour of all the children, whereas in this case it is executed in favour of one child, but it was mentioned that it was in her favour and in favour of her brothers and sisters. I do not think this fact makes any difference in the construction of the document. It is not for me, in construing it, to say whether that decision is right or wrong. It is a Full Bench decision and purports to follow another Full Bench decision. I am bound to hold that the effect of this document, Ex. A, is to constitute a tavazhi. The question whether if the document is in favour of some of the children alone, a tavazhi is created as in Chakkara Kannan v. Kunhi Pokker (1), does not arise and to constitute a tavazhi of all the children does not offend against the ordinary ideas of Malabar Law. Holding, therefore, that the donees under Ex. A with their mother constituted a tavazhi, I think it follows that the karnavan of the tavazhi must be a party to the suit. The children of the donees also will be included in the tavazhi and the karnavan of the tavazhi is a necessary party to the suit. Mr. Ramakrishna Iyer contended that the karnavan might now be made a party and the case remitted. There is no objection to such a procedure in a proper case; but in this case the point was decided by the Courts below in the way in which I am now holding and it does not appear that any such request was made in the Courts below. After all it will not help the plaintiff in any way if I comply with the plaintiff's request. The pleas of limitation cannot be got rid of and costs cannot be got rid of. I do not see, therefore, the purpose of allowing the plaint to be amended.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

A decree on a promissory note executed by a deceased member of a joint Hindu family was passed against the surviving member of the family and it was ordered that it was to be executed by seizure and sale of the property of the deceased that would come to the hands of the judgment-debtor as his heir and legal representative. More than a year after the date of the decree a notice for renewal of judgment was issued under O. XXI, r. 22 of the C. P. C. The judgment-debtor did not appear and an order was passed that execution was to issue against him. The decree-holder took out a warrant for arrest of the judgment-debtor, arrested him and brought him before the Court, where he was released on the ground that the decree was not capable of execution against him personally. The judgment-debtor, thereupon, brought a suit against the decree-holder for damages for wrongful arrest:

Held, (1) that the decree-holder must have known that he was not entitled to execute the decree against the person of the judgment-debtor, and that the order of the Court directing that execution should issue against the judgment-debtor was a merely formal order allowing execution to proceed; [p. 203, col. 2.]

(2) that the decree-holder's act in causing the judgment-debtor to be arrested was wrongful and the latter was entitled to recover damages for wrongful arrest. [ibid.]

Where an appeal is preferred under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent (Bombay), owing to a difference of opinion among the Judges of the Division Bench, under clause 36 of the Letters Patent, the whole decree lies open before the Appellate Court, and it is not restricted to the consideration of the point on which the Judges constituting the Division Bench have differed. Letters Patent Appeal against the following judgments of Sir Lallubai Shah, Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Crump, dated the 22nd October 1923.

JUDGMENT.

Shah, Actg. C. J.—This appeal arises out of an action for damages for false imprisonment. The facts which have given rise to the action are these:—The present defendants, Velji, Bhimsey & Co., filed Suit No. 24340 of 1920 against the present plaintiff Bachoo Bhaidas and his two minor brothers as surviving members of a joint Hindu family of the deceased Bhaidas Vallabhdas on a promissory note said to have been passed by the said Bhaidas Vallabhdas. In that suit decree was passed in the following terms:—

"That the defendants do pay the plaintiffs the sum of Rs. 510-9-6 for debt and Rs. 44-4-0 for costs, making together Rs. 554-13-6 and that the defendants do pay the same to the Registrar of the Court at his office. It is also ordered that in default of payment of the said sum of Rs. 554-13-6 by the defendants the same shall be levied by seizure and sale of the property of Bhaidas Vallabhdas deceased which may have come to their hands as heirs and legal representatives of the said deceased to be administered."

That decree is Ex. 3 in the case. According to the evidence it was passed by consent: and it is clear from the decree that though the claim was against Bachoo Bhaidas personally, in the result the decree was passed on January 17, 1921, against the heirs and legal representatives of the deceased Bhaidas to the extent of his estate in their hands.

On May 11, 1922, a notice for renewal of judgment under O. XXI, r. 22, was issued to the defendants in that suit, because by that time more than a year elapsed since the passing of the decree. The only defendant who was a major and could have appeared was Bachoo Bhaidas, but he did not appear. Tokersey, a partner in the firm of Velji, Bhimsey & Co., appeared, and the Court made an order on June 4, 1922, in the following terms:—"Execution to issue against defendant No. 1." The notes of proceedings and order are Ex. 2 and Ex. C respectively.

On July 4, the plaintiffs in that suit applied for a writ of execution against the person of defendant No. 1 in that suit for Rs. 554-13-6 through their Pleader Mr. I. K. Vakil (Ex. D). A warrant was issued in pursuance of that application on the same day by the Deputy Registrar of the Court of Small Causes. It was a warrant for the personal arrest of defendant No. 1 in that suit, Bachoo Bhaidas. He was arrested at about 9-30 A. M. on the morning of July 12, 1922, and he was produced before the Registrar. At that time the decree-holders were represented by Mr. Dotiwalla, and the arrested debtor was represented by Mr. Thakoredas. The Registrar made the following order on the same day:—

"Decree against the estate of the deceased. No execution by arrest should have been issued against the first defendant's person. Warrant of arrest bad and illegal and not justified by the tenor of the decree. Defendant released." (Ex. F).

The person arrested was released by 12-30. He filed the present suit on October 10, 1922, against the decree-holders in that suit to recover Rs. 2,000 as damages for his wrongful arrest.

Two issues were raised at the hearing:—

"(1) Whether the plaintiff was arrested wrongfully and maliciously as alleged by him?"

(2) Whether the plaintiff has sustained any damage and if so what?"

The learned Judge found on the first issue in the affirmative. But he recorded no finding on the second issue, in the view which he took of the first issue.

It may be mentioned that at the trial no attempt was made to give any evidence of malice, and there was no question of malice on the part of the present defendants. The learned Judge's view is summed up in the following passage in his judgment:—

"In the present case there is a record (Ex. 2) that warranted the writ. It was the direction of the learned Judge that execution do issue against the first defendant. It may be that the learned Judge had no materials before him to justify the order which he passed. But assuming it was so, the case is one of an erroneous order passed by a Court, and not one of absence of jurisdiction. It is well-established that no action will lie against any person for issuing execution or otherwise acting in pursuance of a judgment or order of a Court of Justice, even though it is erroneous. A valid order, however, erroneous in law or in fact, is a sufficient justificatian for any act done in pursuance of it. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff has no cause of action against the defendants and dismiss the suit."

The plaintiff has appealed from that judgment, and it is urged in support of the appeal that the learned Trial Judge's view is wrong. It is contended that on the facts it is clear that this arrest could not be justified, that the order which the learned Trial Judge has relied upon is really nothing more than an order on the notice for renewal of judgment to execute the decree, and that the real justification for the warrant of personal arrest, if any, must be founded on the terms of the decree, and not upon an order which was in substance an order under O. XXI, r. 22, directing execution to issue. It is further contended that though the order of June 24 taken by itself may be capable of the interpretation that execution might be issued against defendant No. 1 personally, in view of the fact that it was an order endorsed on the decree, the terms of which are explicit, it could not possibly be read as entitling the party to take out a warrant for the personal arrest of the present plaintiff.

On the other hand, it is urged that, however, erroneous the order of June 24 may be, it is an order which is capable of being interpreted as an order allowing personal execution against the present plaintiff, and that, therefore, the arrest of the plaintiff in pursuance of a warrant issued after that order would afford sufficient protection to the defendants. It is urged that it is only if the warrant is issued as the result of any irregularity that the plaintiff may have a cause of action, and that if it is the result of an order made by the Court based upon any error, the party taking out the warrant is not responsible for the wrongful arrest.

Several English cases have been cited in the course of the argument, and I have referred to some other cases also, including the case of Fisher v. Pearse (1). The law, as I understand it, seems clear, and the difficulty, such as there is in the case, is in applying the principles to the facts of the present case. This action is not based upon any allegation of malice. Though there is an allegation of malice, it forms no essential part of the basis of the action. It is an action for damages for false imprisonment and the defendants have to justify the imprisonment.

In the present case it is not disputed, and it cannot be disputed, that the plaintiff was detained from about 9-30 A. M. to 12-30 P. M. and that during that period he was under imprisonment. It is also undisputed and it is clear that the arrest could not be finally justified. The writ of arrest was set aside as being contrary to the terms of the decree, and it is not argued before us that that order of the Registrar is wrong.

The ground, however, upon which the learned Judge has based his decision, and upon which the respondents seek to justify the arrest, is that there was an order of the

(1) 9 B. 1; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1.

Court of June 24, 1922, under which the application for execution against the person of the present plaintiff and the writ of arrest would be justified. I am, however, unable to accept this contention. It is clear on terms of the decree, which would be known to the plaintiffs in that suit, who are defendants now, that the execution was limited to the estate of the deceased Bhaidas Vallabhdas in the hands of the present plaintiff and his two minor brothers. The order on the notice under O. XXI, r. 22, for renewal of judgment as it is called was or must be taken to have been made under r. 23. The Executing Court would have no power to vary the terms of the decree in any sense, and the terms of the order made are not such as to justify the inference that the learned Judge while dealing with the matter in execution on a notice under rule 22 purported to make an order which he had no power to make at the time, directing execution to issue against defendant No. 1 personally. That order is intended only to be read with the decree. It could be interpreted only in the light of the decree and not otherwise by the party concerned. As I have already stated, it is possible to read this order as empowering a personal execution against defendant No. 1, only if it is read without relation to the terms of the decree. I do not feel any doubt that the Judge could never have intended to allow personal execution against defendant No. 1, and in fact when the matter was brought to the notice of the Registrar after the arrest, he at once set aside the warrant for personal arrest, as the decree was limited to the estate of the deceased Bhaidas.

It must be remembered that the Court was dealing with the matter in execution, and subject to the terms of the decree. In that capacity the Court had no jurisdiction to vary the terms of the decree. The learned Trial Judge seems to have relied upon the consideration that it is possible for a decree-holder to obtain execution against the heirs of the deceased personally when facts as indicated in s 52, C. P. C., are proved. The learned Judge has referred to this section; and it is possible that he may have been influenced by the consideration that if under certain conceivable circumstances, such as are indicated in s. 52, C. P. C., it was possible for the decree-holders to take out personal execution against defendant No. 1 in that suit, and if the order of the Court passed on June 24 is capable of being read as allowing execution against him personally it is possible to justify the order in that sense on that particular basis. The notes made by the learned Judge at the hearing of the notice under O. XXI, r. 22, do not disclose any such basis; and Tokersey, who appeared as a partner in the firm of the decree-holders then, and who has been examined in the present suit, does not suggest that any allegation such as would invite the application of s. 52, C.P.C., was ever made by him at the time when that notice was heard. It seems to me, therefore, that on the facts of the present case any reference to s. 52, C. P. C, for the purpose of suggesting a possible basis for the order made on June 24, 1922, is not justified.

Taking the case with reference to the facts which are proved or undisputed, it seems to me that the execution was taken out against defendant No. 1 personally as a result either of ignorance or of negligence on the part of the present defendants or their Pleader. The writ cannot be attributed to an erroneous order on the part of the Court, but to an unjustifiably erroneous interpretation put upon it by the party concerned, who could have and must be deemed to have known, that the order of June 24 only entitled him to treat the decree as renewed for execution, and that he could execute the decree only in the manner allowed by the terms of the decree.

Though our attention has been drawn to several cases, we have not been referred to a single case which is applicable to the state of facts such as we have in the present case. We have to consider the plea of justification in the light of the facts of this case and of the rules of procedure applicable to the decree, in the execution of which the writ for personal arrest was taken out. It is not easy to apply here the observations made in the English cases with reference to the particular rules of procedure applicable to those cases. I may mention, however, that generally speaking I accept the distinguishing line for justification as laid down in Smith v. Sydney (2) and Williams v. Smith (3). On the facts of this case I am of opinion that the writ for arrest was the result of irregularity on the part of the decree-holders and not of any error on the part of the Court in making the order of June 24.

I may also refer to the case of Codrington v. Lloyd (4). In the words of Lord Denman, C. J., as applied to the facts of this case, I would say that "the plaintiff here was arrested on a writ which was afterwards declared by the Court irregular. It was, therefore, as if there had been none." In the present case the Registrar, who had the same power as a Judge of the Court in dealing with this writ, set aside the writ which was taken out by the decree-holders. It should be hardly necessary to refer to cases of which Bates v. Pilling (5) and Clissold v. Cratchley (6) are types. The latter case shows the strictness with which the Courts protect a party against trespass upon his person in property in execution of a writ, for which no foundation can be made out. In the case of Fisher v. Pearse (1) which I have already mentioned, the party acted upon a certificate issued by an officer of the Court, and that certificate was really held to be the foundation and condition of the writ of arrest in that case. The observations in Barker v. Braham (7) quoted by the learned Trial Judge in his judgment, appear to me to support the conclusion which I have arrived at in this case.

I can find no foundation for the application for personal arrest either in the terms of the decree or in the terms of the order made by the Court on June 24.

It seems to me that the writ of arrest is referable to irregularity on the part of the party in making an application for personal arrest and not to the order of June 24, which must be read with the decree.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff has a cause of action, and that he is entitled to maintain the suit whether it be treated as an action for damages or in trespass.

As regards the amount of damages, it is clear that the plaintiff was detained for a short time; and no malice is proved. Tokersey has been described by the learned Trial Judge in his judgment as "a man who appeared to have seen very little of litigation." This wrongful arrest appears to have been due to carelessness on the part of the legal adviser of the present defendants rather than to any deliberate intention on their part to get the plaintiff wrongfully arrested. The parties have not pressed for any further inquiry on the question of damages. I think that Rs. 100 would be sufficient to meet the justice of the case. I would, therefore, allow the appeal, reverse the decree of the Trial Court, pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 100. The respondents to pay the costs of the appellant. Each party to bear his own costs of the suit, having regard to the provisions of s. 22 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act.

In view of the difference of opinion, the decree to be drawn up in accordance with the provisions of cl. 36 of the Letters Patent.

Crump, J.—It is unnecessary for me to recapitulate the facts set out in the judgment just delivered. This is an action for false imprisonment and as the imprisonment is admitted the sole question is whether defendants can justify it. For that purpose reliance is placed on the Court's order of June 24: "Execution to issue against defendant No. 1." The question is how should that order be understood? I agree with the learned Trial Judge that it warrants the writ of execution upon which plaintiff was arrested. Had the intention been to order execution against defendant No. 1 personally the order would have been in precisely these terms, whereas the words used are not apt to express an order for execution against the goods of the deceased Bhaidas in the hands of defendant No. 1. Had that been the intention it is not easy to understand why the order should have been limited to defendant No 1 for part of the goods may have been in the hands of the other defendants. On the other hand, the Court may have been unwilling to permit the arrest of the minor defendants.

The order was, no doubt, a wrong order as is plain if a reference is made to the decree, but I am unable to hold that it was the duty of the defendant to construe the order in the light of the decree. The learned Trial Judge has accepted defendant's account of what took place, viz., that he appeared in person before the Judge and asked for such order as he might be entitled to, and that on this order being made he acted on it under legal advice. It is not, in my opinion, fair to say to defendant "you ought to have made enquiry as to whether the Court's order was right or wrong. Had you done so you would have discovered that it was wrong. Therefore, you are liable in damages for having acted on it." That seems to me a dangerous doctrine, and none of the cases go to that length.

I have referred to the cases but the principle to be extracted from them is this "was there an order of the Court justifying the writ?" That is a question of fact and on the facts of this case I hold that there was such an order. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Apart from this question I agree as to the proposed measure of damages.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for wrongful arrest and imprisonment.

The suit was dismissed by Mr. Justice Mulla and on an appeal from that decision, the Judges of the Appeal Court differed. The Acting Chief Justice was of opinion that there should be a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 100 as damages. Mr. Justice Crump was of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed. Under cl. 36 of the Letters Patent, the opinion of the Senior Judge prevailed. Accordingly there was a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 100. But under s. 22 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act as the plaintiff had recovered less than Rs. 300, no order was made with regard to his costs in the Trial Court. The plaintiff has now appealed under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

The facts of the case as set out in the judgment of the Acting Chief Justice are that the firm of Velji Bhimsey & Co., filed a suit against the present plaintiff and his two minor brothers as surviving members of a joint Hindu family, on a promissory-note passed by Bhaidas Vallabhdas deceased a late member of the family. A decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs for Rs 510-9-6 and costs and it was ordered that in default of payment of the decretal amount by the defendants, the same was to be levied by seizure and sale of the property of Bhaidas Vallabhdas deceased that would come to their hands as his heirs and legal representatives.

The money was not paid and no execution was levied for a year after the date of the decree. On May 11, 1922, a notice for renewal of judgment under O. XXI, r. 22, was issued. The defendant did not appear and an order was made on June 24, 1922, in these terms: "Execution to issue against defendant No. 1." On July 4, the plaintiffs Velji, Bhimsey & Co applied for a writ of execution against the person of defendant No. 1 and a warrant was issued by the Deputy Registrar for the arrest of the first defendant who was arrested at 9-30 A. M. on the morning of July 12, 1922, and was produced before the Registrar. The Registrar made the following order: "Decree against the estate of the deceased. No execution by arrest should have been issued against the first defendant's person. Warrant of arrest bad and illegal and not justified by the tenour of the decree." Accordingly the defendant was released.

The present defendants seem to base their defence on the order made on June 24, 1922, and contend that under that order, they were entitled to apply for the arrest of the first defendant. But that order was merely a formal order allowing execution to proceed and it cannot possibly be said that it entitled the plaintiffs in the suit to apply for a warrant for the arrest of the first defendant.

The plaintiffs in the Small Cause Court suit knew perfectly well that they were not entitled under that decree to apply for the arrest of the defendants. They must have known or ought to have known that the order of June 24, 1922, merely enabled them to proceed with the execution of the decree, and as the decree only entitled them to execute it against the property of Bhaidas in the hands of the defendants, they must be taken to have been aware when they applied for the arrest of the first defendant that such conduct was not justified. The plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to damages for wrongful arrest.

The respondents have filed cross-objections and ask to have the damages increased. There was no excuse whatever for the action of the defendants. To arrest a man without any justification is a very serious matter and may have very serious consequences. The consequence of limiting the decree to a hundred rupees was that the plaintiff under s. 22 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act could not be given the costs of the suit. It has been argued that in a Letters Patent Appeal, we are only entitled to consider the point on which the Judges in the Court of Appeal have differed. There is no warrant for that argument. Under cl. 36 of the Letters Patent, the opinion of the Senior Judge prevails. Under cl. 15 an appeal lies from that decree, without any limitation imposed upon the powers of the Appeal Court. The whole decree lies open before us, and on the question of damages, we do not think that Rs. 100 awarded, in the circumstances of the case, are sufficient. We increase the damages on the cross-objections of the respondent to Rs. 300, so that the plaintiff will get his costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XLVII, rr. 1, 4, 7—Review—Appeal, grounds for—Revision.

An order granting an application for review may be objected to in appeal under O. XLVII, r. 7 of the C. P. C. only on the grounds that the application was (a) in contravention of the provisions of r. 2 of the Order; (b) in contravention of the provisions of r. 4 of the Order; and (c) was made after the expiration of the period of limitation. [p. 205, col. 1.]

Where there is a mistake apparent on the face of the record and an application for review is granted on the ground of such mistake and an appeal against the order granting review is dismissed, the order of the lower Appellate Court is not open to revision by the High Court. [ibid.]

Application against an order of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 7th November 1923, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 10th May 1923.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Applicants.

Mr. H. Husain, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—The facts relating to this application for revision are somewhat curious and may be briefly stated. Six co-parceners in a Hindu joint family filed a suit for partition against certain other co-parceners. They obtained a preliminary decree in September 1920, and this was confirmed by this Court in 1921. One of the plaintiffs, Dwarka, had given a perpetual lease of his share to another plaintiff named Sheo Raj. When an application was made for a final decree, one of the defendants, Ram Dhani, made an objection on the ground that the plaintiff Dwarka had died before the execution of the perpetual lease in favour of Sheo Raj. In the course of his enquiry into this objection, the Subordinate Judge found that there was already a finding that Dwarka had died on 4th June 1920, after the execution of the perpetual lease, but before the sale of the proprietary rights in favour of the same transferee Sheo Raj had actually been completed by Dwarka's agent. The result of this finding was that Sheo Raj was held to be not a full representative of Dwarka's proprietary interest. As Dwarka had died before the date of the preliminary decree, the Subordinate Judge held that the decree was not valid. He dismissed the application for a final decree and set aside the order granting a preliminary decree inspite of the fact that it had been confirmed on appeal.

There was an appeal to the District Judge against this order, but the District Judge refused to interfere holding that the preliminary decree was a nullity. He referred to a ruling of the Bombay High Court reported as Vishvanath Dnyanaba v. Lallu Kabla (1) in support of this view.

Against this order of the District Judge the present application is filed, though all the grounds of the application, except the last one, hark back to the order of the Subordinate Judge. The only ground given for setting aside the order of the District Judge in revision is that: "On a proper consideration of the circumstances of the case the learned District Judge ought to have set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge granting the review and the order passed on review." This in itself is no valid ground for an application under s. 115, C. P. C., but I have been in arguments asked to regard the order of the Subordinate Judge as the subject of the application. Even if this procedure could be followed, there are technical objections in the applicant's way. The Subordinate Judge granted the application for a review on the ground that there was a mistake on the face of the record. An order granting an application for review may be objected to in appeal under O. XLVII, r. 7 on one of three grounds, namely, that the application was; (a) in contravention of the provisions of r. 2 of the Order; (b) in contravention of the provisions of r. 4; and (c) after the expiration of the period of limitation. It is not suggested that (b) or (c) will apply to the present case, but it is suggested that (a) will apply, i. e., it is argued that there was no mistake on the face of the record. On this point I am in agreement with the Subordinate Judge. There clearly was a mistake on the face of the record. It had been found as a fact that Dwarka had died before the preliminary decree was given, nevertheless a decree had been given in his name in common with those of the other plaintiffs. The learned Judge has found, and the opposite party in arguments have contended, that the decree was a nullity, and they have authority for this conclusion. The learned Pleader for the applicants has referred to the facts of the case, and it is claimed that under s. 208 of the Indian Contract Act, the agent who was acting for Dwarka was in a position to complete the contract, because the death of Dwarka was not known to him and consequently that Sheo Raj the transferee was in a position to represent Dwarka. What I have to consider now is whether the District Judge acted without jurisdiction, or illegally, or with material irregularity in upholding the order of the Subordinate Judge granting the review. The Subordinate Judge found that there was a mistake on the face of the record, namely, that a decree had been given to Dwarka as if he had been alive, when, as a matter of fact, he was known to be dead. Even if there was a valid contract between Dwarka and Sheo Raj for the transfer of the former's proprietary rights to the latter, that would not be sufficient, because the interests of Ram Dhani, the defendant who is admitted to be the legal heir of Dwarka are adverse to those of Sheo Raj, and the right of the latter to represent Dwarka's proprietary interests can, therefore, not be assumed.

Sheo Raj will apparently be able to enforce his rights under the lease, but that point does not affect the present proceedings. In short I see no grounds for interfering with the orders of the Courts below, and I reject the application with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 181, 182—Execution of decree—Stay order—Execution suspended by order of Court—Application for revival—Limitation.

Where the execution of a decree is stayed pending the decision of a suit the Court making the stay order must make it clear as to when the order is to come to an end. An order staying execution until the decision of a suit is not satisfactory. In one sense a suit is not decided until it is no longer appealable. Where a right of appeal is given a suit is often finally decided in the Appellate Court, and the Court ought to make its order clear by saying whether the stay is to operate until the decision of the suit in the Trial Court or the decision of the appeal, if any. [p. 206, col. 1.]

Where the execution of a decree has been suspended through no act or fault of the decree-holder, the latter has a right to ask the Court to revive and carry through the execution proceedings which have been thus suspended, and no question of limitation arises with regard to an application made under these circumstances to revive and carry through the proceedings. JUDGMENT.—This to my mind is a very clear case, and I find myself unable to agree with the decision of the Court below. Nobody can doubt that to affirm the decision of the Court below would result in grave misjustice and injury to the decree-holder, which would be entirely due, as it seems to me, to the acts of the Court itself. Except so far as they afford a guide for the principles which ought to govern cases of this kind, the authorities referred to in the Courts below and in the arguments do not really assist one, because these cases must depend in the main upon the facts peculiar to them. In this case there are two appeals and there are two decrees, both of which were obtained by the appellant-decree-holder in Bombay in 1917, one on the 12th of May 1917, and one on the 11th of June 1917. They were transferred to the Court of the Munsif of Jaunpur for execution, presumably upon the application of the decree-holder. On the 20th of February 1918 an order was made by the Munsif of Jaunpur. The reason for that was this. The judgment-debtor had begun a suit or suits in Jaunpur seeking to set aside the decrees which had been obtained against him in Bombay, on the ground of fraud. Nobody I imagine would expect that the decree would be executed while the suit to set it aside was being litigated, and the Munsif made an order; "execution proceedings shall be stayed until decision of the regular suit." Unfortunately this form of order is what may be described as slipshed or katcha. A Judge ought to make it clear when he means the order to come to an end. In one sense a suit is not decided until it is no longer appealable. Where a right of appeal is given, a suit is often finally decided in the Appellate Court, and Courts ought to make their own orders clear by saying whether the stay is to operate until the decision of the suit in the Trial Court, or the decision of the appeal, if any. The decree-holder was required to communicate to the Court the result of the suit, but the Court seems to have been in a great hurry, and apparently to have yielded to the temptation to get rid of a pending application, and on the 29th of June 1918 the Court passed the following order:—"As the regular suit is not decided, the case be struck off". Two things are perfectly clear upon that order. First the execution application has never been disposed of at all, either on the merits or by a judicial proceeding. The Judge did say "strike it off," which is not a good way of removing from the list, or indefinitely postponing. The reason given, however, shows clearly that it was only intended to be suspended. Secondly the act was the act of the Court, and in no sense the act of the decree-holder. The suits were decided in the Trial Court on the 9th of December 1919 against the judgment-debtor, but the judgment-debtor, of course, appealed—everybody seems to appeal—and the presumption is that if a suit is decided against anybody, he will appeal, and that a suspension of execution in a case like this means suspension until the final disposal of the suit. Technically the decree-holder might, when the Trial Court had disposed of the suit on the 9th of December 1919, have applied to the Court which had suspended his execution proceedings, to have it revived, at any rate without committing any act of disobedience of the previous order. But everybody in his senses must have appreciated that if an appeal were pending, the same reason would have operated on the mind of the Court pending the appeal, as operated on its mind pending the trial of the original hearing, so that it would have been a perfectly idle application. Meanwhile some rule operating behind the back of the decree-holder in the record-room must have come into operation, and the record was sent back to Bombay on the 29th of May 1920. That did not prevent its being sent for again, but it was the act of the Court, and it further indefinitely postponed the decision of the execution application. That is made perfectly clear by the endorsement of the munsarim on the back of the application, which the decree-holder eventually filed in this case on the 23rd of April 1923, saying: "This is a decree of the Court of Small Causes of Bombay. The decree-holder should first produce a certificate of transfer." The appeals were decided on the 30th of March 1922 after a successful delay of four years, which the judgment-debtor and his advisers no doubt hoped to achieve by alleging fraud, and delaying the decree-holder so that he could not get execution by making a further application within three years of his application of 1918. It is not improbable that the whole scheme of the suit and appeals was a scheme to prevent execution and to put the decree-holder in this difficulty. The decree-holder himself was guilty of his usual contribution towards the general delay and did not apply until the 23rd of April 1923. Owing to the munisarim's note, to which I have already referred, it was necessary to get the record from Bombay, and a further substantial contribution to the general fund of delay was made by all the Courts concerned. Between them it took the Munsif's Court at Jaunpur, the District Court at Bombay, and the High Court at Bombay, eight months to get the record back from Bombay where it had gone in 1920, and it eventually returned to Jaunpur on the 8th of December 1923. The only question in this appeal—indeed in this application throughout has been whether this application for execution is a new application, in which case it is undoubtedly barred by time, or whether it is only a revival of the application which was suspended and eventually struck off the list in February and June 1918 respectively. The decree-holder's representative in the Court below did his best to ruin any chance which the decree-holder had. In dealing with the previous application, he foolishly alleged that it was "struck off for want of prosecution". But that is not the case, and a misdescription of the order five years afterwards cannot affect the legal result of the order. But in the column reserved for stating the mode in which he requires the assistance of the Court, he does say that his prayer "to issue notice to the Judgment-debtor is" in aid of the previous execution, clearly intimating that it is—as I have no doubt it is—in fact an attempt to revive a previous application which had been indefinitely postponed. The view which I am taking may perhaps be said to involve holding that the order of June 1918 and the sending of the record to Bombay, in 1920, was an indefinite postponement so that the decree-holder would be entitled to come back even after 20, 30 or 40 years and ask for it to be revived on the same ground that I am deciding he is entitled to have it revived now. I think that is the logical result, but it is due to the orders of the Court and not the fault of the decree-holder. The principles governing this matter seem to me to be quite simple and clearly established by the ruling of the Privy Council in 1905 in the case of Qamar-ud-Dil Ahmed v. Jawahir Lal (1). The effect of that decision is accurately set out by Mr. Justice Piggott on page 176 in the case of Madho Prasad v. Darupadi Bibi (2), where he says that that case is a good authority for the proposition that where the execution of a decree has been suspended through no act or fault of the decree-holder, the latter has a right to ask the Court to revive and carry through the execution proceedings which have thus been suspended. In the case of Madhabani Dasi v. Lambert (3) it was held, "that an application for execution of a decree may be treated as one in continuation or revival of a previous application, similar in scope and character, the consideration of which has been interrupted by the intervention of objections and claims subsequently proved to be groundless," and quite recently Mr. Justice Lindsay in Execution Second Appeal No. 264 of 1922 took the same view, and held that an application to revive and carry through a pending execution proceeding will not be time-barred even if presented more than three years after the order of suspension was passed. I am prepared to go even further than Mr. Justice Lindsay and to hold that such an application would be within time even if presented more than 103 years after the order of suspension was passed. This seems to me the just and business result, and clearly does justice in this case, and I think in accordance with well-settled principles. The authorities mainly discussed by the Judge in the Court below seem to me to deal with cases where an injunction with a definite date for determination has been granted. I am inclined, further to think that this case could be treated within s. 15 of the Limitation Act, to which I was quite properly refered by Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad in the arguments, by reason of the fact that the execution of the decree has been in effect stayed by the orders of February and June 1918, and that it was stayed indefinitely. I do not think it

Hindu Law—Joint family—Person other than karta, whether can sue and be sued in representative capacity—Adverse possession—Equity of redemption—Appeal, second—Finding of fact, interference with—Counsel in Subordinate Courts, duty of.

Even where a person is not the karta of a joint Hindu family there may be circumstances which would entitle a Court to hold that such person sued or was sued as representing the entire joint family. The question, however, whether the entire family was or was not represented by the person suing or the person who was sued is one of fact to be determined on the particular circumstances of each case. [p. 209, cols. 1 & 2.]

A right of redemption can be acquired by adverse possession but whether it has been so acquired would depend upon the amount of evidence produced by the parties. [p. 210, col. 1.]

Even where the evidence in support of a finding of fact is doubtful the High Court will not in second appeal interfere with the finding until strong reasons either of injustice or of misapprehension of evidence by the lower Court are indicated. [ibid.]

In subordinate Courts the easy method of gripping a principle of law without much understanding is adopted by Counsel while the difficult method of collecting and carefully producing all the available evidence on facts is abandoned. It is enough in the Subordinate Courts to ruin any case on facts only if some principle of law is dangled before the eyes of the learned Counsel. Every principle of law has to be applied to facts and there is no easy method of avoiding facts and deciding cases on easily available rulings. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 7th September 1923, reversing that of the Probationary Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 27th March 1923.

JUDGMENT.—The Court had the advantage of listening to very able arguments by rival Counsel. The suit in the Trial Court was one of redemption by a superior proprietor. Her allegation was that the under-proprietary right which was mortgaged to the defendant had been purchased by her predecessor-in-interest in execution of a decree. The question at issue, therefore, is whether under this decree the right of redemption was transferred to the plaintiff's predecessor or not. Both the Subordinate Courts held that the right had not been transferred. The Trial Court, however, was of opinion that the equity of redemption had been acquired by the plaintiff by adverse possession and granted to the plaintiff a decree for redemption. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge came to a contrary finding and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed.

We have, therefore, to consider (1) whether the plaintiff is owner of the equity of redemption of the under-proprietary right and (2) if not, whether she has acquired such right by adverse possession.

One Subhao Singh had five sons and at the first regular Settlement in 1864 a decree of under-proprietary right of 10 biswas property in village Bangar Khurd was passed in favour of the descendants of Subhao Singh. The persons in whose favour the decree was passed were three sons Sanoman Singh, Sheo Prasad Singh and Bhairon Prasad Singh representing their branches and two grandsons Nidhi and Jagat representing the branches of two deceased sons of Subhao Singh, Sitla Prasad and Sarabjit Singh. For some reason unknown, the names of Nidhi and Jagat alone were entered in the village record. In 1865 the other owners of under-proprietary right made a half-hearted attempt to get their names entered by putting in an application before a Revenue Court. They, however, did not prosecute it and the application was in due course dismissed. It is admitted now, whatever may have been the contention in the lower Courts, that all the descendants of Subhao Singh were interested in the under-proprietary tenure in 10 biswas of the village.

The mortgages in suit are dated 13th June 1861 and 13th May 1870, correspond ing dates of Hindi dates mentioned in the mortgages. The dates have been furnished by the respondents' learned Counsel. On the first mortgage the rent reserved was Rs. 32 out of which the mortgagee was to pay himself Rs. 24 towards interest and pay Rs. 8-8 to hakiman meaning presumably superior proprietors. The rent reserved under the second mortgage was Rs. 14-12 and this sum was divided between interest Rs. 9 odd and payment to hakimans Rs. 4 and odd.

The sale proceedings in favour of the superior proprietor took place in 1873. Udresh Singh and Chandresh Singh the plaintiff's predecessors-in-title, obtained a decree for arrears of under-proprietary rent of the 10 biswas property against Nidhi and Jagat alone. The amount was not paid and in execution of the decree the 10 biswas under-proprietary right was put up to sale and purchased by the superior proprietors on 15th November 1873. Subsequent to the purchase the names of the under-proprietors Nidhi and Jagat were removed from the village records.

As usually happens, the plaintiff first went to the Revenue Court to eject the defendants. In that Court the defendants put forward the mortgage in their favour executed by Bhairon Prasad and pleaded that they were not the tenants of the plaintiff. On this ground the defendants' suit for cancellation of a notice of ejectment issued by the plaintiff was decreed.

There is one other fact which may be mentioned before we consider the legal aspect of the case. On 21st March 1883, that is subsequent to the sale in favour of Udresh Singh and Chandresh Singh, Bhairon Prasad made a further mortgage of his under-proprietary right in favour of the defendants.

I quite agree with the learned Counsel of the plaintiff-appellant that it would be taking too narrow a view of representation to fix the plaintiff down to a representation by Nidhi and Jagat as karta of joint family property. Even where a person is not a karta of a Hindu joint family there may be circumstances which would entitle a Court to hold that the person sued was sued as representing the entire family. The question is whether Nidhi and Jagat were so sued in 1873. First of all there is the finding of two Subordinate Courts against the plaintiffs and this Court would require very strong reasons to differ from a finding of fact. In the present case I find no such reasons. On the face of it Nidhi and Jagat can not be presumed to have represented the family as they were one degree below Bhairon Prasad in the status of the family. It was pointed out that the defendants paid a portion of the reserved rent to the plaintiff and her predecessors thereby acknowledging them to be representatives-in-interest of Bhairon Prasad. This argument is not supported by facts. The payment was to be made to Hakiman and not to the mortgagor and naturally the superior proprietors were to receive the payment whether they purchased the under-proprietary title or not. Such payment, therefore, does not establish any acknowledgment by the defendants that Nidhi and Jagat were sued in their representative capacity and that by the sale the share of Bhairon also was transferred. One witness Kamta Singh son of Jagat Singh was examined on behalf of the plaintiff but his statement was very confused. It is not clear whether any direct descendants of Bhairon Prasad are existing at the moment or not. The successors-in-interest of Bhairon Prasad, even if there are no direct descendants existing, are other persons besides Kamta Singh, so the statement of Kamta Prasad that he has no interest in the equity of redemption cannot be accepted as final on the subject of Bhairon Prasad's title passing to the plaintiff. If on behalf of the plaintiff all the possible successors-in-interest of Bhairon Prasad had come forward to depose that they had no longer any title in the under-proprietary tenure there would have been considerable force in the plaintiff's allegation that Nidhi and Jagat were sued in their representative capacity. No such evidence exists on the record. On the other hand, even after this sale, Bhairon Prasad transferred his rights in the under-proprietary holding. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff stated that the charge under the deed of 21st March 1883 being a small one he had advised his client to accept it and not to appeal on that point. However that may be, the document is proof of Bhairon Prasad claiming the equity of redemption subsequent to 1873 when the case for the plaintiff is that that equity of redemption had through representation of Nidhi and Jagat passed to him. No copy of the sale proclamation is filed. If there had been any mention in the sale proclamation of the mortgages by Bhairon Prasad there might have been some reason to presume that Bhairon Prasad's share was also being sold in execution of a decree against Nidhi and Jagat. Evidence that could have been produced by the plaintiff does not exist on the record. It is most unfortunate, as I have declared in this Court from time to time, that in Subordinate Courts the easy method of gripping a principle of law without much understanding is adopted by Counsel while the more difficult method of collecting and carefully producing all the available evidence on facts is abandoned. It is enough in the Subordinate Courts to ruin any case on facts only if some principle of law is dangled before the eyes of learned Counsel. After all, every principle of law has to be applied to facts and there is no easy method of avoiding facts and deciding cases on easily available rulings. I agree with the two Subordinate Courts that the plaintiff has not established her title to the under-proprietary rights of Bhairon Prasad on the basis of the decree of 1873.

Now we come to adverse possession. There also the decision must depend on the amount of evidence produced by the parties and, therefore, the finding of the lower Appellate Court must be taken to be one of fact when it is decided that the plaintiff has not acquired title in the right of redemption by adverse possession. The learned Counsel for the respondents rightly admitted that such right can be acquired by adverse possession in the equity of redemption. What he insisted equally rightly was that such acquisition will depend on the amount of evidence produced by the parties. In the present case I have been referred to no assertion of title by the superior proprietors to the under-proprietary rights of Bhairon Prasad beyond the removal of the names of Nidhi and Jagat from the village records. It so happens that Bhairon Prasad's name was never entered in the record and, therefore, the removal of the names of Nidhi and Jagat does not raise any presumption that the superior proprietors declared that they had acquired the under-proprietary title of Bhairon Prasad. As already noticed, the document of 1883 also indicates that subsequent to 1873 Bhairon Prasad claimed to be in touch with the right of redemption. Even where the evidence is doubtful this Court will not interfere with the decision of fact until strong reasons either of injustice or of misapprehension of evidence by the lower Court are indicated. This plea of adverse possession also fails.

In the result I dismiss both appeals with costs.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. V. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for maintenance and for arrears. The plaintiff is the appellant before me in second appeal. In the plaint she claimed at the rate of Rs. 15 a month and arrears for six years. Her husband died 26 years before suit. The defendants pleaded that there was an arrangement by which her claim for maintenance was satisfied and also contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to ask for arrears. This arrangement was supposed to be 12 years before suit. Both the lower Courts found against the arrangement pleaded by the defendants. The District Munsif ought to have framed an issue as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to arrears of past maintenance and how much, if any. It is true that if the defendants want to plead that the plaintiff is disentitled to recover any arrears of maintenance, they must plead and prove circumstances amounting to an abandonment. Raja Yarlagadda Mallikarjuna Prasada Nayadu v. Raja Yarlagadda Durga Prasada Nayadu (1). But it does not follow that because they have not pleaded such facts the plaintiff is entitled to all the arrears she claims especially in a case where her husband died twenty-six years before suit and when it does not appear according to the findings of the lower Appellate Court, that any demand was made prior to three years before suit. Mr. Somayya contends that the evidence of the first defendant as the first witness contains an admission that there was a demand 12 years before suit and it was followed by an arrangement. But I do not think much can be made of this admission as the arrangement was disbelieved by the Courts below; and I am inclined to think that the whole of the evidence of the first defendant must be found to be false.

The result is we have got in this case a widow whose husband died 27 years ago and a demand is made only three years prior to suit. In these circumstances I think a discretion remains with the Courts, while not disallowing totally the arrears claimed by the plaintiff, to cut down the period for which arrears may be granted. Vide judgment in A. S. No. 75 of 1922. In such a case, if the plaintiff is anxious to get the whole of the amount, I think it is for her to adduce evidence that she was in need of those arrears. See Karbasappa v. Kallava (2). I do not think that the plaintiff has been prejudiced in this particular case owing to the absence of an issue as to the arrears of maintenance. Having regard to all the facts of this case, I am not inclined to vary the order of the Courts below wherein arrears have been allowed only for three years.

The next question argued by Mr. Somayya is the rate of maintenance. I think this is entirely in the discretion of the Courts below and this Court in second appeal should not interfere unless it appears that the discretion has been very perversely exercised which does not seem to be the case here. There is no reason to interfere with the rate of Rs. 12 per mensem.

The third point argued by Mr. Somayya is that his client ought not to be made to pay the proportionate costs of the defendants in the Courts below. This point is conceded by the Vakil for the respondents and has to be allowed.

The result is the second appeal will be allowed by declaring that the plaintiff will not be liable to pay the proportionate costs of the defendants in the Courts below. She will be entitled to recover only the proportionate costs incurred by her.

In second appeal the parties will give and take proportionate costs, but the plaintiff will not get the printing charges for printing the documents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 105, O. XXII, r. 9—"Affecting the decision of the case," meaning of—Order setting aside abatement, whether can be challenged in appeal from final decree.

The expression "affecting the decision of the case", in s. 105 of the C. P. C., means affecting the merits of the case.

Puran Mal v. Tarif, 30 Ind. Cas. 2; 13 A. L. J. 1089, followed.

Section 105 of the C. P. C. allows a party who is not entitled to appeal against an interlocutory order, to challenge that order when he is appealing against the decree in the case. But unless such interlocutory order affects the merits of the case it cannot be so challenged. An order setting aside an abatement is not an order which affects the merits of the case and cannot, therefore, be challenged in an appeal from the final decree passed in the suit.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 18th November 1922.

Mr. Shambhu Nath Chaube, for the Appellant.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The following facts may be stated in order to make the judgment intelligible.

The appellant obtained a decree for sale which was affirmed on appeal on the 29th of November 1917. When he made an application for a final decree about three years after the passing of the appellate decree, it was discovered that two of the defendants in the suit had died more than 90 days before the making of the application. The Court of first instance declared that the suit had abated. The appellant, thereupon, filed an application to have the abatement set aside. The respondents were heard and an order was made setting aside the abatement. Then followed, in due course, a final decree for sale. Against that final decree for sale, the respondents appealed and the sole ground that they took for challenging the decree was that the Court of first instance was not justified in setting aside the abatement.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that the Court of first instance should not have set aside the abatement and, decreeing the appeal, set aside the order making the decree final.

In this Court two grounds have been urged:—

The first is that it was not open to the respondents to appeal against the final decree on the sole ground that the order setting aside the abatement was unjustifiable.

The second ground is that the order setting aside the abatement did not touch "the decision of the case", and the lower Court was, therefore, not justified in setting aside the final decree passed in the case.

We have considered both the points. We think that we can satisfactorily dispose of this appeal on the second ground and in this view we need not decide the first point urged.

It appears that s. 105 of the C. P. C. allows a party, who is not entitled to appeal against an interlocutory order, to challenge that order, when he is appealing against the decree in the case. But the interlocutory order, unless it affects the merits of the case, will not be allowed to affect the decree. In other words, unless the interlocutory order affects the merits of the case, it cannot be challenged. In the case of Puran Mal v. Tarif (1) an ex parte decree had been passed. It was later on set aside and when an appeal was filed against the decree in the suit, the order setting aside the ex parte decree was challenged. On the question whether it was open to the party appealing to attack the order setting aside the ex parte decree the following remarks were made:—

"In our opinion the question of propriety of setting aside the ex parte decree was a matter which could not be considered by the learned District Judge in appeal. No appeal is given by the Code from an order setting aside an ex parte decree. It cannot be taken exception to later on in a regular appeal because it did not affect the merits of the case."

We are also of opinion that the order setting aside the abatement did not affect the merits of the case. As we read s. 105 of the C. P. C., the words "affecting the decision of the case" are equivalent to "affecting the merits of the case".

The orders setting aside the abatement brought on the record the proper parties. The merits of the case had nothing to do with the array of the parties. The merits of the case related to the correctness or otherwise of the contentions of the parties placed before the Court. If this view be correct, the final decree could not be challenged on the sole ground that the order setting aside the abatement and trying the suit on its merits was a wrong order.

We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs in this Court and in the Court below. The Counsel's fee in this Court will be calculated on the higher scale.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52—Lis pendens, doctrine of, applicability of—Decree based on compromise—Collusion.

The fact that a decree is made in pursuance of a compromise does not exclude the application of the doctrine of lis pendens provided, however, that such compromise is not tainted by fraud or collusion. A suit may be collusive at its very inception or a decree may be obtained by collusion in a suit which was honestly begun. [p. 214, col. 2.]

Where during the progress of a suit honestly instituted, the parties enter into a collusive agreement of compromise with the express object of defeating the rights of an auction-purchaser at the Court sale pending the suit, the doctrine of lis pendens is inapplicable. [p. 215, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cuddalore, in A. S. No. 80 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Panruti, in O. S. No. 557 of 1918.

JUDGMENT.—Original Suit No. 557 of 1918 and O. S. No. 27 of 1919 were instituted by Thinnappa Chetty and Manicka Chetty respectively. The two suits were heard together by the District Munsif of Panruti who decided them in favour of the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge confirmed the decision of the District Munsif. In Second Appeal No. 1754 of 1922 the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in the first case is attacked; in Second Appeal No. 1463 of 1922 his decision in the second case is likewise attacked.

The defendants in the two suits are practically identical. The question to be decided is, to whom does the property in dispute belong, to the plaintiff in each suit or the defendants? The point was very fully considered both by the District Munsif and the Subordinate Judge and they have come to the conclusion that the defendants have no title. I agree with that finding.

The defendants are carpenters. Their ancestors owned two sets of properties:—(1) Thacha Manyan or carpenter's Inam Paimash Nos. 67 and 68 and (2) Sircar or ryotwari lands. Paimash Nos. 68 and 70.

The defendants' father Nainapillai Asari conveyed Sircar lands Nos. 68 and 70 by the original of Ex. F on 12th November 1873 to Chinnathambi Goundan. The latter sold the property which he purchased in four different parcels. It is sufficient to say that as the result of various transactions to which I need not refer, Thinnappa Chetty became the owner of two out of four plots and I shall designate them plots Nos. 1 and 2. Similarly Manicka Chetty became the owner of a third plot which I shall designate plot No. 3. We are not concerned with plot No. 4.

The defendants contended that the properties claimed by Thinnappa and Manicka were carpenter's inam corresponding to Paimash Nos. 67 and 69 and that, therefore, they had no right to them. The land in question bears Field No. 32 and in Diglott Register Ex. 6, S. No. 32 is said to be carpenter's inam corresponding to Paimash Nos. 67 and 69. The District Munsif has found that this description in the register is wrong and that the suit land, that is in S. No. 32 is not carpenter's inam. The learned Subordinate Judge has also held that the suit land is not carpenter's inam. There is no doubt as regards the identity of the subject-matter in dispute. The District Munsif and the Subordinate Judge were both dealing with it. The Subordinate Judge, however, states his conclusion in a slightly different way. He says in effect that if the various plots were rightly shown on the Survey Map, carpenter's inam would not have been shown in the place where S. No. 32 is now marked on the map but it would have been shown in a different place. This idea he conveys in language which has been made the subject of much debate in the arguments at the Bar. But I have carefully considered the Subordinate Judge's judgment and the clear effect of his words is that the suit land is not carpenter's inam and it does not correspond to Paimash Nos. 67 and 69 and that it is on the contrary Sircar land sold in 1873 by Nainapilli Asari. Owing to the facts being complicated, it may become necessary to very closely follow the Subordinate Judge's arguments, in order to understand what he means. But, when once his reasoning is understood, there can be no doubt as to the effect of his judgment. He agrees with the District Munsif but looks at the question from a different stand point. The learned Subordinate Judge has written a well-considered judgment on this point and I entirely agree with his conclusion. The defendants taking advantage of the mistake in Diglott Register put forward a false case. On this finding Second Appeal No. 1473 of 1922 fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

There is a further question that arises in the other second appeal. Original Suit No. 480 of 1913 had previously been filed by the carpenters, that is, the present defendants. In that suit, they claimed S. No. 32 on the ground that it was carpenter's inam and asked that the defendants in that suit should be directed to give up possession of it. There were four defendants and the first defendant Arunachallam Chetty was interested in plots Nos. 1 and 2. That suit was filed on 27th August 1913. In execution of a decree against Arunachallam Chetty, these plots were sold and Thinnappa Chetty purchased them in Court-auction on the 10th September 1914. Although the interest of Arunachallam Chetty passed to Thinnappa Chetty the latter was not brought on the record of that suit and a decree was passed against the original defendants including Arunachellam Chetty on 16th November 1915.

The contention of the appellants is that the alienation in favour of Thinnappa Chetty was made pendente lite and his purchase is, therefore, affected under s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act by lis pendens. Both the District Munsif and the Subordinate Judge have overruled this contention but on different grounds. The District Munsif has held that the doctrine of lis pendens has no application, because the decision in the previous suit was a result of a collusive agreement entered into between the parties to that suit. I cannot agree with the view which the Subordinate Judge has taken, to which I shall presently refer. He has not given any finding on the point whether there was collusion. I have, therefore, examined the evidence myself under s. 103 and O. XLI r. 24, C. P. C., and I have come to the conclusion that the District Munsif's finding is correct. If it is proved that the carpenters and Arunachellam Chetty the plaintiff and the first defendant respectively in that suit, entered into an agreement for the purpose of defeating the rights of the auction-purchaser Thinnappa Chetty and that in pursuance of that agreement a decree was allowed to be passed in favour of the carpenters, these facts would be sufficient to establish collusion which would render the rule of lis pendens inapplicable. The fact that the decree was made in pursuance of a compromise does not exclude the application of s. 52, provided, however, that such compromise is not tainted by fraud or collusion. Annamalai Chettiar v. Malayandi Appaya Naik (1). A suit may be collusive even at its very inception or a decree may be obtained by collusion in a suit which was honestly begun. Krishnappa v, Shivappa (2), Hukum Chand v. Raja Ram Bahadur Singh (3) and Tangor Majhi v. Jaladhar Deari (4). In this case I am satisfied that during the progress of the suit which was honestly instituted, the parties entered into a collusive agreement with the express object of defeating the rights of the auction-purchaser at the Court sale. In paras. 26 and 30 of the Munsif's judgment, he deals with his point fully and I entirely agree with the reasons which he gives for his conclusion. The evidence of P. W. No. 2 fully supports the view of the District Munsif and he was right in acting upon it. The circumstances and probabilities also show that the decree was the result of a collusion. It is unnecessary to go into this matter more fully.

I have said that the Subordinate Judge also has held on the question of lis pendens against the defendants but for different reasons In his opinion the subject-matter of the previous suit and the present suit is not identical and he has on that ground held that s. 52 has no application. I do not think that this view can be supported. The contest in both the suits related to the same land. It was described as S. No. 32. The carpenters attempted in the previous suit to get possession of what is known as S. No. 32—of its identity there can be no doubt that it was corpenter's inam. In the present suit again the dispute was about this very plot and the question had to be determined whether it was or was not carpenter's inam. It is doubtless true that in the previous case no plan was filed and no boundaries were given. But it is reasonably certain that the claim was put forward in regard to the plot now in dispute. The terwa was given annas 13 and the extent was given annas 2 and pies 6. This description applies to the suit land. I do not think that there was in the previous suit such misdescription as to render the doctrine of lis pendens inapplicable. Loke Nath Sahu v. Achutnand Dass (5).

As, however, I have held that Thinnappa Chetty is not bound by lis pendens for the reasons given by the plaintiff. Second Appeal No. 1754 of 1922 fails and is dismissed with costs.

Railway Company—Carriage of goods—Risk Note Form "B"—Wilful neglect—Waggon sealed and not locked.

In a suit to recover damages for the loss of goods consigned to the defendant Railway Company for carriage under Risk Note Form "B" it was found that the Company had sealed the waggon which contained the goods on one side and that the seal was broken and it was not known how the goods disappeared;

Held, that the putting of a seal instead of a lock on the waggon did not amount to wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Company and that the plaintiff's suit was liable to be dismissed.

Revision against an order of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, Lucknow, dated the 13th February 1924, in Original Suit No. 1873 of 1923.

Mr. Ramapat Ram, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. N. Mukerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In the lower Court of Small Causes the suit was of the usual type of damages for loss of goods conveyed by a Railwary under Risk Note B. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-applicant put forward an ingenious argument that this Note B was not justified at all and that the plaintiff had paid full weight and not at the reduced rate. This issue was not put forward in this Form in the Trial Court. Further, there is evidence on the record of two witnesses Hira Lal and Baswas to the effect that the goods were booked at reduced rates. The learned Counsel desired the Court to give another opportunity to disprove those statements and prove as a fact that the rate charged was not a reduced one. I do not think that he is entitled to any such privilege. He himself produced Risk Note B and he ought to have produced definite evidence that a wrong Risk Note was given to him by the Railway Company; there was no necessity for the framing of an issue on such an obvious point.

The plea as to wilful neglect cannot succeed. The Company in the way usual with all Railways sealed the waggon on one side. The seal was broken and it is not known how the plaintiff's property disappeared. The putting of a seal and not of a lock does not amount to wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Company. The learned Judge of the lower Court has discussed the rulings put forward in support of the plaintiff's case and I consider his observations to be correct. I dismiss this application with costs.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), election held under—Voting paper—Name of candidate struck out—Marks or writing on voting paper—Cross-marks bisected by line between names of two candidates—Validity of votes.

In an election held under the Madras District Municipalities Act, a vote recorded in favour of a candidate will not be invalidated by the fact that the name of the candidate for whom the vote was not cast was struck out on the voting paper. Nor will mere unintelligible tracings, or other mark or writing, on the voting paper invalidate a vote unless the Court finds that the tracing, mark, or writing is such by which a voter may afterwards be identified. [p 217, col. 1.]

Where the intersecting point of the cross mark on a voting paper is bisected by the line between the names of two candidates the vote cannot be counted in favour of any of those candidates and must be excluded altogether. [ibid.]

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Subordinate Judge, Cochin, dated the 31st March 1923, in O. P. No. 4 of 1922.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer and D. A. Krishna Variar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and V. Subramania Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent in Election Petition O. P. No. 4 of 1922 before the Subordinate Judge's Court at Cochin was declared by the Returning Officer as the candidate duly elected for the B Ward in an election held for that Ward in Cochin Municipality. The petitioner Mr. Joseph filed a petition for having it declared that the respondent's election was not valid and that it should be declared that he was the person properly elected by the constituency at the election held. A civil revision petition has been filed in this Court on behalf of the respondent to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge by which he declared that the petitioner was the person who was duly elected and that the declaration that the respondent was the duly elected candidate was wrong.

To begin with, I am far from satisfied that on the facts of this case a revision petition under s. 115, C. P. C., is competent. There is no question which can be said to be a question of jurisdiction or of any material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction by the Subordinate Judge. There may be cases where the mistakes committed by the lower Court are so varied and so numerous as almost to amount to material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction but this is not such a case and I am not called upon, to express any opinion with regard to the possibility of a civil revision petition in such cases. I have been referred to the decision of Krishnan and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ., in the case of Ramaswami Gounder v. Muthu Velappa Gounder (1). So far as that case was concerned, it would appear that the lower Court declared the petitioner duly elected without giving any one an opportunity to show that his election was valid or invalid. The other observations in the course of the judgment regarding jurisdiction assumed by misconstruing a rule were apparently not necessary for the decision of that case as apart therefrom the Court was found to have jurisdiction. However, I am informed that this very question of the right of this Court to interfere in revision is now pending before the Full Bench of this Court. Anyhow, in the view I have taken of the merits in this case, it has become unnecessary for me to express any decided view with regard to the extent of the jurisdiction of this Court to interefere in revision in such election cases.

The petitioner in this Court was by the Returning Officer declared to have received 100 votes and the respondent 98 votes. The Subordinate Judge allowed the respondent five more votes out of the votes found by the Returning Officer to be invalid and refused to be counted by him for the respondent. This made the total number of votes in favour of the respondent 103. To the 100 votes obtained by the petitioner, one vote was added, namely, that of a person alleged to have been a minor but whose name was found included in the list of voters for the constituency. From the total so made up, namely 101, two votes were deducted by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that one of those was a case of voting by false personation and another was a vote granted by a person who according to the list was no voter at all but whose official description happened to correspond with that given in the list. We, therefore, have as a result of these additions and subtractions made by the Subordinate Judge 103 votes in favour of the respondent and 99 in favour of the petitioner. Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer, the learned Vakil for the petitioner, has addressed considerable argument with regard to every one of the five votes and contended that all those five votes were wrongly included in the votes for the respondent and should have been rejected by the Subordinate Judge.

I shall now deal with these five votes. With regard to one of these five votes, the objection to its being counted is that the name of the candidate for whom the vote was not cast seems struck out on the voting paper. This has been held not to invalidate the vote. Another vote shows that under the cross-mark made on the voting paper against the name of the respondent, there appears a tracing of some letters which we cannot make out. From the voting paper it is clear for whom the voting was intended and I cannot say that the other marks on the voting paper are marks from which the voter may be identified. The third voting paper to which objection has been raised is the paper on which the cross-mark seems to be placed just midway between the names of the two candidates. It has been argued by Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer that the intersecting angle is placed above the dividing line and that, therefore, the vote must be counted in favour of his client, the respondent. I have no doubt whatever that if the intersecting point was undoubtedly above the line and visibly so there could be no doubt that it ought to be counted for the respondent. But though it does appear to be slightly above the line substantially, the cross-mark is really bisected by the line between the names of the candidates and I am unable to gather from the mark any clear intention of the vote having been cast in favour of one candidate or the other. That vote would have to be excluded from the votes counted by the Subordinate Judge in favour of the respondent. The remaining two voting papers have been objected to by the learned Vakil for the petitioner on the ground that in the one there is some Tamil writing and in the other there is the English letter C written on the voting paper in addition to the cross-mark. Such writing would invalidate the vote only if it should be found that the writing is a mark by which the voter may be afterwards identified. For all these positions indicated by me, the leading case of Woodward v. Sarsons (2) is the leading authority. So far as any writing on the voting paper is concerned, which is attacked on the ground that it is a mark by which the voter may be identified, it seems to me that it must be either a mark which on the face of it shows or may show the person who has voted or with regard to which there is evidence on the record which shows that the mark was put in there by some prearrangement or conspiracy by reason whereof by looking at the mark, one will be in a position to say that it is the vote of such and such a person. No doubt there may also be other cases where from the very nature of the mark we may be able to infer the intention on the part of the person who put the mark there that the voter should or may be identified. In the case of such marks also the Courts would have no hesitation in declaring against the vote if such intention could be gathered from the mere appearance of the writing. In the case of the two votes I am now considering, it is clear that the writing alone is not sufficient to identify the voter, because in the one case though it appears to be a Tamil writing one cannot even be sure that it is any particular letter. In the other case, no doubt, there is the English letter C, but I consider that being only a single and such a simple letter it is not sufficient to form the ground of the identification of the writing of any person. I am unable to say that there is anything in the appearance of these marks from which I can reasonably infer that there was the intention on the part of the person making them that the voter or writer should be identified. In the result, therefore, one out of the five votes added by the Subordinate Judge to the votes obtained or declared to have been obtained by the respondent would have to be excluded from the Court. Thus the total number of votes obtained by him would be 102. Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer further argued that one of the votes recorded for the respondent has been proved in the Court below to have been recorded by a person whose name was not in the list. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that there has been no false personation with regard to that vote and I have not felt persuaded that the person who cast the vote was any other than the person who was entitled to vote. Remembering that in the evidence this particular person calls himself Parameswara Ayyar and that in the list he is called Eswara Ayyar, I am not prepared to say that the difference in the names was not due only to some mistake with regard to the name of the same individual. There is no reason to suppose that any case of false personation has been established. Seeing, therefore, that the votes according to my findings which are recorded in favour of the respondent total up 102, it seems to me unnecessary to consider the question of the votes with regard to the petitioner, because taking them at the highest the total is 101. It is, therefore, unnecessary for me to discuss the question of the two cases of false personation which were found against him by the Subordinate Judge with regard to which Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer has addressed arguments to me to show that the findings of the lower Court are wrong. Having, therefore, come to the conclusion that even on a careful scrutiny of the votes by me the finding of the Subordinate Judge is correct, there is no reason for me to interfere.

The civil revision petition is accordingly dismissed with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION
SUIT No. 2122 OF 1922.
March 28, 1924.
Present:—Mr. Justice Page.

MCLEOD & COMPANY—PLAINTIFFS
versus
IVAN JONES & COMPANY—
DEFENDANTS.

Principal and agent—Commission agent and principal, relationship of, after contract has been carried into effect—Sale of goods—Acceptance of bill against documents—Suit on bill—Consideration, want of—Burden of proof—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint at late stage—New cause of action, whether can be allowed to be introduced.

An amendment of a plaint should not be permitted at a late stage of a suit which would have the effect of introducing a new cause of action which has become time barred. [p. 218, col. 2.]

The agreement between a commission agent and the party for whom he is acting may, at the outset, be that as between a principal and his agent, and so long as the contract remains executory the relationship of principal and agent may subsist between the parties. But after the contract of purchase has been effected the relationship of the parties quoad the contract of sale ceases to be that of principal and agent and ripens into that of vendor and purchaser, though it may be necessary to refer to some other prior agreement in order to ascertain the terms and conditions of the contract of sale. [p. 219, col. 1.]

A purchaser of goods who has accepted a bill against documents is under an obligation, as the acceptor of the negotiable instrument, to pay for the value of the instrument according to its tenor, notwithstanding that at the time when the bill is duly presented for payment the goods may not have arrived at the place where they are to be delivered and, therefore, the purchaser may not have had an opportunity before payment of examining the goods. The position in law of such a purchaser is this that although he is bound to honour the bill according to its tenor the payment of the bill will not in any way prejudice his right subsequently to reject the goods if he is entitled to do so under the contract after examination. But in a suit to recover the amount of the bill the onus is upon the defendant to prove that no consideration passed to him which would sanction the obligation under which he accepted the bill. [p. 220, col. 2.]

Case-law referred to.

Mr. Pugh, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Langford James, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought to recover damages for the breach of a contract to take delivery of and to pay for 4 Westcott Cars, 12 Lexington Cars and 70 Nash Cars sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants. In his opening address Counsel for the plaintiffs stated that the plaintiffs' relationship to the defendants in respect of the sale of these cars was partly that of agent to the principal and partly that of vendor to vendee. At the trial he applied for leave to amend the plaint by adding a claim in the alternative for an indemnity as agents, but I refused the application because in my opinion there was no reasonable ground for permitting an amendment of the claim at so late a stage in the proceedings, and also because, if the amendment were to be allowed a new cause of action would be admitted which is now time-barred. I do not wish it to be understood, however, that, in my opinion the proposition which was propounded on behalf of the plaintiffs is one to which I should give my assent. No doubt circumstances may arise in which a person who enters into a contract of sale as agent, for example, as agent for an undisclosed principal, may be deemed to be either a principal or an agent vis a vis the other party to the contract of sale; but in the eye of the law, in my opinion, he cannot be regarded as filling at the same time both capacities. In effecting the contract of sale, he must needs have acted either as a principal, or as an agent. Now the legal position of a commission agent who sells or purchases goods for a foreign principal is well-known, and has been frequently defined. It may be that the agreement between a commission agent and the party for whom he is acting may, at the outset, be that between a principal and his agent, and so long as the contract remains executory the relationship of principal and agent may subsist between the parties. It has also been held that such a broker may possess a right in certain circumstances to stop the goods in transit. But in my opinion after the contract of purchase has been effected the relationship of the parties quoad the contract of sale ceases to be that of the principal and agent, and ripens into that of vendor and purchaser; though it may be necessary to refer to some other agreement, for example the prior agreement of agency, in order to ascertain the terms and conditions of the contract of sale. If the law were to be otherwise, the result would be that in so far as the agent was acting as vendor he would be under no obligation to account to the other party to the contract in respect of any profit which he might have made through buying or selling the goods in question to that other party. On the other hand, in so far as he was acting as the agent of the principal he would be liable to account to his principal in respect of any profit in excess of the agreement commission which he might have made out of the transaction. Where goods are sold through A, A must either sell on his own account as principal or, as an agent for B must create privity of contract between B, and a third party [see Feise v. Wray (1), Ireland v. Livingstone (2), Robinson v. Mollett (3), Cassaboglon v. Gibbs (4), Ex parte Miles, In re Isaacs (5) and Paul Beier v. Chotalal Javerdas (6). It is not uninteresting to observe that Lord Blackburn in his Book on Contracts of Sale (3rd Edition page 352) states the position of a commission agent acting for a foreign principal to be as follows :—

"It seems that in cases where a factor acting for a foreign correspondent purchases goods in his own name and on his own credit, it is rather too qualified a phrase to say merely that he stands in the position of a seller quoad the consignee : if he is not a seller it is difficult to say who is, as there would be much difficulty in establishing any privity of contract between the foreign correspondent, and the original seller. But there is very gradual progression through these cases in which the original seller has a right to elect between the liability of a factor and the consignee as principals up to those cases in which the factor if liable, at all, is liable merely as a surety, and there may be consequently difficulty at times, in determining whether an agent can be said to be in the position of seller so as to give him the right to stop the goods in transit on his own account or not." See further on this subject Siffken v. Wray (7).

As I have stated it may be difficult to ascertain whether in any particular case the relationship between the parties is that of principal and agent or of vendor and vendee, but inevitably, in my opinion, it must be either the one or the other. I was referred certain passages in the judgment of Mr. Justice Blackburn, as he then was, in Ireland v. Livingston (2) but, in my opinion, these passages when submitted to analysis do not support the proposition that an agent can enter into a contract of sale or purchase for or with a foreign principal without creating the relationship of vendor and purchaser between the parties to the contract. In Robinson v. Mollett (3) Mr. Justice Blackburn in impressig an opinion contrary to that of Mr. Justice Brett, a great Master of Commercial Law, and other learned Judges appeared to think that an agent might purchase goods for his principal without himself being the vendor or creating privity of contract between his principal and a third person, but the opinion which that very learned Judge then expressed was dissented from and, if I may venture to say so, rightly deprecated by other learned Judges and was treated as erroneous by the House of Lords. In this case, however, I will not yield to the temptation to discuss this question further because in my opinion it is clear that in relation to the sale of the motor cars in question in this case the allegation of the plaintiffs, as set out in the plaint, that they were acting as principals is the correct inference to be drawn from the facts. It will be enough to say in respect of the cars which were sold by Nash to the plaintiffs and re-sold by them to the defendants that McLeod & Co., had contracted with Nash to take consignments of these cars before they had come into any contractual relationship whatever with the defendants, and I have no doubt that in effecting the contract of sale of these cars to the defendants the plaintiffs acted as principals, and not as agents.

As regards the 4 Westcott Cars and the Lexington Cars it was not contended that the contract of sale was entered into by Ivan Jones with the plaintiffs otherwise than as principals. With respect to the 4 Westcott Cars in the course of the case, in my opinion acting on sound advice, the plaintiffs abandoned their claim. As regards the 12 Lexington Cars the controversy between the parties arose in this way.

[After discussing the evidence adduced in the case, his Lordship held:]

In my opinion having regard to the form of the contract and the surrounding circumstances the failure to ship in September was a breach of the contract which entitled the defendants to reject the goods when tendered to them on arrival.

I now pass on to the 70 Nash Cars, 25 of which were despatched from the factory on the 24th June.

[After discussing of the position between parties in respect of these 25 cars, His Lordship held:].

Having regard to the contract, and to what passed between the parties, in my opinion, the tender of these 25 cars was not a good tender of cars under the contract between the parties the plaintiffs and the defendants. Because firstly, they were not to form the subject-matter of that contract and even if they were, they were cars which did not fulfil the conditions of the contract because they were fitted with battery and not magnet ignition, I have carefully considered the evidence, and I am unable to come to the conclusion that the provision of battery ignition instead of magnet ignition was merely a trifling matter which would not justify Ivan Jones in rejecting the goods. Therefore, as far as these 25 cars are concerned, I come to the conclusion on both grounds that the defendants were entitled to refuse to accept them under the contract.

[His Lordship, upon a consideration of the evidence relating to the delivery of the remaining 46 cars held:]

In so far as this is a claim for goods sold and delivered the onus is upon the plaintiffs to satisfy me that the goods tendered were goods which correspond with the description provided in the contract, and they have not done so. On the other hand, although, in my opinion, the plaint is not aptly drawn to raise this issue, I propose to consider one further matter, and it is a very important one, namely, that in respect of these 46 cars two drafts were accepted by the defendants, and having regard to the principles of law applicable to this matter and the observations of Baron Parke in Stephens v. Wilkinson (8) and the case of Biddell Brothers v. Clemens Horst Co. (9) the purchaser of goods who has accepted a bill against documents is, in my opinion, under an obligation as the acceptor of a negotiable instrument to pay for the value of the instrument according to its tenor, notwithstanding that at the time when the bill is duly presented for payment, the goods may not have arrived at the place where they are to be delivered, and therefore, the purchaser had had no opportunity before payment, of examining the goods. In my opinion, the position in law of such a purchaser is this, that although he is bound to honour the bill according to its tenor, the payment of the bill will not in any way prejudice his right subsequently to reject the goods if he is entitled to do so under the contract after examination. But in a suit to recover the amount of the bill the onus is upon the defendant to prove that no consideration passed to him which would sanction the obligation under which he came through accepting the bill. Therefore, on the assumption that the plaintiffs are entitled in this suit as framed to sue upon the bills, (though in my opinion, they are not so entitled) the onus is upon the defendants to satisfy me that there was a total failure of consideration for their acceptance and payment of the bill, or in other words, they have to satisfy me that the goods as tendered were not in accordance with the contract. In order to satisfy me of that the defendants make this case, Mr. Jones states, and it is not in dispute that he had never seen the export specification of the models in question before the contract was entered into, but that in June, before the contract was entered into a Nash Car arrived for McLeod & Co., from Bombay. It is reasonably clear to my mind that a Nash Car did come into McLeod's possession sometime in June, because on the 4th June they insured it. The car which had come into their possession on the 4th June was a car which was bought by Ivan Jones. Ivan Jones stated in his evidence that when the question of the Nash Agency was first mooted he had gone to McLeod's office, and that there had seen a Nash Car; and that he may or may not have gone for a short spin in that car. But he stated that he asked that he might have the car for demonstration purposes and that the car was delivered to him by McLeod as a demonstration car. Now, it is admitted that this car was insured by McLeod on the 4th June and that it was ultimately bought by Ivan Jones and that this car as well as Mr. Watson's car were fitted with clincher rims and tyres. Mr. Ivan Jones stated that he was most anxious to see the car, and to test the car, before he entered into the contract, that he had this car that he ran about in the car and that he was satisfied that the car had clincher rims, and tyres. He further stated that he had this car before he entered into the contract, and that Mr. Dwyer told him that this was the demonstration model of the Nash Cars which was the subject-matter of the contract, Mr. Jones further asserted that it was on the faith of that representation that he entered into the contract. Now, the plaintiffs do not accept Jones' version of what took place. They agree that he went for a spin in Mr. Watson's car. They admit that they bought a car like Watson's car, which was insured on the 4th June, and which was ultimately bought by Jones, but it was suggested on behalf of the plaintiffs that probably this car had nothing to do with the contract which was entered into, but was a car which Mr. Jones bought for his own purposes after the contract was entered into, that it was in no sense a demonstration car, and that the plaintiffs had not represented it as being fitted with the type of tyre with which the cars under the contract would be fitted. I have to satisfy myself as to the probability of the evidence given on the one side and on the other. In my opinion, the version given by Mr. Jones is the correct one, and I am supported in that view by a letter written on the 7th September by the plaintiffs. On the 7th September the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants:—

Nash Demonstrator

DEAR SIRS,

We beg to return herewith our Bill No. 1013, dated 5th August for the above car.

We note that your Mr. Jones has called our attention to the fact that he is buying Nash Cars at Rs. 5,250, this price we know to be f. o. b. Bombay, you will realise that we ourselves purchased this car in Bombay from your Messrs. Hill Sawyer & Co., re railed it to Calcutta by passenger train and had it equipped with spare tyres, side lamps, horns and also cushion covers. At the time Mr. Jones took delivery of this car he enquired the price and was told that it would be approximately Rs. 5,500 the actual cost to us here.

With regard to the extra charge for insurance premium, as advised to Mr. Jones, this car was insured by our office here and this is the actual cost of the premium to us.

In view of the fact that this was a verbal arrangement whereby Mr. Jones took over this car at our cost we feel sure that upon going into this matter you will realise that with the extra fitting the car cost us just exactly what we are charging you.

We will appreciate receiving your cheque by return.

Yours faithfully,
Pro. McLeod & Co.
(Sd.) J. H. DULTON.

The fact that the defendants themselves described the car as a Demonstration car, in my opinion, throws a considerable light upon the probability of the two stories. If Mr. Jones entered into this contract upon the faith of a representation by Mr. Dwyer, on behalf of the plaintiffs, that the export specifications of the models under the contract would be equipped among other things with the clincher tyres with which his Demonstration car was fitted, that in my opinion, if Mr. Jones was induced to enter into this contract by reason of that representation, and accepted the bills for the cost on the faith of the representation, it would not be open to the plaintiffs now to assert that the export specifications of the models in question did not provide for the clincher tyres. The law of estoppel is only a branch of the law of evidence. I have come to the conclusion that in the absence of any specification which had been given to Mr. Jones, and having regard to the fact that a Demonstration car with clincher tyres was given to him, as I find was a fact, before he entered into the contract, that the plaintiffs are now precluded from asserting that the export specifications did not provide for clincher tyres. Under the circumstances I come to the conclusion and for the purpose of this case it must be taken, that these 46 cars which were tendered in partial fulfilment of the contract did not conform to the description provided in the contract, and, therefore, even if the suit may be regarded as a suit on the bills of that the defendants have satisfied me that there was a total failure of consideration. That disposes of the case in respect of all the cars which were in question and, in my opinion, the plaintiffs have failed to make out their claim, and the suit must be dismissed with costs on Scale No. 2.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No 360 OF 1923.

November 7, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Dalal, J. C.

Syed MAZHAR HUSAIN AN ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

Sheikh RAFIQ HUSSAIN AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 96, O. IX, rr. 7, 13—Ex parte proceedings—Remedy—Appeal from final decree—Objection to ex parte proceedings, whether can be taken.

A party against whom proceedings are taken ex parte and who has failed to avail himself of the remedy given by r. 7 or r. 13 of O. IX of the C. P. C. is not entitled, on an appeal from the decree passed against him under s. 96 of the C. P. C., to urge that the Trial Court was wrong in proceeding to hear the suit ex parte against him. The remedy provided by rr. 7 and 13 of O. IX and that provided by s. 96 of the C. P. C. are not cumulative. [p. 222, col. 2.]

Where an application to set aside an ex parte trial is dismissed under r. 7 of O. IX of the C. P. C., the aggrieved party is not bound to take proceedings under r. 13 of O. IX inasmuch as such a course would be futile. The order refusing to set aside the ex parte proceedings, however, may, in such a case, be challenged in an appeal filed against the decree under s. 96 of the C. P. C. [p. 223, col. 2.]

Case-law referred to.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 7th November 1923, preferred against that of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 30th April 1923.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Hyder Husain and Jagat Narayan Varma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal was not argued on the merits though it was filed from an ex parte decree under s. 96 (2) of the C. P. C. The question at issue here is whether the Trial Court was justified in passing an ex parte order during the hearing on 15th January 1923. The appellants are two defendants: defendant No. 3 and defendant No. 5 and different considerations arise in their cases. Defendant No. 3 applied on 30th January 1923 for the cancellation of the ex parte order. This application was lodged under O. IX, r. 7 and dismissed on 28th February 1923. The defendant No. 5 took no steps under r. 7 nor any steps under r. 13 when finally a decree ex parte was passed against him. Under the circumstances there was no interlocutory order passed against the defendant No. 5 which he could only attack on appeal and in no other manner. He had an opportunity of applying to the Court under r. 7 and did not avail himself of that opportunity. Further he never made any attempt to produce any witnesses or to argue his case prior to the final decision of the Trial Court dated 30th April 1923. In his case the question, therefore, will be whether a party who has failed to avail himself of the remedy given to him by r. 7 and r. 13 is entitled on appeal under s. 96 to urge that the Court was wrong in proceeding to hear the suit ex parte against him. On the basis of the Full Bench ruling of Sadhu Krishna Ayyar v.

Kuppan Ayyangar (1) a learned Judge of this Court decided in Farzand Ali v. Ekadashi (2) that the remedies were cumulative. If a party failed to take advantage of r. 13 he can raise the same point of the injustice of the ex parte order on an appeal under s. 96. The learned Judge's attention does not appear to have been drawn to a decision of a Judge of great learning of this Court now Mr. Justice Piggott in Jadu Nath Basak v. Ram Narayan (3). There the learned Judge specifically dissented from the Full Bench ruling of the Madras High Court. Even in the Madras High Court it has been recently held in Badvel Chinna Asethu v. Vattipalli Kasavayya (4) that when once an application has been filed under r. 13 the same matter as to the justice of the ex parte order cannot be agitated on appeal. If that is the reasoning of the Mardras High Court the reasoning in Farzand Ali v. Ekadashi (2) cannot be sustained that the two remedies are cumulative. If they had been cumulative even when one has failed in one of the two remedies he can take advantage of the other remedy. The Madras High Court, however, held that he could not. A similar view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court in Hummi v. Aziz-ud-din (5). A Bench of that Court held that once a party sought his remedy under r. 13 he could not raise the same ground of impropriety of the ex parte character of the decree in regular appeal. It is clear, therefore, that according to the Allahabad and Madras High Courts the two remedies are not cumulative. With great respect I am unable to follow the reasoning of Sadhu Krishnh Ayyar v. Kuppan Ayyangar (1). When a specific remedy with a particular limited period of limitation is granted, a party must avail himself of it and cannot make it a ground of appeal under the general provision granting him a right of appeal from an ex parte decree. If the view of the Madras High Court in the Full Bench decision is accepted the intention of the Code would be frustrated. It appears to be the intention of the Code that the Court which passed the ex parte decree should first decide and give its reasons why such an order was passed. If the point is not raised under r. 13 but is raised in general appeal the burden of discovering reasons for an ex parte order will be thrown on the Appellate Court which would not be possessed of the knowledge of the Trial Court. The appeal of the defendant No. 5 must, therefore, fail because no argument is advanced on the merits. The question as to costs of the lower Courts shall be considered later.

Coming next to the appeal by the defendant No. 3 the circumstances will be found to be different. As already pointed out he applied under r. 7 and his application was dismissed. There is no appeal allowed from the dismissal of such an application and the order can only be attacked in appeal. It was argued on behalf of the respondents that the defendant No. 3 ought again to have applied r. 13 when the ex parte decree was passed and that as he failed to do so his case was similar to that of defendant No. 5. A ruling of the Madras High Court in Sankaralinga Mudali v. Ratnasabhapati Mudali (6) was quoted. It was passed prior to enactment of the present C. P. C. but substituting the corresponding sections, what a Bench of the Madras High Court held was that the dismissal of an application under r. 7 did not take away from that party his right to apply under r. 13. This, however, is not an authority for the proposition that where an application is dismissed under r. 7 the party was bound to take proceedings under r. 13 which would in the nature of things be futile as the Trial Court had already considered the question and come to the conclusion that its ex parte order was correct. In my opinion the case will be governed by the observations of the learned Judge who decided the case of Jadu Nath Basak v. Ram Narayan (3). There an application for adjournment was refused by the Trial Court whereupon the Pleader of that party absented himself and an ex parte decree was passed. The learned Judge was prepared to consider whether this order was on the face of it one which the Trial Court ought not to have passed. The present case is similar. The refusel to set aside an ex parte order during the trial was an interlocutory order which can be brought to the test as to its justification in appeal. If this Court does not agree with the Trial Court as to the rejection of the application of r. 7 the ex parte decree will fail in consequence and the suit will have to be re-tried. The reasoning would not apply here that the defendant has failed to avail himself of another remedy granted to him under the law because there is no appeal from an order under r. 7. My opinion, therefore, is that defendant No. 3 can be permitted to argue in this appeal that the order of the 28th of February 1923 refusing his prayer for an order ex parte to be set aside was unjustified.

His learned Counsel argued that the mere application was sufficient to entitle him to have the order set aside. In support of this argument he quoted Mannu v. Tulshi (7) and Bhagwat Prasad Tewari v. Muhammad Shibli (8). I do not think that the rulings go so far. What was held there was that the Trial Court in each case ought to have exercised its discretion in favour of the person who applied for the ex parte order to be set aside. Every case will, therefore, depend upon its own circumstances and the Appellate Court must decide on the evidence in this case whether the order of 28th February 1923 passed by the Trial Court was justified or not. I have examined the circumstances of the case and I am satisfied that the order was just. It may be mentioned that in a few days will arrive the 3rd birth day of this suit. Obviously it has been pending long enough. The suit was instituted on the 18th November 1921 and the defendant No. 3 failed to turn up at a hearing on 15th January 1923. On the previous date of 19th December 1922 he had obtained an adjournment on the ground that a compromise between him and the plaintiff was probable. On the 15th January he did not appear to advise the Court as to what had been done. It was argued that 15th January was a date fixed for a particular purpose and, therefore, no ex parte order should have been recorded on that date. This is entirely a misapprehension of the proceedings of the Trial Court. The reasoning of Debi Sahai v. Saraswati (9) has no application here. The Court in case of a compromise failing was prepared to go on with the trial on 15th January and every party was under an obligation to be present on that date. The date was fixed for proceedings and the Court could take no action as to fixing of future dates if parties were permitted to absent themselves on such a date with impunity. The progress of the suit depended on orders to be passed on 15th January 1923. So it cannot be said that a date was fixed merely to record a proceeding whether there had been a compromise or not. The defendant No. 3 himself did not plead that he absented himself for the reason that the date was fixed for a particular purpose and his presence was not necessary. He made a false excuse that he was looking after the case of a friend. His obvious desire was to lengthen out the proceedings and maintain possession of the property as long as he possibly could. It will be contrary to reasons to believe that the defendant if he had a real desire to prosecute his decree would have gone away elsewhere to look after the case of his friend in which he was in no way interested. When a party is guilty of such negligent conduct 14 months after the institution of the suit he deserves no indulgence. I hold that the order of the 28th February 1923 was rightly passed. The appeal of defendant No. 3 also must fail except as regards costs which I now proceed to consider.

The Trial Court did not see its decree being properly prepared. Defendant No. 2 who owned the main portion of the property compromised with the plaintiff and yet the entire cost of the suit was thrown on the other defendants. The value of the property was Rs. 4,150 while the defendants Nos. 3 and 5 were together interested in property of the value of Rs. 200. There is also the fee of the Commissioner Rs. 30 made payable by the defendant when nothing came out of the appointment of the Commissioner to oblige the plaintiff. It is not known what the value of the property in possession of defendants Nos. 2 and 4 is. The decree shall, therefore, be amended as regards defendants Nos. 3 and 5 only as to costs. The Commissioner's fee Rs. 30 shall be cut out and the Pleader's fee Rs. 200 reduced to Rs. 2-8-0. The plaintiff had to produce witnesses even in an ex parte trial so the costs of the diet, etc., of the witnesses shall be maintained. The Court fee shall be reduced to Rs. 15. The other costs shall be maintained. So far as to the amendment of the First Court's decree which shall affect only defendants Nos. 3 and 5.

As regards the cost of the lower Appellate Court the objection made as to full fee of the respondent's Counsel is not sound. The vakalatnama was filed on 21st September while the case was ready for actual hearing on 22nd October. On 22nd October prior to the hearing of arguments the certificate was filed by Counsel. There is no force in the contention that only half fee should have been allowed.

The decree of the Trial Court shall be amended as directed above; otherwise the appeal is dismissed. The appellants shall pay the costs of the plaintiffs-respondents because the decree could have been amended by an application to the Trial Court and there was no need to come up here for such a purpose.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XXXIV, r. 5—Mortgage suit—Preliminary decree—Application for final decree, dismissal of, for default, legality of—Inherent power of Court to rectify mistake.

A preliminary decree for sale on foot of a mortgage was passed in favour of the appellant and as the judgment-debtor failed to make the payment directed by the decree the appellant made an application to the Court to pass a final decree. Notice was issued to the judgment-debtor and when the case was ripe the appellant happened to be absent, and the Court passed an order dismissing the suit in default. The appellant thereupon made an application pointing out that as nothing further remained to be done by him, the Court should not have dismissed the suit in default but should have proceeded to pass a final decree. The judgment-debtor objected that this last application made by the appellant must be treated as a fresh application for the passing of a final decree and that as it was barred by time it should be dismissed:

Held, that the order passed by the Court dismissing the suit for default of the decree-holder owing to his absence was erroneous, and that the Court had inherent power to rectify its own mistake by setting aside that order and by proceeding to pass a final decree on the original application of the decree-holder which must be regarded as still pending.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 28th November 1922.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question of some importance and is accordingly laid before a Bench of two Judges.

Briefly the facts are these. A preliminary decree for sale was passed in favour of the appellant and one Dina Nath on the 31st of January 1911. The appellant purchased the share of Dina Nath in the decree and on the 2nd of January 1914, well within three years of the passing of the preliminary decree, applied to the Court to pass a final decree. Notices were issued to the judgment-debtors and to Dina Nath who had been made an opposite party to the application and the case was adjourned from time to time. On the 17th of July 1915 when the case was ripe, the appellant happened to be absent. The defendants never appeared. In the absence of the parties, the learned Subordinate Judge passed an order which, though ambiguous, has been treated as amounting to an order dismissing the suit for default. On the 28th of September 1916 the appellant put in an application before the learned Subordinate Judge reciting all the previous history of the case and asking that his application dated the 2nd of January 1914 might be revived and a final decree might be passed. He mentioned pointedly that the order of the 17th of July 1915 was one which should not have been passed. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted the petition and passed by an ex parte order a final decree for sale.

At the instance of some of the defendants the ex parte final decree was set aside and the previous application dated the 28th of September 1916 was restored.

When the application dated the 28th of September 1916 came to be heard it was urged on behalf of the defendants that it was a fresh application and that it was barred by time.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the order dated the 17th of July 1915 was an order which the Court ought not to have passed. He pointed out that under the law, namely, the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 5 of the C. P. C., nothing further was needed to be done by the plaintiff, the appellant before us. The decretal amount had not been paid into Court and the plaintiff had done all that could be done by him, namely, that he had put in an application before the Court asking it to pass a final decree. The learned Judge, under the circumstances, thought that he was justified, nay it was his duty, to rectify his own mistake (possibly his predecessor's mistake) and he dismissed the objection of the judgment-debtors and passed a final decree for sale.

An appeal was taken to the learned District Judge who accepted it and dismissed the application of the appellant for the preparation of the final decree.

Hence this second appeal.

It has been urged for the respondent that the Court of first instance was not right in saying that on the 17th of July 1915 the appellant had nothing further to do in the case. It was stated that he had to prove the assignment. Assuming that this argument is correct all that was wanting was the proof as to the assignment; but that did not give the Court any right to dismiss the application in toto. It could have only said that it would pass a final decree for sale in favour of both the appellant and Dina Nath. This argument, therefore, does not find favour with us.

Now the question is whether the judgment of the Court of first instance was right. It is clear that if we treat the application of the 28th of September 1916 as a fresh application it would be time-barred. If we treat it as an application for review of judgment it would still be time-barred unless we apply s. 5 of the Limitation Act to the case. On the other hand, there is no bar to the Court exercising its inherent authority under s. 151 of the C. P. C. and rectifying its own mistake. This is exactly what the Court of first instance purported to do.

The Privy Council in the case of Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (1) laid down, under the following circumstances, that even apart from s. 151 of the C. P. C. the Court possessed an inherent power to rectify the mistake which had been inadvertently committed by itself. In the case before the Privy Council the plaintiff had died and the suit was dismissed for default, in ignorance of the fact of the death. The legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff made an application to be brought on the record. It is clear that no suit was pending and an application for substitution of names could not be made where there was no suit pending. An application for restoration of the suit would have been time barred. Yet, the Privy Council had no hesitation in saying that, in the circumstances of the case, the Court was bound to correct its own error.

The case before us is different in facts, but the same principle, as has been laid down by the Privy Council, is applicable. As already pointed out, the case was ripe on the 17th of July 1915. Rule 5 of O. XXXIV of the C. P. C. requires only this much of the plaintiff that he shall tell the Court that a final decree for sale has to be prepared. In the case of the defendant paying up the decretal amount it is not even necessary for him to say to the Court that a final decree, discharging the mortgage, has to be passed in his favour. The plaintiff, however, is required to make an application and that application he did make. If, therefore, nothing remained to be done by the plaintiff the Court's duty it was to pass a final decree for sale. The Court has rectified its own mistake and we do not think that there is any real grievance to the defendants.

We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Court of first instance. The appellant will have his costs in this Court and in the Court below, which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

FACTS.—On January 6, 1920, the N. Mills at Sholapur drew a hundi for Rs. 1,500 upon one U. at Bombay in favour of one T. D. T. D. endorsed the hundi to one S. at Hyderabad and posted it to him. The hundi, however, got into the hands of a stranger and then to one N. who presented it for payment to U, and received the money. The hundi was found to have the following three endorsements on it:

(1) "Hundi sold (by) Devanappa Jivanappa Mahajan to Sardarmal Suganmal by the hand of Tatya Mahajan."

(2) "Hundi sold (by) Sardarmal Suganmal to Lachhiram Ganeshlal."

(3) "Hundi sold (to) Nathmal Chunilal by Lachhiram Ganeshlal."

It appeared that the first endorsement was by T. D. but the other two were forged.

After posting the hundi T. D. advised S. about it and on January 8, 1920, S. sent a telegram stating that he had not received it. The plaintiff then sent a duplicate to S. who forwarded it to U. but U. refused payment alleging that he had already paid the amount. S. informed T. D. about it and demanded payment from him. Thereupon T. D. brought the present suit against U. and N. Subsequently he applied to join S. also as a defendant and was allowed to do so. The main point in issue was whether the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the suit against the defendants.

Mr. Mehta, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Setalvad and Lalji, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—[After stating the facts of the case His Lordship proceeded as follows:—]

The suit came on for hearing before me on March 28, 1923, and again on April 3, 1923, for a few hours on each day. On March 28, Counsel for the plaintiffs read out the evidence recorded in the case. Counsel for the 2nd defendant then addressed the Court. Counsel for the 1st defendant followed him. Though the 2nd defendant filed a long written statement, he did not give any evidence in the case. Such being the case, it is difficult to say under what circumstances the hundi passed into his hands and whether he played any part in this nefarious affair. Nor was any evidence led on behalf of the 1st defendant. On April 3, at the close of the address of Counsel for the 1st defendant, Mr. Lalji, who had already addressed the Court on behalf of the 2nd defendant applied that the plaintiff may be re-called to give him an opportunity to cross-examine him as to whether the 3rd defendant had given any authority to the plaintiff, express or implied, to remit the money due by the plaintiff to the 3rd defendant by a hundi. The plaintiff, who resides and carries on business at Hyderabad, was in Bombay on March 29, but he left Bombay after that date, and he was not in Bombay on April 3. I refused the application. The 1st and 2nd defendants had every opportunity of cross-examining the plaintiff when he gave his evidence before Kanga, J., on November 18, 1921. On that day the plaintiff was cross-examined by Counsel for the 1st defendant but he was not cross-examined at all by Counsel for the second defendant.

Upon these facts the question arises whether the 1st and 2nd defendants or either of them is liable to the plaintiff. It is well-established that if a party primarily liable on a negotiable instrument pays the amount thereof to a wrong person, who holds it under a forged indorsement, he remains liable to the true owner. The only exception to this is where the payee's indorsement on a cheque payable to order is forged. In such a case it is provided by s. 85 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, that the drawee is discharged if he pays the amount in due course. No holder of a negotiable instrument, though he may be a holder in due course, can acquire a title to the instrument through a forged indorsement. Section 58 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, which protects a holder in due course where a negotiable instrument has been obtained by means of an offence, does not apply to a case of forgery. Hunsraj Purmanand v. Ruttonji Walji (1), Jai Narain v. Mahbub Bakhsh (2) and Banku Behari Sikdar v. Secretary of State for India (3). Such being the case the 1st defendant is clearly iallbe to the true owner for the amount of the hundi.

The 2nd defendant is also liable to pay the amount of the hundi to the true owner. In the case of goods, if a man takes and sells them when he has no right the owner may waive the tort and recover the proceeds in an action for money had and received. And equally if a person wrongfully convert a bill and receive the amount the owner of the bill may either sue in tort or may waive the tort and recover the money as received to his use. The 2nd defendant who came into possession of the hundi through forged indorsements took no property in the hundi. What was done by him amounted to a conversion of the hundi, and the proceeds of the hundi received by him are the moneys of the true owner: Arnold v. Cheque Bank (4) and Hilbut v. Nevill (5).

The next question is, who was the true owner of the hundi at the date of suit? It is contended on behalf of the 1st and 2nd defendants that the true owner of the hundi at the date of suit was the third defendant, and not the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff, therefore, is not entitled to maintain this suit. Now it is elementary law that in order to make the property in a bill pass it is not sufficient to indorse it, it must be delivered to the indorsee. Such delivery, as enacted in s. 46 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, may be actual or constructive. Counsel for the defendants contended that by the Regulations of the Indian Post Office a letter once posted cannot be reclaimed, and since the plaintiff had not only indorsed the hundi to the 3rd defendant, but posted the letter enclosing the hundi to him, the property in the hundi passed to the 3rd defendant, and he alone, therefore, was entitled to sue. Reliance was placed in support of this contention on Ex parte Cote (6).

The authorities go to show that the post office is the agent of the person to whom the bill or note is posted if there be express or implied authority to send by post, but if there be no such authority the post office is the agent of the sender?—See Chalmers Bills of Exchange, 8th Edn., p. 61; Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. II, p. 481. In Ex parte Cote (6) Mellish, L. J., said:—

"In this country, where the sender of a letter cannot get it returned after it has been posted, if the indorsee of a bill authorises the indorser to send the bill through the post office, the bill as soon as it is posted becomes the property of the indorsee."

In that case the authority to send the bills by post was implied from the course of dealings between the parties, but as by the rules of the French Post Office a letter though posted, could be reclaimed before it was despatched from the office where it was posted, it was held that the property in the bills which were posted from Lyons and claimed back by the indorsor did not pass to the indorsee. In Norman v. Ricketts (7) the plaintiffs wrote from London to the defendant in Suffolk asking her to send a cheque for money due by her. The defendants sent by post a cheque for the amount due. The cheque was stolen in transit, and the thief got it cashed. It was held that the posting was a good delivery to the payee, and the cheque operated as payment. This is a case of express authority to send by post. This case was followed in Thairlwall v. Great Northern Railway (8) which was a case of a dividend warrant sent by the defendant Company to the plaintiff.

The warrant was lost in the post. In a suit to recover the dividend it was held that the posting of the warrant operated as payment. In the course of his judgment Lord Coleridge, J., said :—

"The real question is whether the posting of the warrant was payment of the amount of the dividend. To establish that it was, the defendants must prove a request by the plaintiff or an agreement between the plaintiff and defendants that payment should be made by means of the warrant posted to the plaintiff."

In the present case the 1st and 2nd defendants contend that the property in the hundi passed to the 3rd defendant immediately it was endorsed and posted. The 1st and 2nd defendants must therefore, show that there was an authority, express or implied, from the 3rd defendant to the plaintiff to send the hundi by post. It is not suggested that there was any express authority. Nor is there any evidence on record of implied authority. There was, therefore, no delivery to the 3rd defendant, and the negotiation of the hundi to him was not completed. The property in the hundi never in fact passed out of the plaintiff, and it remained his property when it reached the hands of the 1st and 2nd defendants. Moreover, the 3rd defendant never claimed any property in the hundi. On the contrary, he enforced his claim by a suit against the plaintiff in the Residency Court.

I, therefore, hold that the property in the hundi was in the plaintiff at the date of suit, and pass judgment against the 1st and 2nd defendants for Rs. 1,500, costs including costs of commission and costs reserved, and interest on judgment at six per cent. per annum.

Plaintiff's attorneys to be at liberty to withdraw Rs. 800 being the amount deposited by the plaintiff as security for the costs of the 1st defendant after the expiration of the period of appeal.

CHAIRMAN, HOWRAH MUNICIPALITY AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Calcutta Municipality Act (III of 1899), s. 228, construction of—Rate assessed on building and land, whether charge on holding—Interpretation of Statutes.

In the interpretation of a Statute it is sometimes necessary to read the conjunctions "or" and "and", one for the other. [p. 230, col. 1.]

The policy of s. 228 of the Calcutta Municipal Act is to make the holding primarily responsible for the rates assessed on it. When the Act speaks of the rates on any building or land it includes a tax which has been assessed on the land and the house taken together. The expression "building or land" in the section includes the case of a rate assessed on a building and land and arrears of such rate become a charge on the land and the house. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the Chairman of the Municipality of Howrah sued the appellant for the recovery of Rs. 100-6-6 being the Municipal Tax of a certain holding No. 25-1, Courys Road, defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were made defendants on the ground that they had acquired a right on the property and that they were in possession. The defendants raised various defences that it is not necessary now to set out in detail. The learned Munsif decreed the suit in the following terms :—

"Ordered that a decree be made for the full amount claimed and the costs, declaring that the sum be a first charge on the holding and the building and the moveable property to be found on the land subject to the prior payment of the land revenue if any due, on the land directing the defendants to pay the decretal amount and costs within a month from this date, in default of which the land and the building and the moveables to be found on the land will be sold for the arrears so decreed with costs."

The defendants appealed to the District Court. That Court dismissed the appeal with costs. Defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court. He contends that s. 228 has no application to the present case and that, therefore, no decree can be made against the property.

His argument is as follows :—

The rate has been assessed on the holding and house under s. 104 of the Bengal Municipal Act at a consolidated rate. Section 228 of the Calcutta Municipal Act which has been made applicable to the Municipality of Howrah provides that the consolidated rate due in respect of any building or land shall subject to the prior payment of the land revenue due, if any, be a first charge on the land or building etc.

The rate in the present case has been assessed on the house and land. Section 228 speaks of any building or house. Therefore, it does not contemplate a consolidated rate assessed on the house and the land. You cannot read "and" for "or" in the section.

We are not prepared to put on the section the limited meaning that the appellant will ask us to do.

Maxwell in Interpretation of Statutes has pointed out that it is sometimes necessary to read the conjunctions 'or' and 'and' one for the other.

The policy of the Act would seem to be to make the holding primarily responsible for the rates assessed on it. When the Act speaks of the rates on any building or land it seems to us that it would be straining the words of the section to say that it did not refer to the tax which had been assessed on the land and the house taken together.

The expression building or land in s. 228, we think, includes the case of a rate assessed on a building and land and that such an arrear of rate becomes a charge on the land and house.

The decision of the lower Courts is, therefore, right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree

Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 34—Trust property—Court, whether can sanction sale—Bombay High Court—Extraordinary Civil jurisdiction—Order sanctioning sale, when can be challenged—Marketable title—Vendor, duty of—Vendee, when can repudiate contract.

Section 34 of the Trusts Act does not enable the Court to sanction a sale of the trust property by trustees when no power of sale is given by the trust deed. [p 232, col. 2.]

The High Court of Bombay has Extraordinary Civil Jurisdiction to sanction a sale by trustees of property vested in them. [ibid.]

The title which the vendor must show must be a title in himself, or in those whom he has a legal or equitable right to require to join in the conveyance: he has no right to say that some other person is willing to enter into a contract, and to force the title of that other person on the purchaser. [p. 234, col. 1.]

When a person sells property which he is neither able to convey himself nor has the power to compel a conveyance of it from any other person, the purchaser, as soon as he finds that to be the case, may repudiate the contract. [p. 234, cols. 1 & 2.]

This right of repudiation must be distinguished from the common law right of rescission, and arises out of that want of mutuality which, unless waived, is generally fatal to relief by way of specific performance. But the right must be exercised, if it is to be exercised at all, as soon as the defect is ascertained. If, after ascertaining the defect, the purchaser still treats the contract as subsisting, he does not retain the right to repudiate at any subsequent moment he may choose. [p. 234, col. 2.]

FACTS.—The property in suit belonged to two brothers, A. F. and L. P. De Souza as tenants-in-common with equal shares. A. F. died in 1904 leaving a Will, Probate whereof was granted to his son, plaintiff No. 1, as sole executor. On obtaining Probate the son conveyed a moiety of the property for himself and his brother, plaintiff No. 3, in accordance with the terms of the Will. L. P. died on December 24, 1899, leaving a widow, a grandson by a predeceased daughter and a grand-daughter by a predeceased son. He also left a Will, Probate whereof was granted to the second defendant and one D. As a result of the administration of the estate of L. the second defendant ceased to hold a moiety of the said property as executor but continued to hold it as trustee.

On March 27, 1922, the plaintiff agreed to sell the property to the first defendant and received Rs. 10,000 as earnest money. It was agreed to complete the purchase on 31st May 1922. The plaintiffs were to deduce a marketable title free from all reasonable doubts and were to get in all outstanding estates and clear all encumbrances at their own costs. On the date of the agreement of sale, half the property was vested in plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 3, and the other half in defendant No. 2 as trustees of the Will of L. P. Plaintiffs Nos. 5 and 6 had no power to sell the moiety which belonged to L. P. which was vested in defendant No. 2 subject to the trustees of the Will, but he too had no power to sell it and he was not a party to the agreement.

On these facts coming to the notice of the plaintiffs, a long correspondence ensued between the parties and eventually the first defendant wrote to the plaintiffs on the 31st August 1922, purporting to put an end to the agreement. Thereupon the plaintiffs informed the first defendant that they were applying for an order of the Court and in reply the first defendant informed the plaintiffs on the 14th September that he was prepared to give them time up to the 15th October and that time was of the essence of contract. On October 13, defendant No. 2 put in a petition praying for leave to sell the half share of L. P. in the property vested in him under the Will, and the learned Judge made an order to that effect the same day. After the order the plaintiff's Attorneys wrote to defendant No. 1 asking for a draft conveyance but the defendant questioned the sufficiency of the order and the Court's jurisdiction to make it, and after some correspondence on the point between the parties, the plaintiffs filed a suit for the determination of the question whether they had made out a marketable title to the property free from all reasonable doubts and took out an originating summons for that purpose.

JUDGMENT.—[After stating the facts of the case his Lordship went on:—] The question arises whether the plaintiffs have made out a marketable title to the property. The first defendant contends that they have not, and on his behalf the following points have been raised, namely,—

(1) that the order does not in fact empower the second defendant to sell the moiety vested in him;

(2) that even if it does, it was obtained by underhand dealing on the part of the second defendant;

(3) that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order; and

(4) that the first defendant contracted with the plaintiffs on the footing that they were absolute owners, and the plaintiffs could not force on him a title different to that which he agreed to take.

I shall deal with these points in order.

The first point is that the order does not authorise the second defendant to sell the moiety vested in him. I think it does. The agreement was for the sale of the whole property, not merely of the interests of the first and third plaintiffs and the fifth and sixth plaintiffs. What was sanctioned was the sale of the whole property. One moiety was vested in the first and the third plaintiffs and the other in the second defendant. That being so, the order empowered the second defendant execute or join in the conveyance of the property. It was argued that "to execute" means "to sign." I think that what the second defendant was empowered to do was to sell the moiety vested in him and to convey it by the deed of conveyance. This is put beyond all doubt by the second part of the order by which it is provided that the second defendant should hand over the nett sale proceeds of the half share of Lawrence DeSouza to the Accountant General of Bombay. It appears from the plaintiffs' letter of October 23 that this direction did not appear in the order originally submitted to the learned Judge, but that he ordered that direction to be added in the order. If the order did not empower the second defendant to sell the moiety vested in him, the direction for handing over "the nett sale proceeds of the half share of the said Lawrence De Souza" would be meaningless. The order is not artistically drawn, but its meaning is plain.

The next point taken on behalf of the first defendant was that the order was obtained by underhand dealing on the part of the second defendant, in that the petition did not even refer to the agreement for sale or mention the fact that there were minor beneficiaries. It was also said that the agreement could not have been before the learned Judge as it was not put in evidence. Now it is not correct to say that the petition does not state that there were minor beneficiaries. Paragraph 10 of the petition expressly mentions this fact. Immediately this fact was brought to the notice of Counsel for the second defendant, he withdrew the charge of underhand dealing to that extent. As regards the other charge it is true that the petition does not refer specifically to the agreement, but the agreement is thrice referred to in the order, and it is impossible to believe that the order was made without the learned Judge having the agreement before him. It is true also that the agreement was not put in evidence, but it is not the practice to do so on applications of this nature. Before the order was obtained the Attorneys for the plaintiffs sent a copy of the petition to the Attorneys for the first defendant with their letter of October 11, 1922, and gave them notice that they would apply for the order. The first defendant did not appear before the Chamber Judge when the order was made. Such being the facts, the charge of underhand dealing ought never to have been made.

The third point is one of jurisdiction. The petition was presented to the Court in the exercise of its Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. It was headed: "In the matter of the Indian Trusts Act II of 1882, and in the matter of the trusts created by the Will of Lawrence De Souza." I do not think that the order was made under the Indian Trusts Act, nor was it seriously contended that it was. The only section of that Act that could possibly be referred to in this connection would be s. 34. That section provides that a trustee may apply by petition to a principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction for its opinion, advice or direction on any present questions respecting the administration of the trust property. I do not think that this section enables the Court to sanction a sale of the trust property by trustees where no power of sale is given by the trust deed. I think that the order was made under the Extraordinary Civil Jurisdiction of the Court.

That the High Court of Bombay has this jurisdiction is beyond all doubt. This jurisdiction was recognised in In re Manilal Hargovan (1), where Sir Lawrence Jenkins sanctioned the sale of a minor's interest in Hindu joint family property. It was also recognised in In re Shirinbai (2), where Marten, J., sanctioned a sale by trustees of immoveable property vested in them. But this jurisdiction is of an extremely delicate character and has to be exercised with the greatest caution. "The principle," as observed by Romer, L. J., in In re New (3), "seems to be this—that the Court may, on an emergency, do something not authorised by the trust. It has no general power to interfere with or disregard the trust; but there are cases where the Court has gone beyond the express provisions of the trust instrument—cases of emergency, cases not foreseen or provided for by the author of the trust, where the circumstances require that something should be done." But the Court will not in the exercise of its Extraordinary Jurisdiction sanction an unauthorised change of investment proposed on the mere ground that it will be to the advantage of the beneficiaries. In re, Tollemache (4).

These cases, it must be observed, are cases of change of investment, the principle being that the Court will not sanction an unauthorised change of investment except in cases of emergency. Kemp, J., treated the case as one of emergency, and he passed the order. He had the jurisdiction to make the order, and he made it. That being so, it seems to me that the order cannot be challenged except on the ground of "fraud or underhand dealing." Gangapershad Sahu v. Maharani Bibi (5). Neither of these two elements is present in this case.

But it was urged for the first defendant that the originating summons in the present case could not be distinguished from a suit for specific performance, and that a Court trying such a suit was entitled, in cases of title, to determine for itself whether the title was marketable, though the question of title might have been adjudicated upon in a previous suit. On the analogy of this principle it was urged that it was competent to me to go behind the order of Kemp, J., and determine whether the order was a right order to make on the facts of the case. Counsel for the first defendant also argued that the facts of the case were not such as gave jurisdiction to the Court to make the order. I proceed to examine these facts.

The said property was purchased by the two brothers in 1886. Part thereof was used by them for the business which they carried on as coach-builders and the rest was let out to tenants. Clause 2 of the Will of Lawrence is as follows:—

"I have my partnership business of coach-builders wherein my brother A. F. De Souza is my partner. The immoveable property in which the business is carried on is also partnership property. The said business has large debts which must be paid as soon as possible. If considered necessary by the executors, the business or property or both might be sold."

The first part of para. 12 of the petition is as follows :

"The said coach factory business has ceased to be paying owing to increase in product and use of motor cars in India."

Clause (b) of para. 12 of the petition is as follows :

"The said two sons of A. F. De Souza (first and third plaintiffs) are now getting old and want to close the coach building business and return to Goa in their native place. They are anxious to get their shares forthwith and if no steps are taken by the petitioners to help in such realization by applying to the Honorable Court for the necessary sanction for the sale, the petitioners apprehend that the two sons of A. F. De Souza will file a suit for partition and there might be a litigation and even the present price may not be realized at a forced sale in such partition suit."

It was not suggested at the argument of the summons before me that the facts stated in para. 12 of the petition were not correct.

These then were the facts before Kemp, J., when he made the order. It was not as if the testator never contemplated a sale of his half share, for by cl. 2 of his Will he gave an express power to his executors to sell it if they thought it necessary. Moreover, if a suit for partition were instituted by the first and third plaintiffs, it is almost certain that if all the parties had applied for an order for sale, the Court would have made the order. A sale, therefore, was inevitable, and a change of investment was bound to take place. The question before Kemp, J., was whether it should be left to take place under a decree in a partition suit or whether it could be effected by an order of the Court in the exercise of its Extraordinary Jurisdiction. There would have been obvious injury to the beneficiaries if a sale was to take place under a decree of the Court, for at a Court sale the property would hardly have realised the price offered by the first defendant. Having regard to the special facts of the case, I am not prepared to say that Kemp, J., acted beyond his jurisdiction in making the order which he did, or that the order is otherwise invalid. I am not sure whether, when an express power of sale is given to an executor to be exercised by him when he thought it necessary, it ceases to operate when the executor on a complete administration of the estate ceases to be an executor. It was assumed throughout the argument that it does, and I have proceeded on that assumption.

The last point urged on behalf of the first defendant was that he contracted with the plaintiffs on the footing that they were absolute owners, and that the plaintiffs could not force upon him a title different to that he agreed to take. When the summons was first argued before me, Counsel for the first defendant stated that his client was quite prepared to complete the sale if only the title was marketable. The above objection to title was taken for the first time when I invited further argument on the summons on April 6.

(5) 12 I. A. 47 at p. 50; 11 C. 379; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 621; 9 Ind. Jur. 158; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1012 (P. C.).

The objection raised is inconsistent with the readiness and willingness of the first defendant to complete the transaction. The first defendant, however, is entitled to take the point, and I proceed to consider it.

The first defendant, it may be observed, is an Attorney of this Court. There is no evidence to show whether the agreement was drafted by him or by his partner who has attested it. Clause 5 of the agreement for sale provides for the execution of the conveyance by "the vendors and all other necessary parties." Clause 6 of the agreement provides that "if any documents or orders of the Court are required to be obtained by the vendors for the clearance of the title or for the completion of their title to sell the costs thereof shall be paid by the vendors alone." It may be observed that the words "orders of the Court" do not occur in all agreements for sale of land. They are added only when there are minors or other persons under disability. I think those words were deliberately inserted in the agreement for sale to provide for the costs of the order empowering the second defendant to sell the moiety vested in him. It so appears also from the correspondence annexed to the plaint and put in evidence by Counsel for the first defendant. If that be so, it cannot be said that the plaintiffs are forcing a new contract on the first defendant or are substituting a new vendor. But even if they are, the conduct of the first defendant as disclosed by the correspondence is a complete answer to that contention.

It seems to be settled law that the title which the vendor must show must be a title in himself, or in those whom he has a legal or equitable right to require to join in the conveyance; he has no right to say that some other person is willing to enter into a contract, and to force the title of that other person on the purchaser: In re Bryant and Barningham (6), In re Head's Trustees and Macdonald (7). When a person sells property which he is neither able to convey himself nor has the power to compel a conveyance of it from any other person, the purchaser, as soon as he finds that to be the case, may say, "I will have nothing to do with it," and he may repudiate the contract: Forrer v. Nash (8). This right of repudiation must be distinguished from the common law right of rescission, and arises out of that want of mutuality which, unless waived, is generally fatal to relief by way of specific performance. But the right must be exercised, if it is to be exercised at all, as soon as the defect is ascertained. If, after ascertaining the defect, the purchaser still treats the contract as subsisting, he does not retain the right to repudiate at any subsequent moment he may choose: Halkett v. Dudley (Earl) (9). Now assuming that the first defendant was entitled, immediately he came to know of the defect, to repudiate the contract, was such right exercised, or did he still continue to treat the contract as in operation? The answer is furnished by the correspondence. The correspondence leaves no doubt that at the date of said order the first defendant still continued to treat the contract as subsisting. For though by his Attorneys' letter of August 31, 1922, he purported to put an end to the agreement, he gave further time to the plaintiffs by his Attorneys' letter of Septemher 14, after the plaintiffs wrote to him stating that the petition was ready and that they would apply for an order immediately after they received the petition duly declared by the second defendant who was then at Karachi. The following is the material portion of the letter of September 14:—

"We do not agree with you that our client has no right to put an end to the contract as he has done. Without prejudice to the aforesaid contention and our client's right to terminate the contract as he has done, we are instructed, in order to leave no ground for complaint to your clients, to give them time up to the 15th proximo to make out a complete and marketable title to the property on the distinct understanding that the said date would be of the essence of the proposal, and if by that date the title is not made out, our client will not be bound to wait any longer and will be deemed to have terminated the contract."

The order was made on October 13, and the plaintiffs informed the first defendant about it, and asked for a draft conveyance.

On October 17, the first defendant's Attorneys wrote to the plaintiffs' Attorneys requesting information on certain points, namely, under what section of the Indian Trusts Act the order was made, and whether certain letters of theirs were brought to the notice of the Court. The plaintiffs' Attorneys replied stating that the order was made in the exercise of the Extraordinary Jurisdiction of the Court. The first defendant's Attorneys then enquired whether any cases in support of the application were brought to the notice of the learned Judge who made the order. The plaintiffs replied stating that the order having been made, the first defendant was bound to complete and there the correspondence ended. It is clear that the enquiry which the first defendant made from time to time would have been useless if the contract had been effectually repudiated: Halkett v. Dudley (Earl) (9). I, therefore, hold that the first defendant is now precluded from setting up the original want of mutuality in the contract.

All objections to title raised by the first defendant fail. The title, I hold, is marketable and it is free from reasonable doubt.

The first question is answered in the affirmative. Defendant No. 1 to pay plaintiffs' costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 303 OF 1923.

February 19, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mukerji and Mr. Justice Boys.

BANSIDHAR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Musammat DULHATIA AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, Expl. VI—Hindu Law—Alienation by widow—Suit by reversioner—Subseqnent suit by another reversioner, whether maintainable—Res judicata.

The reason of allowing a reversioner to challenge an alienation by a Hindu widow in the lifetime of the widow is that the reversioner sues not on his own behalf but on behalf of the entire body of reversioners, or the persons who would be the actual reversioners on the death of the widow. In other words, such a suit by a reversioner comes within the purview of Expl. VI to s. 11 of the C. P. C., and the decision in such a suit is binding on the entire body of reversioners. [p. 236, col. 1.]

Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheo Pargash Ojha, 64 Ind. Cas. 248; 19 A. L. J. 749; 3 U. P. L. R. (A.) 117; 44 A. 19; (1922) A. I. R. (A.) 301, followed.

A reversioner of a deceased Hindu brought a suit to challenge an alienation effected by the widow of the deceased. It was held that a portion of the property alienated had become the absolute property of the widow by adverse possession and the suit was decreed with regard to the rest of the property. Subsequently another reversioner brought another suit to challenge the same alienation on the same grounds on which it was challenged in the previous suit:

Held, that the suit was barred by res judicata and the mere fact that the widow was holding a portion of the property in dispute not as a representative of her husband but in her own right was immaterial. [p. 237, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Banda, dated the 16th December 1922.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is whether a former decision given against Sheo Mangal, a brother of the plaintiff, operates as res judicata or not.

The Courts below have held that it does operate as res judicata as regards a portion of the property in suit.

Briefly the facts are these:—

Ganesh Din was the owner of the property in suit. On his death a part of the property was recorded as held by his widow although his son Ram Partab survived him. After the death of Ram Partab the property which recorded in his name, being a portion of his father's property, was recorded in the names of his mother and a pre-deceased brother's widow. The mother of Ram Partab executed a deed of gift in favour of her daughter-in-law and this gave rise to the suit which was brought by Sheo Mangal.

Sheo Mangal sued as a possible reversioner to the estate and his case was that Musammat Dulhatia, the wife of Ganesh Din, was in possession of the property as a Hindu widow and had no right to execute a gift.

The defence, inter alia, was that the widow held adversely to the estate of Ganesh Din and had matured in herself an absolute title and was, therefore, competent to execute the deed of gift. This defence succeeded in respect of that portion of the property which had been recorded in Musammat Dulhatia's name on the death of Ganesh Din. The suit succeeded in respect of that portion of the property which came to be recorded in the name of Musammat Dulhatia on the death of her son.

After the failure of Sheo Mangal, his brother Bansidhar started a fresh campaign of litigation on practically the same allegations as had been made by Sheo Mangal.

As stated above the question is whether the decree in Sheo Mangal's suit should or should not be treated as concluding Bansidhar's suit.

It has been conceded that this High Court in the case of Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheo Pragash Ojha (1) held that the justification of allowing a reversioner to sue in the life-time of the widow was this that he was suing not on his own behalf but on behalf of the entire body of reversioners or the person who would be the actual reversioner on the death of the widow. In other words it was held that a suit by a reversioner came within the Expl. VI of s. 11 of the C. P. C. This judgment, which was of a Full Bench, was upheld by the Privy Council. The judgment is reported as Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheo Pragash Ojha (2). On the face of it, the principle of these two rulings should apply.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has sought to distinguish the case on two grounds :—

First, he said that there are observations in the judgment of the Privy Council which show that where the reversioner's suit fails, a second suit by a different reversioner would not be barred as res judicata. As to this arugument we are of opinion that there is nothing in the judgment of the Privy Council which can support it. Their Lordships make the following remarks: "Their Lordships, of course, recognise that the principle is less obviously just where it operates to bind the ultimate reversioners by the result of a suit in which a plaintiff had failed whose interest, then merely presumptive, never ultimately matured. The danger of a feigned issue in such a suit is not to be overlooked".

In our opinion their Lordships gave the reason for holding why in the case of a failure of a reversioner's suit, the question whether or not the decree would bind the ultimate reversioner was not always capable of the same answer. To our mind their Lordships had in their view the case of a reversioner colluding with a transferee, for the simple reason that he was not certain whether the property was going to vest in him or not ultimately. Their Lordships expressly mention cases of fraud and collusion in continuation of the remarks already quoted. Looking to the principle of the decision we are of opinion that the case before us is entirely governed by the observations of the Privy Council and the decision of this Court. No question of collusion or fraud on the part of Sheo Mangal has been raised before us.

Sheo Mangal's suit was either a representative suit or it was not. If it is not a representative suit Bansidhar's suit is not equally representative one. Because there is no difference between the two suits in any respect at all. If Bansidhar's suit is not a representative suit there is no reason why he should be allowed to maintain one on his own account. If the suit of Bansidhar is not a representative suit the result of the suit will not bind the ultimate reversioner. If that be the case there is no ground for allowing Bansidhar to maintain this suit.

Again, if Bansidar's suit be a representative suit, the suit of Sheomangal must be treated as having been a representative suit. If Sheo Mangal's suit was a representative one the decree must bind Bansidhar also.

There is another aspect of the case. Supposing that Bansidhar's suit succeeds on the merits, the result would be that, say ten years hence, when the actual reversion opens out, there will be two conflicting judgments for the actual reversioner and the transferee to meet. The question would arise which of the two judgments should operate as res judicata. The learned Counsel for the appellant argued that the latter judgment should operate as res judicata ; but it is always necessary to avoid conflicting judgments and this Court cannot allow two contradictory judgments to come into existence.

In our opinion, therefore, the judgment previously obtained against Sheo Mangal should operate as res judicata.

The second ground urged by the learned Counsel for the appellant was that the transferee and the transferor both urged that Musammat Dulhatia was not holding as a representatative of Ganesh Din but was holding in her own right. This consideration, argued the learned Counsel, took the case entirely out of the purview of the cases quoted above. In our opinion the nature of the defence cannot alter the nature of the suit.

The appeal fails and it is hereby dismissed with costs which will include in this Court. Counsel's fee on the higher scale.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 1046 OF 1924.

November 15, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Martineau.

RELU MAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

MASITI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, Expl. IV—Mortgages, simple and usufructuary—Suit to redeem usufructuary mortgage—Failure of mortgagee to set up simple mortgage in defence—Res judicata.

Plaintiff held two mortgages in respect of a house, the earlier mortgage being a simple one and the later a usufructuary one. Defendant, who was the purchaser of the equity of redemption of the house, sued plaintiff for possession of the house by redemption of the later mortgage, which was a usufructuary mortgage, and obtained a decree. Subsequently plaintiff brought a suit to recover the amount of the simple mortgage from the defendant and the latter pleaded that as the plaintiff had not set up the simple mortgage in his defence to the prior suit he was barred by the 4th Explanation to s. 11 of the C. P. C., from suing on it:

Held, that as the earlier mortgage which was the subject-matter of the present suit was a simple mortgage and defendant could not in that suit have been compelled to pay the amount due thereon before he could obtain possession of the house, the failure of the plaintiff to set up the mortgage in defence to the earlier suit did not operate as res judicata so as to debar him from suing to recover the amount due under that mortgage.

Phula Singh v. Bur Chand, 39 Ind. Cas. 250; 60 P. W. R. 1917, relied on.

First appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 19th January 1924, reversing that of the First Class Munsif, Karnal, dated the 22nd December 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ghulam Mohyuddin, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Relu Mal sued Masiti for Rs. 1,000 due on a simple mortgage-deed executed in favour of Relu Mal's father Mithan Lal in 1910. The deed was executed by Karam Ali, and his mother Ajjo sold the equity of redemption of the mortgaged house to Masiti in 1919.

The Trial Court gave the plaintiff a decree but the District Judge has dismissed the suit holding it to be barred by the rule of res judicata and the only question in this second appeal is whether the suit is so barred.

In 1919 Masiti, after purchasing the equity of redemption, sued Relu Mal for redemption of a mortgage which had been effected by Karam Ali and Ajjo in favour ot Mithan Lal in 1911 in respect of the same house which had been the subject of the mortgage of 1910 and obtained a decree, and the learned District Judge holds that as Relu Mal did not plead the mortgage of 1910 in his defence to that suit he is barred by the 4th Explanation to s. 11 of the C P. C. from setting up the mortgage in the present suit. This view is not correct as the mortgage of 1911 was a usufructuary mortgage and Masiti's suit was for possession of the house by redemption of that mortgage whereas the mortgage of 1910 was a simple mortgage and Masiti could not have been compelled to pay the amount due thereon before he could obtain possession of the mortgaged property. Phula Singh v. Bur Chand (1) is applicable to the case. Another point to be observed is that Karam Ali had in 1903 sold the house to his mother so that Masiti's claim on the mortgage effected by Karam Ali in 1910 involved the question whether Karam Ali was then the owner of the house and competent to mortgage it, a question which did not arise in respect of the mortgage of 1911 to which both Karam Ali and Ajjo were parties. I hold, therefore, that s. 11 of the C. P. C. does not bar the suit.

It has been found that the mortgage of

(1) 39 Ind. Cas. 250; 60 P. W. R. 1917.

1910 was for consideration, and that the sale by Karam Ali to his mother in 1903 was fictitious and those findings are not in dispute.

I accept the appeal reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the Court of first instance. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs in all the Courts.

RAMESHWAR BAKHSH SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Musammat RIDH KUER AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 31, 48—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 4—Guardian, certificated, whether can alienate minor's property without sanction of Court—Benefit of minor—Natural guardian—Sanction of Court—Procedure, defective, effect of—Guardian ad litem, appointment of—Presumption—Consent of guardian, whether necessary—Negligence of guardian—Minor, whether bound by decree.

Once a person, whether he is a natural guardian or a stranger, is appointed guardian of a minor by order of the Court passed in accordance with the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act, he is clothed with all the obligations imposed by that Act in dealing with the ward's property. It is not in his power to throw off those obligations by the exercise of his own volition and to pose as a natural guardian and act in that status. [p. 241, col. 2.]

An alienation of the minor's property by his guardian without the sanction of the Court cannot be upheld on the ground that the guardian happened to be the father of the minor and that the alienation was for the benefit of the latter. [p. 242, col. 1.]

An order passed by a Court in violation of such rules of procedure, however mandatory, as relate merely to the form of the order cannot be treated as a nullity. The omission to follow such rules of procedure can amount to no more than a mere irregularity or material irregularity in the circumstances of a particular case. On the other hand, an order passed by a Court in violation of such rules of procedure, the observance of which alone invests the Court with jurisdiction to pass the order, is a nullity. [p. 242, col. 2.]

The violation of the procedure prescribed by sub-s. (2) of s. 31 of the Guardians and Wards Act for recording an order granting permission to a guardian to alienate the minor's property, cannot be made the ground for brushing aside the finality of the order sanctioning the alienation which is provided for by s. 48 of the Act. The only condition by which the finality prescribed by s. 48 can be avoided is to establish that the order granting the permission was a nullity. [ibid.]

A transferee of a minor's property from the guardian of the minor cannot be made to suffer for defects in the procedure relating to the sanction of the alienation by the Court. The order of the Court granting the sanction is sufficient for his protection. [ibid.]

The presumption that judicial acts have been regularly performed applies to the acts of the Court alone. Where, therefore, it appears from the record of a suit that a minor defendant was represented by a guardian ad litem it might be presumed that the necessary notices were issued and that a formal order appointing the guardian ad litem was drawn up, but there can be no presumption that the person who was named as the guardian ad litem of the minor defendant was a fit person to be appointed guardian. [p. 243, col. 1.]

Where a question arises whether a minor is bound by the result of a previous suit or not, it is open to the Court which is investigating the point to enquire as to whether the person who was named as the guardian ad litem of the minor in the previous litigation was or was not a fit person to be appointed guardian. [ibid.]

Sub-rule (3) of r. 4 of O. XXXII of the C. P. C. lays down that no person shall, without his consent, be appointed guardian ad litem for a minor defendant. A person who is named as guardian ad litem of a minor defendant but does not appear in the suit cannot be said to have consented to be appointed guardian. [ibid.]

A minor is as much bound by a judgment in his own action as if he were a person of full age unless he can establish gross laches or fraud and collusion on the part of his guardian. [p. 244, col. 1.]

The omission of a guardian ad litem to raise a defence on behalf of his ward which he might and ought to have raised does not preclude the ward from raising that defence in a subsequent suit. [p. 245, col. 2.]

Case-law referred to.

Appeal against the decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 16th September 1922.

Mr. Muhammad Siddique, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Haider Husain and Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondents.

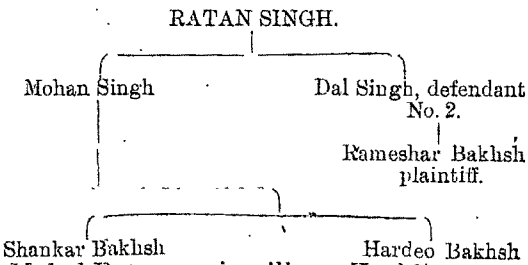
JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiff's appeal. It will be convenient to give a short pedigree at the outset.



Mahal Ratanpur in village Kachkapur in the District of Sitapur was the property of the descendants of Ratan Singh and comprised 380 bighas 2 biswas land. Early in 1894 the mahal was divided into two shares between Dal Singh and the descendants of Mohan Singh. This partition was founded on an award (Ex. 40), which was followed by a decree of Court (Ex. 41). By this decree separate allotments were made in equal shares to Dal Singh on the one hand and Shankar Bakhsh and Hardeo Bakhsh on the other (Exs. 42, 43, 45 and 46). Shankar Bakhsh and Hardeo Bakhsh also obtained 15 bighas 16 biswas of land in excess of their half share by way of jethansi rights. The whole mahal was denoted by the unit of 20 biswas and each moiety consequently represents 10 biswas. In 1884 Dal Singh, Shankar Bakhsh and Hardeo Bakhsh together had mortgaged with possession 10 biswas of the entire mahal and also 7½ bighas of the jethansi lands to one Jawahir Singh. It follows that after the mortgage in favour of Jawahir Singh each branch of Ratan Singh's family was left with a 5 biswas share in the mahal and Mohan Singh's branch with half of the jethansi lands in addition thereto. Jawahir Singh subsequently made a gift of his rights under the mortgage to his daughter, Musammat Jeo Kuar. On the death of Musammat Jeo Kuar in 1912 her daughter, Musammat Ridh Kuar, succeeded to those rights and she is the chief defendant in the suit. It may be mentioned that prior to 1894 other alienations by way of mortgages were made by Dal Singh but as those alienations have no bearing on the decision of the case before us it is not necessary to state them with detail in this judgment, except the possessory mortgage of the 12th May 1893 in favour of Udenath and Sita Ram, which will be noticed again at its proper place. According to the finding of the lower Court, which was accepted by both the parties before us, the plaintiff was born on the 4th or 5th November 1899. On the 20th July 1900 Dal Singh sold his remaining 5 biswas share under the sale-deed of that date (Ex. A-2) to Kewal Singh and others and on the 28th February 1901 Shankar Bakhsh and Hardeo Bakhsh sold their remaining share of the mahal, that is 5 biswas and also 7 bighas 10 biswas of the jethansi lands, to the same Kewal Singh, who was one of the purchasers under the sale-deed of the 20th July 1900 executed by Dal Singh. On the 24th June 1901 Musammat Umrai Kuer, mother of the plaintiff, acting as his next friend, filed a suit on behalf of her minor son, the plaintiff to pre-empt the sale of the 20th July 1900 effected by Dal Singh and a similar suit was filed on the 27th February 1902 by the same lady, acting in the same capacity, to pre-empt the second sale of the 28th February 1901 (Exs. A-4 and A-6). Both these suits were decreed, the former by the judgment dated the 24th February 1902 (Ex. A-5) and the latter by the judgment dated the 4th November 1902 (Ex. A-7). There were appeals against these judgments but without any success. It will be seen that by virtue of the pre-emption decrees the plaintiff reacquired the 5 biswas share of his branch of the family and a similar share belonging to the other branch together with 7½ bighas of the jethansi lands appertaining to the latter share.

Dal Singh was appointed by the Court of the District Judge of Sitapur guardian of the person and property of his minor son, Rameshar Bakhsh, plaintiff. Acting in that capacity and after having obtained the sanction of the District Judge, Dal Singh executed a deed of a mortgage on the 1st April 1905 in favour of Musammat Jeo Kuar for a sum of Rs. 10,000 (Ex. A-10). This loan was raised to satisfy the pre-emption decree of the 4th November 1902 and the previous mortgage of the 12th May 1893 and was to carry interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum which the mortgagor undertook to pay six monthly and in the event of default compound interest at the same rate. There was a further covenant that if interest for two consecutive instalments remained unpaid the mortgagee would be entitled to enter into the possession of the mortgaged property and to continue in that possession for a period of 15 years and if no redemption took place at the end of 15 years the mortgage shall be foreclosed. The larger pre-emption decree was satisfied on the 3rd April 1905 with the aid of the money borrowed under the deed of mortgage just now mentioned and the smaller one with the money furnished by the plaintiff's mother, who died soon after. On the 5th August 1909 the defendant No. 1 redeemed the mortgage of the 12th May 1893 by payment of the sum of Rs. 3,000 to the mortgagee (Ex. A-11). Default was made in payment of interest with the result that the mortgagee entered into possession of the property at the end of August 1910,

This finishes the narrative of facts in respect of one of the causes of action on which the present suit is founded. The plaintiff's case is that the mortgage of the 1st April 1905 was executed by Dal Singh without a valid sanction having been obtained in respect of the transfer from the Court of the District Judge of Sitapur and further that the mortgage in question does not embrace any jethansi lands and consequently the defendant No. 1 is in possession thereof without any title whatsoever.

It appears that Musammat Jeo Kuar was also a lambardar of the village, and as we have seen before, she was in possession as a mortgagee of half of the Mahal Ratanpur under the mortgage of 1884 and, as we have further seen, she entered into possession of the other half as well under the mortgage of the 1st April 1905. She was, however, not in possession of the latter share till August 1910. Between the date of the satisfaction of the pre-emption decree Musammat Jeo Kuar and the date of the possession of the defendant No. 1, nominally the plaintiff but actually his father, Dal Singh, was in possession of the 5 biswas share and half of the jethansi lands appertaining thereto. On the date of those decrees the plaintiff was an infant 3 years old. It appears that the mortgagee Musammat Jeo Kuar, either in the capacity of a lambardar or in consequence of the mortgages in her favour had to pay to the Government a sum of Rs. 68-9-0 on account of arrears of revenue for the period preceding her possession as a mortgagee under the deed of the 1st April 1905. To recover this amount she filed a suit in the Rent Court against the plaintiff and obtained a decree therein on the 15th December 1911. The record of that suit has been weeded in its entirety. A copy of the decree seems to have been filed by the defendant No. 1 in a suit which she had brought in 1918 against Dal Singh and others in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kheri. That copy is still on the file of that case and was looked into by the Court below. The decree purports to have been passed ex parte against the plaintiff under the guardianship of Dal Singh. The plaintiff's case is that he was not properly and in accordance with law represented in the suit which culminated in the decree of the 15th December 1911 and has consequently suffered great injury.

The decree of the Rent Court dated the 15th December 1911 though trifling in amount was not satisfied by Dal Singh. The defendant No. 1 then proceeded to execute it with the result that she brought the entire 10 biswas share and also 7½ bighas of jethansi lands, according to her allegations, to sale and purchased them herself in an auction on the 21st June 1915 in lieu of the amount of the decree. The sale certificate dated the 27th July 1915, which she obtained is exhibited in suit as A-29. It will be seen from what has been stated before that the defendant No. 1 had already had possession of the property which she purchased on the 21st June 1915 for over three years and what she purchased on that date was the equity of redemption which had been left to the plaintiff after the mortgage of the 1st April 1905. The plaintiff's case is that he is not bound by the sale as it was the result of gross negligence on the part of his guardian, Dal Singh.

The appeal, therefore, involves the following four points for determination:—

1. Does the mortgage of the 1st April 1905 cover 7½ bighas of jethansi lands?
2. Was the sanction accorded by the District Judge of Sitapur for that mortgage a valid sanction, if not, is the mortgage otherwise binding on the plaintiff?
3. Was the plaintiff properly represented in the rent suit?
4. Was Dal Singh, the plaintiff's guardian, guilty of gross negligence in connection with the rent suit and in allowing the sale of the plaintiff's title in the property in suit in execution of the decree of the 15th December 1911?

It may be mentioned that besides the defences involved in the questions set out above the defendant No. 1 also pleaded that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata. This plea has been decided by the Court below against the defendant but it was again pressed on her behalf upon us at the hearing of the appeal. We are, therefore, called upon to give our opinion on that plea as well.

Point No. 1.—In agreement with the Court below we have come to the conclusion that the deed of mortgage of the 1st April 1905 must be interpreted in accordance with the defendant's contention. The sale-deed executed by Shankar Bakhsh and Hardeo Bakhsh on the 28th February 1901 (Ex. A-3) expressly includes 7 bighas 10 biswas of jethansi lands. The plaintiff in the pre-emption suit relating to that sale also in express terms claimed relief for possession of the 7 bighas 10 biswas of the jethansi lands besides the 5 biswas share of the mahal (Ex. A-6) and the judgment in that suit expressly embraces the relief for possession of the 7 bighas 10 biswas of jethansi lands. This judgment, as we have said before, is of the 4th November 1902. The mortgage of the 1st April 1905 (Ex. A-10) refers in its preamble to the pre-emption judgment by its date and describes it as being in respect of 5 biswas of Mahal Ratanpur. It is not disputed that the 5 biswas of Mahal Ratanpur, which originally belonged to Shankar Bakhsh and Hardeo Bakhsh, were transferred by the mortgage under consideration and it is quite clear on the facts of the case that the jethansi lands appertained to that share. It is clear, therefore, that the moiety of the jethansi lands was intended to be mortgaged and did pass with the mortgage of the share to which it appertained.

Point No. 2.—The evidence on this part of the case is as follows:—On the 21th March 1905 Dal Singh presented a petition (Ex. A-8) to the District Judge of Sitapur under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) asking for permission to make the mortgage in question. In this petition he recited the pre-emption decree of the 4th November 1902 and the minor's liability to pay thereunder the sum of Rs. 5,575, the fact that under the decree of the Court of Appeal the amount was payable up to the 3rd April 1905 and the further fact of the existence of the previous mortgage in favour of Udai Nath and Sita Ram in lieu of Rs. 3,000 (that is the mortgage of the 12th May 1893). On the 31st March 1905 the District Judge passed the following order:—"Approved." (Ex. A-9). This is all the evidence bearing on the point. The Trial Judge has held "the order of sanction was not a legal order which can be pleaded as a sufficient sanction for the transfer by the guardian." To this finding we will address ourselves later because it has been challenged at the hearing of the appeal by the learned Counsel for the respondents. Having given that finding the learned First Subordinate Judge proceeded to discuss the question as to whether the transfer was or was not for the benefit of the minor. Having found that it was he upheld it. With this view we are unable to agree. If the sanction accorded by the District Judge is held to be not legal the transaction must fall through otherwise the whole object of the enactment contained in ss. 28 to 31 of the Guardians and Wards Act will be stultified. Once a person, natural guardian or a stranger, is appointed guardian of a minor by order of the Court passed in accordance with the provisions of the Act mentioned above he is clothed with all the obligations imposed by that Act in dealing with the ward's property. It is not in his power to throw off those obligations by the exercise of his own volition and pose as a natural guardian and act in that status. The view adopted by the Court below seems to be supported by a decision of the High Court at Allahabad in the case of Tejpal v. Ganga (1) but is opposed to the opinion expressed in the case of Shib Lal v. Sham Das (2) decided by the former Chief Court of the Punjab. Our opinion is supported also by the decision of the Allahabad High Court in a later case of Ram Chandra v. Chheda Lal (3). We think, however, that the point is concluded by a recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Raw (4). In the case just now mentioned the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant entered into a compromise without the previous sanction of the Court as required by the provisions of s. 462 of the old C. P. C. The guardian was the father of the minor and was a defendant in the suit in his own right as well. It was contended that the compromise was not ultra vires of the power of a Hindu father. The view taken in the Courts in India was that the guardian "in entering into the compromise acted in his personal capacity which he was competent to do as his appointment as guardian ad litem would not deprive him of his capacity to act on his own behalf and that as the money was made payable to him only as the representative of the family of which he is the head, the compromise he entered into will be binding on the other members, including the plaintiff (minor) only if it is a bona fide compromise of a disputed claim." This view was repelled by their Lordships in the following observations: "How far the acts of a father or managing member may affect a minor, who is a party to the suit represented by another person as next friend or guardian ad litem, is a question which does not arise in the case, and their Lordships are not called upon to express an opinion on it. But they consider it to be clear that when he himself is the next friend or guardian of the minor his powers are controlled by the provisions of the law and he cannot do any act in his capacity of father or managing member which he is debarred from doing as next friend or guardian without leave of the Court. To hold otherwise would be to defeat the object of the enactment." The transaction of mortgage now in question cannot, therefore, be upheld on the ground that it was entered into by the father of the plaintiff and was for the benefit of the latter. It must stand or fall with the Judge's sanction.

The finding of the Court below that the sanction accorded by the District Judge of Sitapur on the 31st March 1905 in respect of the mortgage in question is 'not legal and sufficient' is based on two Single Judge's decisions of this Court in Gopal v. Mahtaba (5) and Banke Lal v. Swami Dayal (6). The first case came before this Court in revision against the order granting the sanction. This Court was, therefore, competent in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction to correct any error of law or procedure amounting to an illegality or material irregularity under the provisions of s. 622 of the old C P. C. The learned Judge who decided the case was not called upon to consider and did not consider the effect of the bar created by s. 48 of the Guardians and Wards Act. In the case of Banke Lal v. Swami Dayal (6), the view taken in the first mentioned case as to the mandatory nature of the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 31 of the same Act was followed and no reference seems to have been made to s. 48. These cases are, therefore, not of much help to us. The argument before us by the learned Counsel for the appellant has proceeded on the same lines as the judgment in the case of Gopal v. Mehtaba (5). As regards the mandatory character of the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 31 of the Act, we are quite clear in our mind that the violation of the procedure prescribed by that sub-section for recording the order granting the permission cannot be made the ground of brushing aside the finality of the order as enacted by section 48. The only condition in which the finality prescribed by s. 48 can be avoided is to establish that the order granting the permission was a nullity. An order passed by a Court in violation of such rules of procedure, however, mandatory as relate merely to the form of the order cannot be treated as a nullity. The omission to follow such rules of procedure can amount to no more than a mere irregularity or a material irregularity in the circumstances of a particular case. On the other hand, an order passed by a Court in violation of such rules of procedure as the observance of which only invests the Court with jurisdiction to pass the order is a nullity. The first proposition is illustrated by the case of Malkarjun v. Narhari (7) and the second by Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (8). In the present case there is no question of the absence of jurisdiction. Section 31, sub-s. (1), of the Guardians and Wards Act lays down the conditions on the existence of which alone permission shall be granted. In view of the contents of the application presented by Dal Singh and the interval between it and the order we must presume that the Court was of opinion that those conditions existed in the case before it. That is enough for our purposes—see Rameshwar Singh v. Dhanpat Singh (9). Sub-section (2) relates to the form of the order granting the permission, to enquire into the propriety of which we are now debarred by the provision of s. 48 of the Act. Obviously the transferee cannot be made to suffer for defects of procedure. For his protection the order of the Court is sufficient—see Gangapershad Sahe v. Maharani Bibi (10). On these grounds we hold that there was a valid permission and, therefore, the mortgage of the 1st April 1905 is binding on the plaintiff.

Point No. 3.—The record of the rent suit seems to have been altogether destroyed in June 1918 (Ex. A-33) and the only material, which we have before us, is a certified copy of the decree passed in that suit, which copy, as we have said before, was filed by the defendant No. 1 in a suit which she had brought against Dal Singh and the plaintiff in the year 1918 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kheri. That copy proves the following facts.

1. That the suit was instituted against the plaintiff under the guardianship of his father, Dal Singh.

2. That Dal Singh did not put in appearance.

3. That consequently an ex parte decree was passed in favour of the defendant No. 1 and against the plaintiff.

4. That the decree was for a sum of Rs. 68-9-0 on account of arrears of revenue for the years 1315 to 1317 Fasli.

On this foundation the Court below has raised the presumption that the procedure prescribed by O. XXXII, r. 3, of the C. P. C., was observed—Omnia præsumuntur rite et esse acta. This presumption must be applied to the acts of the Court alone. We will, therefore, presume that the necessary notices were issued and that the formal order appointing Dal Singh guardian ad litem of his minor son, the present plaintiff, was drawn up; but in the circumstances of the present case we find it very difficult to raise any further presumption. We cannot possibly hold on the basis of mere presumption, that Dal Singh was a fit person to be so appointed. During the period for which the revenue fell into arrears Dal Singh was in actual possession of the plaintiff's property and the arrears must be attributed to his mismanagement. The defendant No. 1 was in possession of the other 10 biswas of the mahal. She was also the lambardar. It is, therefore, reasonable to presume that she was aware of the precedent mismanagement of the minor's property by his guardian Dal Singh. Three years before the date of the rent suit Dal Singh had delivered possession of the 10 biswas now in suit to the defendant No. 1. This was done amicably as is shown by the pleadings in the case. It is difficult to believe in the circumstances that any liability for the revenue of the minor's share was left outstanding at the amicable settlement. Nor is it possible to entirely dissociate the defendant No. 1's claim for the arrears of revenue from her position as a mortgagee in possession under the deed of the 1st April 1905 executed by Dal Singh himself. In the year 1900 Dal Singh had sold the 5 biswas share to Kawal Singh and that was the only share left after the mortgage of 1884. It was the plaintiff's mother who recovered it by means of the suit for pre-emption and payment of the decree in that suit. On these grounds we hold that Dal Singh though a guardian appointed by a competent authority was not a fit person to be appointed guardian ad litem of his minor son, the plaintiff, in the rent suit. As pointed out just now with reference to several incidents, the minor's interest clashed with that of his guardian. Sub-rule (1) of r. 4 of O. XXXII of the C. P. C., laying down the qualification of a person who could act as a guardian for the suit has an important proviso attached to it and it is as follows:—"Provided that the interest of such person is not adverse to that of the minor." We are of opinion that there is no legal bar to our entering into the inquiry as to whether Dal Singh was or was not a fit person to be appointed guardian ad litem for this minor, Rameshar Bakhsh. The question raised in the present case is as to whether the plaintiff was or was not properly represented in the rent suit. That such a question can be raised is beyond any doubt and it follows that with a view to determine that question we must have the power to enter into the inquiry stated above. Further sub-r. (3) of r. 4 of O. XXXII of the C. P. C., lays down that no person shall without his consent be appointed guardian ad litem for the suit. It has already been stated that Dal Singh did not appear in the suit. There is, therefore, no conduct of his from which we could have inferred that he gave his consent to be so appointed. This, in our judgment, is a serious defect and as the plaintiff has eventually suffered great injury, as will show hereafter, the defect cannot be condoned. In the course of his arguments the learned Counsel for the respondents cited the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Walian v. Banke Behari Pershad Singh (11). We think, however, that the decision in that case is of no help to us. In that case though no formal order appointing the mother of the plaintiffs to be their guardian ad litem was drawn up and though service of summons on the infants and the guardian was not proved yet it was held on facts that the mother did act in the proceedings of the suit and it was not shown that the minor's interests were not duly protected. In the present case we have shown, in the first place, that Dal Singh was not a proper person to be appointed guardian in the rent suit and we have also pointed out the entire absence of any act on the part of Dal Singh in relation to the proceedings of that suit. On these grounds we hold that the plaintiff was not properly represented in the rent suit of 1915.

Point No. 4.—The point which we now propose to decide is clearly covered by the latter part of Issue No. 7 and Issue No. 9. The general principles which should govern the decision of this part of the case are not in doubt. In Gregory v. Molesworth (12), Lord Hardwicke said that "it was right for Courts of Equity to follow the rule of law, where it was held, an infant is as much bound by a judgment in his own action as if of full age; and this is general, unless gross laches or fraud and collusion appear in the prochein amy, then the infant might open it by a new bill." A decree may be impeached where there has been gross negligence by the guardian in the conduct of the infant's case—Simpson on the Law of Infants, Second Edition, page 512. Reference is made in that book to the decision of Sir R. Mallins, Vice-Chancellor, In re Hoghton, Houghton v. Fiddey (13). The learned Vice-Chancellor made the following observation:—"The question which I have to decide is, whether this infant, on whose behalf a decree was taken by consent in 1867, is to suffer by any negligence or want of knowledge on the part of her then next friend. I am clearly of opinion she cannot be called upon to endure that inconvenience." It is equally clear that if the negligence of the guardian results in injury to the infant the infant is entitled to redress. In the same judgment the learned Vice-Chancellor said:—"However that may be, the proposition that an infant of tender years may have her whole fortune wrecked by the neglect of her next friend is so monstrous that I cannot pay attention to it." This rule of law has been constantly applied to cases arising in this country. In the case of Kylash Chunder Sircar v. Gooroo Churn Sircar (14), Jackson and Glover, JJ., said:—"On this we observe that, when Goluck Monee instituted the suit on behalf of Kylash, the latter was a minor, and there is no law that prevents a minor, when he comes of age, suing in his own name for anything that his guardian, either through ignorance or negligence has omitted to prosecute. If this were the law no minor would be safe and we do not see how Kylash, when he attained majority, was debarred from claiming, and that in the suit originally instituted by his guardian, such property as that guardian had omitted in the schedule of plaint." The cases mentioned above were relied upon by two learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sheo Churn Lal v. Ramnandan Dobey (15) and this case was followed by the High Court of Bombay in Cursandas Natha v. Ladkavahu (16). Further "the relation of guardian and ward is strictly that of trustee and cestui que trust... It is a peculiar relation of trusteeship... A guardian is not only a trustee of the property, as in an ordinary case of trustee, but he is also the guardian of the person of the infant with many duties to perform, such as to see to his maintenance and education." Per Lord Romilly Mathew v. Brise (17). Section 20, sub-s. (1) of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, says that a guardian stands in a fiduciary relation to his ward. These being the general principles we have next to see how far they apply to the facts of this case.

As to the value of the property in suit the finding of the Court below is that it was about Rs. 1,300 at the time of the rent suit. It further points out that the property had an incumbrance of Rs. 10,000 at the time and, therefore, the equity of redemption was slightly over Rs. 3,000. Both sides have disputed the correctness of this finding. The appellant wishes to establish that the value of the property was much more than Rs. 13,000. On the other hand, the respondent No. 1 contends that the lower Court has erred in calculating the value of the incumbrance by omitting the amount of interest due for the period prior to possession. We, however, accept the finding of the learned First Subordinate Judge as proper in the light of the evidence which he has examined in detail. At any rate the value of the equity of redemption was accepted by the defendant No. 1 to be Rs. 3,286 in the execution proceedings and this was the value which was set forth for the purposes of the auction.

There is nothing certain on the record in what right the defendant No. 1 claimed the sum of Rs. 68-9-0 from the plaintiff. On the date of that suit she occupied the position of the lambardar of the whole mahal but she was also a mortgagee in possession of the other half of the mahal and the 5 biswas of the mahal now in suit were in the possession of Udenath and Sitaram under their mortgage of the 12th May 1893 during the period for which the revenue had fallen into arrears. More than three years before the institution of the rent suit the defendant No. 1 had come into the possession of the entire 10 biswas and the moiety of the jethansi lands in virtue of her own mortgage of the 1st April 1905. In these circumstances and at this distant date we are unable to be so sanguine as the Court below obviously is that there was no defence for Dal Singh to make on behalf of his infant son against the claim of the defendant No. 1. We must presume that Dal Singh had received notice of the suit for the recovery of the arrears of revenue, but how does he conduct himself? He deliberately avoids putting any appearance in the suit. Again the decree was for a trifling amount of Rs. 68-9-0. What does he do to satisfy that decree? Nothing. The property was valuable enough to bear the burden of a mortgage of Rs. 10,000 and according to the finding of the Court below the equity of redemption left with the plaintiff was at least worth over Rs. 3,000. Dal Singh inspite of the notice of the execution proceedings allows this property to be sold and who buys it? The mortgagee, who knew that it was the minor's property and who also knew that Dal Singh occupied the position of a trustee and that it was Dal Singh who had been in actual possession of the 5 biswas share for some time before the defendant No. 1 entered into the possession of the same. Besides the property in suit, there is evidence that the plaintiff owned other property also. Presumably that property must have been in the actual possession of Dal Singh. Dal Singh could well have satisfied the rent decree from the income of the property. In the circumstances we are of opinion that Dal Singh was certainly guilty of gross negligence which resulted in serious injury to the plaintiff. The result of our findings on points Nos. 3 and 4 is that the sale of the 21st June 1915 in execution of the decree of the Rent Court dated the 15th December 1911 of the property in suit is not binding on the plaintiff.

On the question of the bar of res judicata, which was argued at the hearing of this appeal on behalf of the respondent No. 1, we are of opinion that there is no such bar. The grounds for that opinion are substantially the same as are given by the learned First Subordinate Judge in his judgment under appeal and it will serve no useful purpose to repeat them here. We may, however, add that the questions which have arisen for determination in this case were wholly foreign to the nature of the previous suit. The title set up by the guardian of the plaintiff in that suit, which related to 50 bighas of land only, was paramount to the title which he subsequently acquired under the pre-emption decrees. Nor can the omission of the guardian to raise any other defence on behalf of his ward which he might and ought to have raised preclude the ward from raising that defence in a subsequent suit, otherwise the minor would be made to suffer for the laches of his guardian. Lastly, we have upheld the mortgage of the 1st April 1905 and we are going to reject the relief as to the recovery of possession in this suit. The defendant No. 1 will, therefore, be entitled to remain in possession till redemption. Our decree, therefore, is not inspite of but consistent with the previous decree.

The result of our decision is that the plaintiff is entitled only to the declaration contained in cl. (2) of relief (b) in para. 11 of his plaint. We, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and grant to the plaintiff the declaration just now mentioned but dismiss his suit in respect of the other reliefs. It will hereafter be open to him to sue for redemption of the mortgage of the 1st April 1905 in suit properly framed for that purpose. In view of the result we direct that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Mortgage of several items of property—Sale of one item—Oral agreement between mortgagee and purchaser to release item purchased from mortgagor, whether can be proved.

A mortgagee of several items of property agreed with a subsequent purchaser of one of the items to release that item from the mortgage security. In a suit by the mortgagee to enforce the mortgage against all the items mortgaged:

Held, that the purchaser of the item released was not precluded by the provisions of s. 92 of the Evidence Act from giving evidence of the oral agreement between himself and the mortgagee whereby the latter agreed to release the item purchased by the former from the mortgage. [p. 247, col. 1.]

Section 92 of the Evidence Act has no application if only some of the representatives-in-interest of the parties to a document are parties to the later oral agreement. [ibid.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 46 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Gudivada, in Original Suit No. 422 of 1919 (O. S. No. 63 of 1919, Principal District Munsif's Court, Gudivada).

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Ramanatha Shenai and K. Sanjeeva Kamath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit has been instituted by the plaintiff to enforce a mortgage executed by the 1st defendant. Subsequent to the date of the mortgage, the 1st defendant sold the second item of the properties mortgaged to Subbiah the father of the 3rd defendant. The contest is now between the plaintiff and the 3rd defandant. The latter pleads that the plaintiff agreed to release the item purchased by Subbiah and to confine his mortgage right to the other properties mentioned in the deed of mortgage. The first question that has to be decided is, whether the plaintiff did agree to release the second item. The learned District Munsif found it somewhat difficult to decide this question on account of the fact that at least three conflicting versions were placed before him. It is not necessary for me to refer at any length to the evidence on this part of the case. The learned Munsif has found that the plaintiff did agree to release the property. The oral evidence was meagre in the extreme. But the probabilities strongly pointed to the fact that the agreement set up was true. The sale-deed in favour of Subbiah referred to the outstanding mortgage. There is a recital in the sale-deed that out of the price, a sum of Rs. 600 was paid to the first defendant in order to enable him to pay it in part discharge of the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. After the sale-deed was executed by the 1st defendant and attested by several witnesses it was taken to the plaintiff who was living in a different village for the purpose of his attestation being obtained. The plaintiff attested the deed and received Rs. 300 in part payment of his mortgage. There is some dispute regarding the balance of Rs. 300 out of the sum set apart, namely, Rs. 600, but that has no bearing on this part of the case, for, in any event, it is clear that some amount out of the consideration for the sale was received by the plaintiff towards the mortgage. Mainly relying on this and similar circumstances, the District Munsif found that the plaintiff agreed with Subbiah to release Item No. 2 of the mortgage properties. The Subordinate Judge concurred in this finding and in second appeal this finding must be treated as final.

The lower Courts having found that there was an agreement as pleaded by the 3rd defendant, the further question that had to be decided was, who were the parties to this agreement? It was assumed by the District Munsif as well as the Subordinate Judge that if the parties to the agreement were the plaintiff, the 1st defendant and Subbiah, oral evidence of that agreement would be inadmissible under s. 92 of the Evidence Act. Under that section, no evidence of any oral agreement between the parties to the original instrument or their representatives-in-interest is admissible for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to or subtracting from the terms of such instrument. Both the lower Courts dealt with the case on the footing that all the three were parties to the agreement and that oral evidence could not be given of it. It is unnecessary to enquire whether if the subsequent oral agreement pleaded was between the plaintiff, the first defendant and Subbiah, evidence of it is or is not admissible. The lower Courts failed to direct their attention properly to the point at issue. I have searched in vain for a finding on this point in the long judgment of the District Munsif. There is no distinct finding in his judgment at all. This is not disputed at the bar. The Munsif overlooked the fact that he did not give a finding and when discussing the law on the subject he assumed that he had found on this point against the 3rd defendant. In the absence of any criticism of the evidence or any discussion of the matters that had to be considered in relation to this issue, I cannot treat the judgment of the District Munsif as containing a finding upon this very material point; viz., who the parties were to the subsequent oral agreement.

The learned Subordinate Judge made also a mistake, one which goes to the very root of the matter. Having said in his judgment that the District Munsif's view that there was an agreement was correct, he definitely put to himself the question "Who were the parties to that agreement?" The answer is somewhat obscure. The Judge seemed to think that the real parties to the agreement were the plaintiff and Subbiah, but that the 1st defendant was also present at the time of the agreement. The mere presence of the 1st defendant in the Judge's opinion made him a party to the agreement. If the Subordinate Judge held that as a fact, the 1st defendant was also a party to the agreement, whether his conclusion was correct or not, it would, at any rate, be intelligible. I would then not be justified in interfering with his finding. But the whole of this part of the Subordinate Judge's judgment is vitiated by a fundamental error. Whether the 1st defendant was a party to the agreement or not must be decided on the evidence. If he was not in fact a party, he could not be said by a fiction of law to be a party merely because he was present at the agreement or paid a sum of money to the plaintiff.

In this state of things, I was taken through the whole evidence myself. I have come to the conclusion that the only parties to the agreement were the plaintiff and Subbiah. The Subordinate Judge says that the 1st defendant in the witness-box did not speak to the release of Item No. 2. If, according to the 1st defendant, there was no such agreement, it follows that he could not be a party to it at all. But I find that the Judge omitted to notice that in cross-examination the 1st defendant referred to the agreement but it was not elicited from him whether or not he was a party to it. Then again, D. W. No. 4 referred in his evidence to the agreement by the plaintiff to release the property. No questions were put to this witness either, to elicit further particulars. There are two circumstances which have an important bearing on this point. The lower Court points out in its judgment that when 'final negotiations were proceeding the plainitiff and Subbiah retired into the interior of the house and had a private talk. It was only subsequent to this incident that the plaintiff attested the sale-deed. The District Munsif points out that Subbiah and the plaintiff were near relations and that it was Subbiah that was able to prevail upon the plaintiff to release the property. These two circumstances in the light of the evidence in the case, make it highly probable that the agreement was between Subbiah and the plaintiff alone. It is not necessary to deal with this question in greater detail. It is conceded that the evidence is very meagre and on a very careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that the only parties to the agreement were Subbiah and the plaintiff.

The words "representatives-in-interest" in s. 92 were construed in Goseti Subba Row v. Varigonda Narasimham (1). Subramania Iyer and Boddam, JJ., held that the section had no application if only some of the representatives were parties to the later oral agreement. To the instrument in question the parties were the plaintiff and the 1st defendant. Subbiah who purchased only a portion of the mortgaged property is not under s. 92 precluded from giving oral evidence of the agreement. The evidence, therefore, of the agreement set up was admissible and the judgment of the lower Court is set aside and the appeal is allowed. The 3rd defendant will have his costs throughout from the plaintiff.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Asansole, Burdwan, dated the 8th of December 1922.

Mr. S. R. Das and Babu Hamendra Nath Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. Sarkar, Babus Atul Ch. Dutt, Bireswar Bagchi and Manmatha Nath Ganguly, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order recording a compromise or a partial settlement of a suit under O. XXIII, r. 3, C. P. C. The order appealed against was passed on 8th December 1922. On 15th January 1923 a decree was prepared in pursuance of that order in accordance with the provisions of r. 3. On the 26th February this appeal was filed only against the order of the 8th December but no appeal was preferred against the decree. A preliminary objection was taken by Mr. Sirkar on behalf of the respondent that the present appeal is incompetent in that the decree having been passed before the appeal was filed an appeal lay from the decree and not from the order which is superseded by the decree. We think this objection must prevail. So far as this Court is concerned it must be now taken to be settled that where a preliminary decree or order is followed by a final decree an appeal does not lie against the former after the final decree is passed. All the cases on this point have been cited considered and followed in Nanibala Dasi v. Ichhamoyee Dasi (1). In Madhu Sudan Sen v. Kamini Kanta Sen (2), the learned Judges observe that under s. 588 of the old Code (corresponding to O. XLIII of the new Code) appeal has been allowed from two classes of orders some of which do not affect the decision of the case and some that do. In both cases the right to appeal from the order is lost after the preparation of the final decree. In that case the appeal was brought against an order of remand after the final decree was passed in the case. The learned Chief Justice in the course of his judgment laid down the principle that there could be no appeal against an order whether interlocutory or otherwise after the final disposal of the suit. In the case of Nanibala Dasi v. Ichhamoyee Dasi (1), the appeal was preferred against the preliminary decree in a partition suit after the final decree was made. The principle underlying these decisions is stated in Mackenzie v. Narsingh Sahai (3) to be that if the appeal is brought from the preliminary decree after the passing of the final decree which is not appealed from and if the appeal succeeds the result would be that the final decree which had not been appealed against would have to be indirectly set aside, a state of things the Legislature could never have contemplated, or there would be a final decree binding on the parties inconsistent with the preliminary decree or order.

The learned Advocate-General for the appellant concedes that the law is settled as above but he attempts to distinguish the present case on the ground that in the cases above referred to and those which they follow, some act had to be done and some further steps taken by the Court or the parties before the passing of the final decree whereas in the present case the decree automatically followed the order and, therefore, any variation of the order must ipso facto govern and modify the decree. The distinction suggested is that in cases of remand orders and preliminary decree in suits for partition or account the final decree is independent of the preliminary decree while in a case like the present the decree is dependent on and subordinate to the order which it merely follows and embodies.

As no authority directly in point has been placed before us, we have anxiously considered the point raised in all its aspects but we have not been persuaded that any real distinction as has been suggested exists between the two classes of cases. The question relating to dependent and subordinate decrees was fully considered in the case of Nanibala Dasi v. Ichhamoyee Dasi (1) and is the ratio decidendi of the case of Ram Nath Singh v. Basanta Narain Singh (4). The latter case is instructive and lays down the proposition that if the appeal is preferred from the preliminary decree before the final decree is passed the later decree should be held to be contingent on the result of the appeal. The principle of dependent and subordinate decree was first adumbrated in Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhury v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhury (5) as applying to several actions based on the same foundation of right or 'cause of suit' where the first action is challenged before the subsequent actions are decided. The same principle under similar circumstances has been extended to proceedings in the same suit.

(1) 84 Ind. Cas. 674; 40 C. L. J. 291.

(2) 32 C. 1023; 9 C. W. N. 895.

(3) 1 Ind. Cas. 413; 26 C. 762; 10 C. L. J. 113.

There is doubtless the distinction as suggested by the learned Advocate-General but on principle the final decree in a suit for partition or accounts or after remand is as much dependent on the preliminary decree which it follows, for its correctness and effect, as the decree in the present case may be said to be on the order.

There is another consideration which has weighed upon us in holding that the two classes of cases above referred to stand on the same plane. Section 96, C. P. C., confers the right of appeal from every decree if such right is not otherwise barred. It does not seem reasonable to presume that the Legislature intended that the right of appeal against two proceedings in one suit—the order and the decree—should co-exist. If the decree follows the order it will be no straining of the language to say that the order, and for that matter all previous proceedings, get merged in the decree which is the final declaration of the Court's mind and decision and lose their separate existence.

We cannot hold that the appeal from the order alone is maintainable unless we agree with the learned Counsel in holding that as a matter of law if the order appealed against is vacated or varied the decree must be similarly effected. We find no authority or logic in support of this contention.

We see no reason why the principle laid down in the case of Madhu Sudan Sen v. Kamini Kanta Sen (2) is not applicable to the present order. The learned Chief Justice in deciding that case made no distinction between interlocutory or other classes of orders and in that view of the case the appeal is incompetent and must be dismissed.

We are of opinion that considerations which govern the case of a preliminary and final decree apply with equal force to the case like the present.

In our judgment this appeal is incompetent and cannot proceed.

Counsel for the appellant has verbally prayed that in the event of our holding against him on this point the appellant may be permitted to convert the present appeal into an appeal from the decree. In view of the fact that there is no authority of this Court directly bearing on the above question and the appellant may have bona fide preferred the present appeal we think we ought to accede to the request and give him the necessary permission as was given in the case of Nanibala Dasi v. Ichhamoyee Dasi (1). The order we propose to pass is that if the appellant files a certified copy of the decree and puts in the proper Court-fees within two weeks from this date, this appeal will be registered as an appeal from original decree: in default, the appeal will stand dismissed.

We think the respondents are entitled to their costs of the hearing before us. We assess such costs at 10 gold mohurs to be paid by the appellant to respondent No. 1 and five gold mohurs to each of the remaining respondents who have appeared.

Fraud—Compromise signed by some of defendants—Decree against all defendants—Suit to set aside decree, whether maintainable.

A compromise was put in during the pendency of a suit signed by all the parties to the suit, except one of the defendants, but the Court proceeded to pass a decree on the basis of the compromise against all the defendants. The defendant who had not signed the compromise subsequently brought a suit for a declaration that the decree passed against him was void on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud:

Held, that it was the duty of the Court in the previous suit to satisfy itself that all the parties had consented to the compromise and that the failure of the plaintiff in the previous suit to inform the Court that one of the defendants had not joined in the compromise did not amount to fraud so as to entitle the defendant in the present suit to succeed.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 12th January 1921, reversing that of the Senior Sub-Judge, Karnal, dated the 11th October 1919.

Lala Rama Nand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Panna Lal sued for a declaration that a decree obtained against him by Nanu Mal on the 10th December 1913 was void on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud. The First Court decided in his favour but the District Judge has dismissed the suit, finding that there was no fraud on the part of Nanu Mal and Panna Lal has filed a second appeal.

The facts are as follows:—Nanu Mal brought a suit against three persons as the proprietors of a certain firm and on their objecting that Panna Lal was also a partner in the firm he was directed to implead Panna Lal as a defendant and he paid the necessary process-fee. At the next hearing compromise written out by a petition-writer was put in to which all the parties had put their thumb marks except Panna Lal. Whether a summons had been served on Panna Lal does not appear but the decree passed on the compromise was passed against him as well as against the other defendants in the case.

It is urged on behalf of Panna Lal in the present appeal that Nanu Mal ought to have brought to the notice of the Court in the former case, when the compromise was put in, that Panna Lal was not a party to it. It was, however, the business of the Court to satisfy itself that all the parties had consented to the compromise and we cannot agree with the contention that Nanu Mal's omission to inform the Court that Panna Lal had not joined in the compromise constituted fraud. Panna Lal was not without a remedy, for he could either have appealed against the decree or made an application to the Court under O. IX, r. 13, C. P. C., to set it aside. He did in fact make such an application but he made it too late, so that it was rejected as time-barred. We agree with the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel—Compromise of suit—Holding liable to sale in default of payment—Execution—Objection that holding is not transferable, whether can be taken.

A rent suit was compromised and one of the terms of the agreement was that in case of default of payment of the decretal amount by the judgment-debtor the decree-holder would be entitled to realise the amount by the sale of the judgment-debtor's holding. There was default in payment and the decree-holder proceeded to attach the judgment-debtor's holding. The judgment-debtor objected that the holding was not transferable and was, therefore, not liable to sale:

Held, that a representation having been made by the judgment-debtor to the decree-holder that his holding was attachable and the decree-holder having acted upon that representation and having changed his position to his detriment, the judgment-debtor was estopped from contending that the holding was transferable and was not liable to attachment.

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Cuttack, dated the 18th March 1920, modifying that of the Munsif, Kandrapara, dated the 13th September 1919.

Mr. G. C. Ray, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. N. Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—The only point that has been argued before us is that there was no waiver of the legal right of the petitioner. In my opinion there was. He did compromise the suit on an agreement that in default of payment of the decretal money, the decree-holder would be entitled to realize the sum by the sale of the attached holding. There was a clear representation made to the decree-holder that his occupancy holding was attachable by the judgment-debtor. The decree-holder acted upon that representation and changed his position to his detriment. In my opinion the judgment-debtor must make good his representation.

This application is dismissed with costs.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 30, 47—Order cancelling alienation by guardian—Appeal, whether lies.

No appeal lies from the order of a District Judge, made under s. 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act, cancelling an alienation made by the guardian of a minor in contravention of the sanction of the Court.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ghazipur.

FACTS.—The guardian of a minor applied to the District Judge for permission to sell the property of the minor in order to pay off certain debts While this application was pending the respondent, who was one of the creditors made an application to the District Judge and offered to purchase the property at a certain price. The District Judge accepted the offer and made an order that the property should be sold to the respondent at the price offered by him. Subsequently the guardian made an alienation in the form of a perpetual lease of a portion of the property in favour of the appellant and executed a sale-deed in favour of a third person. The respondent thereupon made an application to the District Judge for cancellation of the lease and of the sale-deed executed by the guardian. The application was allowed and the alienations made by the guardian were cancelled. The appellant came up to the High Court in appeal against the order cancelling the alienations.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kamalakanta Verma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We are satisfied that no appeal lies in this case, and we are not disposed to interfere in revision. The appeal is dismissed with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, rr. 97, 99, 100—Decree for possession—Obstruction—Subsequent suit for possession, whether maintainable.

Plaintiff obtained a decree for possession against defendant No. 1. He subsequently brought another suit for possession on the allegation that in execution of the previous decree he had recovered possession of the property but that he had been subsequently dispossessed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. It was found that the plaintiff had not obtained possession in execution of the previous decree and that he had been unable to prove a title as against defendant No. 2:

Held, that plaintiff's suit was barred as against defendant No. 1 by the provisions of s. 47 of the C. P. C., and was liable to be dismissed as against defendant No. 2 for want of proof of better title.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Cuttack, dated the 4th May 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Cuttack, dated the 30th April 1920.

Mr. Subodh Chandra Chatterjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Durga Prasanna Das Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—We must affirm the decree passed by the Court below. The plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant No. 1. His allegation is that in execution of that decree he recovered possession of the property but that he was subsequently dispossessed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. On that allegation he instituted a suit for declaration of title and for recovery of possession. His allegation that he recovered possession but was subsequently dispossessed is disbelieved. The learned Judge in the Court below has come to the conclusion that so far as the defendant No. 1 is concerned the plaintiff's suit is barred by the provisions of s. 47 of the Code and so far as the defendant No. 2 is concerned he must fail because he has not proved his title against him. Now the learned Vakil who appears on behalf of the appellant urges before us that s. 47 is not applicable to his suit. I am of opinion that it is. His remedy was to proceed under the Code and if he was obstructed at all either by defendant No. 1 or defendant No. 2 he should have applied under O. XXI, r. 97, of the Code for investigation of the matter. The Court would then have fixed a day for investigating the matter and would have summoned the party against whom the application was made for him to appear and answer the same. Then the Court would have passed an order either under r. 99 or r. 100 of O. XXI, and that would have given a right to the plaintiff to sue the party successfully obstructing him. So far as the defendant No. 2 is concerned the learned Judge in the Court below has recorded a finding that the plaintiff has not established his title as against him

This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Dunedin.—This is a case which has the appearance of great complexity, owing to the meticulous enquiry into all sorts of circumstances which has been undertaken by the learned District Judge, and has been more or less taken up by the High Court on appeal; but in the end the real questions resolve themselves into two, and into two only. The case has to do with the fate of the zemindari of Chemudu, which at the relevant time was possessed by a zemindar of the name of Chandra Raj. During his lifetime, and after him, the estate was more or less in the hands of a set of people who seem to have indulged in every form of money lending, in suits to evade their creditors, and, indeed, in every tortuous device which is, unfortunately, too well known in India. On the 19th January, 1888, the zemindar executed a mortgage. The present suit is one in respect of a sale in execution of a very small debt of Rs. 300 and it was raised by one Jagannadha against the representative of Chandra Raj and against Appan Dhora, who was the mortgagee under the mortgage mentioned. There is extant a sale-deed of the 12th March, 1889, and if that sale-deed is valid, it at once cuts out any possible claim against Chandra Raj, but it leaves, as will appear presently, a certain claim against Appan Dhora. The main question which was raised in the case was: Was this deed of the 12th March 1889, a valid deed, or was it not? Their Lordships do not think it necessary to go piece by piece through the various items of evidence which have been examined by the learned District Judge and the learned Judges in the High Court. In a case such as this, where the question depends, not upon any question of law, but upon the general conclusion that is to be drawn from many minute portions of the evidence, it is evident that their Lordships would not disturb the judgment of the Court below unless there were brought before them particular instances of where the Court below had gone wrong. Their Lordships do not find any such instances here, and they have, therefore, no hesitation upon this point in affirming the judgment of the learned Judges in the Court below, and saying that they are quite satisfied with the sufficiency of the reasons that they have set forth. But while this disposes of the case so far as Chandra Raj is concerned, it does not entirely dispose of the case as far as Appan Dhora is concerned, because the sale-deed is, of course, under the burden of the mortgage, and what is still due on the mortgage must be paid. The mortgage was in this form, there were only Rs. 10,000 advanced in actual cash, the other consideration being that a certain scheduled list of debts was to be paid by the mortgagees. That scheduled list of debts is before their Lordships. It is at page 113 of the Record, and it is headed: "Particulars of all debts which constitute a charge on our estate . . . which have to be discharged by you, as stated by me." Then follow a number of debts due to various people. It is admitted that, so far as all these debts are concerned, the whole thing has remained a dead letter; nothing ever was done under it. It is also admitted that so far as the Rs. 10,000 in cash were concerned, they have been duly repaid; but at the end of the list there is an item of Rs. 9,500, "the loan previously got through Appan Dhora and to be repaid to the same Appan Dhora." It is now pleaded that this at least ought to be given to the plaintiff in right of his judgment. Their Lordships admit that this matter has given them considerable trouble, because undoubtedly if there is a scheduled list of debts in a deed, it would be in general necessary to show that that was wrong. But, on the whole, their Lordships think that there is not enough to lead them to disagree with the learned Judges of the High Court.

The matter seems to stand thus. There is no evidence whatever, except the recital, that these Rs. 9,500 were ever paid to Chandra Raj, and, moreover, there were these very pregnant circumstances. In the first place, who was Appan Dhora? He was the confidential servant of Chandra Raj, of whom it is known that he attempted, falsely after Chandra Raj's death, to father on him a supposititious child, and who, on the attempt being opposed, disappeared. The deed was executed by a man of eighty-two within two days of his death, and then there is the still more pregnant fact that although the Rs. 10,000 were repaid, not only were these Rs. 9,500 not repaid, but no claim was ever made in respect of them during all the twelve years that have elapsed. Those circumstances led the learned Judges of the High Court to consider that really there was no proof whatsoever that this sum remained due, and, accordingly, they did not give effect to the plaintiff's view upon this part of the case.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

A lessee whether permanent or not is not a "proprietor" within the meaning of s. 49 of the C. P. Tenancy Act and does not retain any interest as an occupancy tenant in the sir land comprised within his lease on the determination of the lease.

[p. 256, col. 2.]

Under s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, a transfer during the pendency of a suit, of property directly and specifically in question in the suit, cannot affect the rights of any other party thereto with respect to any decree or order which may be made therein. [p. 256, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 23rd February 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 186 of 1923.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case raises an important point of law under the Tenancy Act.

The facts are that the plaintiff, who is the Mokasdar of Mouza Saigaon, leased an 8-annas share of the village, including the sir and khudkast, to one Gopala in perpetuity. In 1917 Gopala mortgaged his rights in favour of the defendants. Gopala died in 1919. After his death the defendants sued his widows on the mortgage. The suit was instituted on 27th July 1920 and a preliminary decree was passed on 15th September 1920 in the defendants' favour, the final decree being passed on 10th August 1921 On 7th September 1920, during the pendency of this litigation, Gopala's widows surrendered all their rights in the property to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendants for possession of the sir fields only. The First Court dismissed the suit, holding that under s. 49 of the present Tenancy Act the widows of Gopala became ex-proprietary occupancy tenants of the sir land and, therefore, the farkatnama, on which the plaintiff relied, could not be registered under paragraph (2) of the same section as the right of occupancy was not reserved and the deed was, therefore, void under the ruling in Nilkant v. Ghulya (1) and also that the principle of lis pendens applied to the suit, the farkatnama having been passed during the pendency of the defendants' suit on Gopala's mortgage.

On appeal, the District Judge, Nagpur, reversed the decision of the First Court, holding that Gopala and his heirs the widows were not proprietors within the meaning of s. 49 of the Tenancy Act, and that the doctrine of lis pendens does not vitiate the farkatnama, and remanded the suit for disposal on the merits.

The defendants make this second appeal.

(1) 12 Ind. Cas. 384; 13 N. L. R. 165.

The principal point raised in appeal is whether the term "proprietor" used in s. 49 of the Tenancy Act includes a permanent lessee or thekadar, so as to render it impossible for him to divest himself of occupancy rights in the sir land. This is a question which does not appear to have arisen before in this Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the District Judge has relied merely on the definition of "proprietor" given in s. 2, cl. (13), of the Land Revenue Act. The learned Pleader of the appellants refers to the definition of "sir-land" given in s. 2, cl. (17), of that Act and says that the land was recorded under s. 68. Under s. 68 of the Land Revenue Act, Explanation (1), it is stated that "in this section 'proprietor' includes a transferee of proprietary rights and a thekadar with protected status, but not a malik-makbuza." It is urged that khudkasht land, which has been continuously cultivated by the transferee for six years consecutively, becomes his sir land.

It is contended that the land becomes sir by reason of the lessee's personal cultivation of it, and, therefore, for the purposes of s. 68, the widows of Gopala are the proprietors of the sir land.

The learned Pleader for the appellants further refers to s. 47, cl. (4), of the Land Revenue Act, and argues that Gopala or his widows were the persons, lawfully entering into possession of the proprietary right, and also refers to the rules under s. 50, printed on page 49 of the Land Revenue Act, in which r. 1 lays down that "the term 'proprietary rights and interests in land' used in s. 47, sub-s. (2), shall be deemed to include the rights and interests of a transferee of proprietary rights in possession, a thekadar with protected status, a mortgagee with possession and a lessee, holding under a lease for a period exceeding one year, but shall not include the rights and interests of a malik-makbuza."

He further relies on Explanation to s. 53, which runs: "In this section 'proprietor' includes a transferee of proprietary rights in possession and a thekadar with protected status." He also refers to ss. 187, 202 and 203 of the Land Revenue Act, in all of which sections the word "proprietor" is declared to include "a transferee of proprietary rights in possession and a thekadar with protected status."

It is further contended that if Gopala was not a proprietor, there could not have been any sir land in the village at all, as personal cultivation by a proprietor is necessary to constitute sir land. The appellants' Pleader further relies on the ruling in Sheoram v. Tikaram (2), where it is stated that "the sir right is undoubtedly made up of two parts, one the proprietary and the other the occupancy, and it can accrue synthetically by the union of these two parts in the same person."

It is further argued that the sir land of the protected thekadar is recognized by s. 107 of the Land Revenue Act. The effect of this argument is to show that the lessee of a village acquires by law permanent rights in it and cannot be got rid of; as if the argument is correct he cannot lose occupancy rights in the sir land.

It is further contended that there is no distinction between a permanent lessee and a permanent alienee, and that Gopala divested the plaintiff of the plaintiff's proprietary rights, and, therefore, under s. 49 of the Land Revenue Act Gopala or his widows must be considered proprietors and are entitled to the occupancy rights in the sir.

It is contended on behalf of the respondent that under the proviso to cl. (17) of s. 2, Land Revenue Act, sir land ceases to be so when it becomes the subject of a tenancy, and again becomes so on the revival of the proprietary right, and that this is the temporary loss of proprietary rights referred to in s. 49 of the Tenancy Act.

It is further argued that under s. 82 of the Land Revenue Act a special exception is made in the case of a mortgagee, who is the transferee of proprietary rights, but no such exception is made in the case of a lessee. Section 68 of the Land Revenue Act does not require that sir land should be continuously cultivated by a proprietor himself or by his lessee. But this does not mean that the sir would be the sir of the lessee or thekadar to the exclusion of the proprietor. There is a special reference in this section to the word "proprietor," including lessee or thekadar; and throughout the Land Revenue Act, where the Act proposes to impose a duty on persons actually in possession or managing the village, it says so: cf. s. 2, sub-s. (21) of the Land Revenue Act, referring to village cesses, and s. 53 which refers to the maintenance of boundary lines in villages adjoining Government forest.

It is further contended that the ordinary meaning of a proprietor does not include a lessee and that if it were intended to include it in s. 49 of the Tenancy Act, it would have stated so. It is contended that it was never suggested that this land was khudkast, which had become sir land owing to the occupation by the defendants.

It is further pointed out that the appellants' argument is a reductio ad absurdum. That if a proprietor leases his land to a lessee for, say, 5 or 10 years, and the lessee transfers his rights, he, according to the appellants' contention, becomes an ex-proprietor and occupancy tenant. He can never re-gain the proprietary rights on the expiry of the lease, as the lessor re-enters. But the lessor would be unable to re-gain possession of the sir land although it had been leased for a limited period only. I think there is a good deal of force in this argument. It can never have been intended by the Legislature that the lessee should be entitled to retain the possession of the sir land as an occupancy tenant against the original proprietor after the expiry of the lease. The lease in the present case is a permanent one and has been terminated by the consent of both parties.

It is further pointed out that under s. 2, sub-s. (11) of the Tenancy Act, "thekadar" which is merely the vernacular word for "lessee" is not a tenant, and that if he were a proprietor, there was no necessity of excluding him from the definition of "tenant." The strongest argument, however, in favour of the respondent is that derived from s. 107 and the following sections of the Land Revenue Act, which deal with "thekadars." Under s. 107 it is open to the Deputy Commissioner to confer on the thekadars "the rights of an occupancy tenant in respect of the whole or part of his sir land or khudkast and determine the rent payable by him." This shows that the thekadar is not a proprietor, as he cannot be his own occupancy tenant, and there would be no necessity of this provision if under s. 49 of the Tenancy Act the occupancy rights in the sir land vested in a thekadar, and cannot be taken away from him.

It is further contended that under the Transfer of Property Act there is a distinction between a permanent lease and a sale, and that some rights remain in the lessor. In the present case Rs. 60 rent has to be paid, and if rent is reserved the lessee does not become proprietor. Under the Land Revenue Act, assessment is settled with a proprietor and not with a lessee. There is no reference to proprietary rights in s. 107 of the Land Revenue Act, which deals with thekadars.

It is further argued that under s. 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, the lessee can yield up his interest to the lessor. There is no reason why he should be bound to continue as a lessee against his will, which should be the result of holding that his interest as an occupancy tenant in the sir land was an interest of which he could not divest himself. I am of opinion that the contention of the respondent is correct for the reasons which have been argued by the learned Counsel for him.

It would be absurd to suppose that if a proprietor leased land including sir land to a lessee, the lessee should acquire permanent occupancy rights in the sir land after the expiration of his lease. If such had been the intention of the Legislature, there would be some provision to that effect. Chapter IX of the Land Revenue Act leads to the conclusion that a thekadar is not a proprietor within the meaning of the Land Revenue Act. Throughout that Chapter, a distinction is made between the proprietor and the thekadar. I may point out that under s. 111 of the Land Revenue Act, where a protected thekadar forfeits his protection, the Deputy Commissioner may reserve to him the rights of an occupancy tenant in the whole or part of his sir land or khudkasht. This provision obviously indicates that this reservation of occupancy rights in favour of the thekadar is a matter of grace and not a matter of right, and no such provision would be necessary if a thekadar was a proprietor and, therefore, entitled by law to retain the rights of an occupancy tenant in the sir land, in any circumstances under the provisions of s. 49 of the Tenancy Act.

The learned Pleader for the appellants has drawn a distinction between the case of a permanent lessee and that of a thekadar. But, as I have already said, thekadar is only the kindi word for lessee. The fact of the lease in this case being a permanent lease does not make any difference, as such a lease is terminable under s. 111, para. (e), of the Transfer of Property Act, by express surrender, and has, as a matter of fact, been so terminated. When, therefore, a lease terminates, the rights of a lessee in perpetuity terminate, whereas on the interpretation of the law put forward by the appellants the lessee would be compelled to remain as a lessee or occupancy tenant of the sir land, even against his will. This appears to me to be a reductio ad absurdum, and in the absence of any clear statement to that effect in the Tenancy Act I have no hesitation in holding that the interpretation put upon s. 49 of the Tenancy Act by the appellants is not correct and that a lessee, whether permanent or not, is not a proprietor within the meaning of that section, and, therefore, he does not retain any interest as an occupancy tenant in the sir land on the determination of the lease.

It is further contended that in para. 4 of his judgment the District Judge has held that the defendants' mortgage did not give them any proprietary rights in the sir land, as it excludes cultivating rights, and in para. 5 he says that pleadings should be recorded on the point, if so, it is contended, there should be no finding in para. 4 that the proprietary rights were not mortgaged.

The learned Pleader for the appellants has discussed the meaning of the words sir saine in the mortgage-deed. It is contended that under s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act the transfer pendente lite could not transfer even the proprietary rights in the sir to the plaintiffs. The question whether the proprietary rights or the cultivating rights in the sir were excluded from the mortgage-deed, is affected by the fact that the decree already passed in the suit on the defendants' mortgage does not mention the sir fields. Under s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act the transfer, during the pendency of the suit, of the property, directly and specifically in question, cannot affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein. We are only concerned in this appeal with the sir land, and as the decree does not give the defendants any rights to sir land, s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. II, r. 2—Res judicata—Inconsistent suits.

Where a claim made in a subsequent suit, if added to the claim in a previous suit, would have been likely to embarass the trial of the suit or to place the plaintiff in a false position, it must be held that it was not incumbent upon the plaintiff to ask for that relief in the former suit, and a suit to enforce such relief cannot, therefore, be barred by the operation of the rule of res judicata. [p. 253, col. 1.]

Mahomed Ibrahim Abdul Rahman v. Sheikh Hamja Mahommedally, 12 Ind. Cas. 387; 35 B. 507; 13 Bom. L. R. 895, Veerana Pillai v. Muthukumara Asary, 27 M. 102 and Mohandar Singh v. Janki Singh, 2 A. L. J. 342, referred to.

The mere fact that the parties to a subsequent suit are the same as those to a previous suit and that some allegations are common to both the suits, does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the second suit is barred by res judicata.

Plaintiff brought a suit to set aside a sale-deed on the ground that it was fictitious, was not made to pass title and that she had received no portion of the consideration money. It was found that she was entitled to avoid the sale but that she had received a portion of the consideration and a decree was granted in her favour for recovery of possession of the property dealt with by the sale-deed on payment of the sum held to have been received by her as consideration for the sale. She failed to pay the amount and to execute the decree. Subsequently she brought a suit to recover the balance of the consideration money:

Held, that the relief which was claimed in the subsequent suit was entirely inconsistent with the position taken up by the plaintiff in the previous suit and that, therefore, she could not have asked for the relief in the previous suit and that consequently her suit was not barred by res judicata. [p. 258, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 5th January 1923.

Mr. D. C. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for determination in this appeal is one of law, namely, whether the present suit is barred as res judicata on account of a previous judgment.

The facts involved in the point of law are briefly these:

The respondent, who was the plaintiff in the Court of first instance, brought a suit in the year 1917 against the defendant-appellant for the setting aside, inter alia, of a sale-deed, executed by her on the 13th of April 1914 in favour of the appellant. She said that the sale-deed was a fictitious one, that no title was meant to pass by it, that although it was, on the face of it, for the sum of Rs. 2,000 she got no portion of the consideration money, that her statement before the Sub-Registrar that she had received a consideration of Rs. 1,600 was false and that the sum of Rs. 400 that was actually handed over to her before the Sub-Registrar had been returned by her after the registration of the document was over. On these allegations, she sought cancellation of the sale-deed and also recovery of possession of the house.

The Court of first instance held that the sale was obtained in circumstances under which it was open to her to avoid it. But it also held that she had received a portion of the consideration money. A decree was accordingly made in favour of the plaintiff for recovery of possession of the house on condition of payment of a certain amount of money. The plaintiff appealed and she contested the findings that she had to pay any thing at all. The learned District Judge, who heard the appeal reduced the amount payable by her but otherwise upheld the decree. By the final decree that was passed in the case the plaintiff was ordered to pay a sum of Rs. 600 within a certain period of time and it was further ordered that in case of default of payment the suit should stand dismissed. The plaintiff failed to pay the sum of Rs. 600 and the result was that her suit for recovery of possession stood dismissed. Thereafter, the respondent brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, for the recovery of Rs. 1,400 being the balance of the purchase-money, by the sale of the property sold. She evidently wanted to enforce what is known as vendor's lien over the property.

The defence, inter alia, was that the suit was barred as res judicata and this is the only point which we have to decide in this appeal.

Both the Courts have found against the defendant. In the various cases that have come before the Court from time to time the question of res judicata has been decided on the facts of each case. It would always be difficult to get a case exactly in point. The principle laid down, however, seems to be this, that where the subsequent claim, if added to the former claim was likely to embarass the trial of the suit or was likely to place the plaintiff in a false position, it would not be incumbent on the plaintiff to ask for the relief in the second suit, along with the relief asked for in the earlier suit. For example in the case of Mahomed Ibrahim Abdul Rahman v. Shcikh Hamja Mahomedally (1) a suit was brought for redemption and it having failed a second suit was brought in ejectment. It was held that the second suit was not barred as res judicata. Similarly in Veerana Pillai v. Muthukumara Asary (2), a mortgagee brought a suit for sale and it was held that his mortgage was really an usufructuary one and he could not maintain a suit for sale. Then he brought a second suit for recovery of possession on foot of the same mortgage. It was held that the second suit was maintainable. In Mahandar Singh v. Janki Singh (3) a suit was brought claiming an entire property. It was dismissed, the Court having found that the parties were joint owners. The second suit of the plaintiffs, for a declaration that they were entitled to collect a half share of the rents from the land was held to be maintainable.

It will, therefore, be seen from these cases that simply because the parties to both the suits are the same and some allegations common it does not necessarily follow that a second suit brought by the same plaintiff should be held barred as res judicata.

Coming to the facts of the case. As already stated, the plaintiff wanted a declaration that the sale was fictitious that it was obtained from her by fraud and that she received not a single shilling out of the consideration money. Under the circumstances. the plaintiff could not very well say, in the same breath, that if the Court held the sale to be a genuine one she should be given the sum of Rs. 1,400 as a part of the consideration money, she having received the balance.

The second 'ground of attack' would have been entirely inconsistent with her first case and any evidence that she might lead on the two contradictory cases was not at all likely to be accepted by the Court.

We hold that in the circumstances of the present case the second suit is not barred as res judicata.

The appeal fails and is hereby dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

COMMITTEE OF MANAGEMENT OF HYDERABAD—APPLICANT

Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901), ss. 59, 60, 71—Water supplied by Municipality through private connection—Charge leviable, whether "tax"—Rules regulating supply of water and payment therefor—Procedure.

Where it is optional with the owner of certain premises to have water supplied to him by the Municipality by means of a private connection and the water is so supplied to him under an arrangement with him, the payment which the owner is required to make in respect of the supply of water cannot be regarded as a "tax" which has been "imposed" upon the owner. It is merely the price of water supplied to him by the Municipality. Such a charge does not constitute a tax imposed within the meaning of s. 59 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, but is only a payment due under s. 71 sub-s. (1) cl. (b) of the Act. The rules relating to the levy of such a charge cannot, therefore, be regarded as ultra vires and illegal merely because they have not been made in accordance with the provisions of s. 60 of the Act. [p. 259, col. 1; p. 262, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Sub-Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, for the Applicant.

Mr. Isardas Oodharam, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

Fawcett, J. C.—The plaintiff has sued the Committee of Management of Hyderabad for refund of certain payments made by him on account of charges for water supplied to him by the Municipality through a private connection to his house. His contention is that these charges were made under certain rules sanctioned by the Commissioner-in-Sind in his letter No. 49 dated 12th January 1917, and that these rules are illegal because, they were made without objections being invited thereto, in accordance with the provisions of s. 60 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901. The First Class Subordinate Judge, Hyderabad, who heard the case in his small causes jurisdiction has allowed this contention and passed a decree in plaintiff's favour. The Committee of Management now apply to this Court in revision.

The contention of the defendants both in this Court and the lower Court, is that the charges in question do not constitute a tax imposed under s. 59 of the Municipal Act but are payments due under s. 71, sub-s. (1) cl. (b) of the Act. If this contention be correct then (unless charging such payments amounts to imposing a tax) it is clear that the provisions of s. 60, on which the plaintiff relies do not apply, for that section only prescribes that every Municipality before imposing a tax shall observe the preliminary procedure there laid down. If a tax is not imposed, then that procedure is not required. All that s. 71, sub-s. (1) cl. (b) in itself requires is an agreement with the person to whom the water is supplied. Section 46 cl. (1), however, provides for the Municipality making rules "prescribing, subject to the provisions of Ch. VII, the taxes to be levied in the Municipal District for Municipal purposes, and amongst other things the limits of the charges or payments to be fixed in lieu of any tax under s. 71". Apart from the words "subject to the provisions of Ch. VII" such rules do not require preliminary publication for the purpose of inviting objections, but merely require the sanction of the Governor-in-Council or the Commissioner under proviso (a) to s. 46. The words "subject to the provisions of Ch. VII" cannot in themselves make the provisions of s. 60 applicable to a case which is outside the particular one dealt with in it, namely the case where a Municipality proposes to impose a tax. If, therefore, the contention of the defendants is correct, then I think it is clear that this objection of the plaintiff to the rules in question falls to the ground.

The first thing, therefore, is to see exactly what are the facts in regard to the rules objected to by the plaintiff. These are contained in Ex. 17, which are headed "Revised private water service rules, (as sanctioned by the Commissioner-in-Sind in his No. 49 dated 12th January 1917)". These lay down certain rates to be charged for water supplied by pipe to private lands or buildings. In this connection the applicant's Counsel has referred us to the "Rules for the supply of water to private individuals," which are contained in the published Manual of Revised Rules and Bye-Laws of the Hyderabad (Sind) Municipality, as sanctioned by the Commissioner-in-Sind in his letter No. 787 dated 30th June 1914, at pp. 92 and 93. He states that the rules in Ex. 17 are merely an alteration of r. 6 of these rules. It is objected by Mr. Isardas for the opponent that these rules have not been exhibited in the case. No doubt this is so, but as they purport to be rules having the force of law in the Hyderabad Municipal District, we can take Judicial notice of them under s. 57 (1) of the Evidence Act; and it is further to be noted, that this Manual was referred to in the evidence of the Assistant Chief Officer Mr. Khubchand, who said that the general water tax rules were those at pages 74 and 75 of this printed Manual, so it was presumably before the Court. It is also obviously essential that we should be in a position to know the exact facts in regard to the charges objected to; and it is a case where (if necessary) the rules should be admitted as additional evidence in this application. These rules are headed "Rules for the supply of water to private individuals" and begin "The Municipality will supply water to private persons on the following terms." Rule 2 then provides that on the application of any person the Managing Committee may, if it thinks fit, comply with his request to lay a pipe in his house or premises. Rule 3 provides for the pipe being laid under the control of the Municipality and at the cost of the applicant, and r. 4 provides for any Hindu servant of the Municipality or water works establishment having a right to enter the house of any person to inspect or repair the pipe, and for recovering the cost of any such repairs from the water rate-payer. Rule 5 requires a report of any accident to the pipe and its repair as soon as possible, under the control of the Municipality. Rule 6 states that the rate at which water will be supplied will be settled annually at the general meeting of the Municipality in January. Rule 17 prescribes that the rate shall be levied yearly and allows a refund of one-third the amount paid to a person giving notice that his pipe may be cut off, provided he has used the pipe for not more than two months of the half year. Rule 8 is regarding water being used for irrigation purposes, in which case the rate is to be fixed by mutual agreement. Rule 9 provides that if any accident occurs to the pipe, or if from any proper reason there is a stoppage in the water supply or a defective supply, the rate-payer shall not be entitled to claim any reduction in the rate, but compensation may be granted by the Managing Committee, provided application is made within 2 months. Rule 10 says "the Municipality may at any time stop the supply of water to private houses whenever it may appear to them for the benefit of the public that it should be stopped and they shall not be liable to any civil action for so doing."

Reading Ex. 17 with these rules, there can, I think, be no reasonable doubt that the rules in that exhibit are an alteration of r. 6 just referred to so that instead of the rate at which water will be supplied being settled annually at the general meeting of the Municipality in January it is fixed permanently in accordance with Ex. 17. The rules at pp. 92 and 93 of the Manual of Rules and Bye-Laws are not otherwise affected except that the rate for watering gardens is expressly provided for in rr. 10 to 13 of Ex. 17 instead of being left indefinite, as it is in r. 8 of the other rules. This alteration did not, however, affect the plaintiff. It is further I think, quite clear that the rules are ones under s. 46 (i) read with s. 71 (1) of the Municipal Act. The main provision in the rules is that "the Municipality will supply water to private persons on the following terms," and this clearly makes an offer to such private persons to supply them with water on the terms there laid down. It is quite different to the form followed in the general water-rate rules which provides that "a water rate throughout the town of Hyderabad shall be levied as follows" (page 75 of the Manual). The rules also comply with provisos (a) and (b) to s. 71, in all the matters there specified. Thus under rr. 2 and 5 the laying down of the pipe and its repair are at the applicants' cost, and under rr. 3, 4 and 5 it is under the control of the Municipality. There are provisions as to the stoppage of the supply in rr. 5, 9 and 10, and as to the limit of the supply in r. 8. Rule 7 furthermore provides for periodical payment such as is mentioned in cl. (b) of sub-s. (1) and the amended rules in Ex. 17 further specify a rate according to the quantity as ascertained by measurement and different rates for water supplied for domestic, irrigational, trade purposes, etc., as contemplated by s. 71 (a) and (b). Therefore, the form of the rules does very strongly support the defendants' contention, and a further fact, that is almost conclusive on the point, is that the payments depend on the actual supply of water and are not, like a general water-rate, leviable, whether the rate-payer takes the water or not. Thus as already mentioned r. 7 enables the rate-payer to have his pipe cut off, and thereupon he ceases to be liable to the rate. This distinction will be clearly seen by reference to the provisions of ss. 140 and 141 of the Bombay City Municipal Act, III of 1888, compared with the provisions of s. 169, on which those of s. 71 (1) of the District Municipal Act are obviously based. In the case of a water-tax under s. 141 the Municipality has power to enforce the rate, even though there be no actual pipe connection to a house, and if there had been a similar provision in these rules, then no doubt the case would be on a very different footing. But taking the rules as they stand, it is, in my opinion, a case where the liability of the plaintiff for the rate depends not on the fact of its being imposed under ss. 59 and 60 of the Act, but on an arrangement of the kind referred to in s. 71 (a) (b) by the Municipality with him or his predecessor-in-title, who applied to have a pipe connection.

The question, however, still remains whether the rate chargeable under these rules, though being dependant on such an arrangement, is in effect a tax imposed within the meaning of ss. 59 and 60 of the Act. On this point, there is a very high authority in the decision of the Court of Appeal in Badcock v. Hunt (1). That was a case where a lease contained a covenant requiring the lessor to pay all rates, taxes and impositions whatsoever imposed by the Corporation of the City of London or otherwise howsoever, and the lessee sought to recover from the lessor the water rates which he had paid in respect of water supplied to the premises for domestic purposes by the New River Company under the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. It was held that such water-rates were not rates or impositions imposed on or in respect of the premises within the meaning of the covenant and, therefore, the lessees were not entitled to recover the same from the lessor. In his judgment Lord Esher, M. R. said: "The words here are, 'all rates, taxes, and impositions whatsoever, whether Parliamentary Parochial, or imposed by the Corporation of the City of London, or otherwise howsoever." The question appears to me to be whether this water-rate can be said to be a rate or imposition 'imposed,' within the meaning of those words. I do not think that it can. I do not think that a charge to which a person can only be made liable with his own consent can be said to be imposed upon him within the meaning of this covenant. If a man buys things in a shop, the liability to pay the price may be said in one sense to be imposed upon him by law, but that is not, in my opinion, the sense in which the terms 'imposed' and 'imposition' are used in this covenant."

Fry, L. J. said: "I am of the same opinion. It is argued that this charge for water or so-called water-rate is a rate or imposition within the meaning of this covenant. It is a rate in one sense, because it is so called in the Statute, but it is in substance a payment for water supplied. The obligation to pay it is one which is voluntarily incurred by the person supplied, because he is not bound to take the water. The water Company, is compelled to supply if required, but the occupier is not bound to take a supply."

Lopes, L. J. said: "I am clearly of opinion that this is not a rate or imposition within the words of the covenant, any more than the price of wine or beer which had been supplied to the occupier of the premises would be such a rate or imposition."

This ruling applies directly to the present case. The more so, inasmuch as the Municipal Act invariably in connection with a tax used the word "imposed" and the definition of tax contained in s. 3 (14) of the Act implies that a rate, in order to be a tax, must be an "impost" i. e., imposed under ss. 59 and 60 of the Act. That an arrangement under s. 71 (1)(b) is not such a tax is further shown by the provision in sub-s. (4) of s. 71 that every sum claimed by the Municipality as due under sub-s. (1) shall be recoverable in the same manner as an amount claimed on account of any tax recoverable. If such a payment was a tax then such a provision would be obviously unnecessary, for it would be recoverable under the provisions of Ch. VIII without any further provision.

The Subordinate Judge has discussed this question in his judgment. The reasons he gives for not agreeing with the contention that this is a case of a contractual charge are five in number. The first is that the way in which a Municipality enters into contracts is provided for by s. 40, under which a special mode of executing contracts is laid down, and he says there is no evidence nor even suggestion that there is any such contract between the plaintiff and Municipality also that a mere application by the plaintiff cannot be regarded as a contract. The classes of contracts dealt with in s. 40 are, however, those in which the Municipality leases, sells or otherwise transfers property or which it considers necessary or expedient to enter into in order to carry into effect the provisions and purposes of the Municipality Act, (s. 40 sub-s.(1)). It obviously contemplates formal contracts which are reduced to writing and does not, in my opinion, cover a case like the one now in question. For s. 71 (1) (b) does not use the words "enter into a contract with any person" but merely the words "arrange with any person", and it does not say that the terms and conditions shall be fixed by written agreement with such person, as it does in sub-s. (2) cl. (ii) of the same section, but merely "as they shall fix by agreement with such person." A written agreement is, therefore, not requisite and the reason for this is obvious. The terms which the Municipality offers are contained in the rules and those terms are impliedly accepted by a person receiving water through a private pipe connection, so as to make a valid agreement under ss. 8 and 9 of the Contract Act. Similarly when a Municipal peon is engaged, there is a contract of master and servant between the parties, but it would be absurd to say that written contract in accordance with the provisions of s. 40 are required in order to make it a valid agreement. Yet this would be the result of the Sub-Judge's interpretation of s. 40. The contract in such a case is made by the person accepting his appointment on the terms laid down in the Act and the rules thereunder. And in any case the plaintiffs' objection to the rules is not based on any plea of there being no valid contract.

The second reason given is that s. 71 appears in special provisions relating to certain taxes. This, no doubt, is the sub-heading under which the section appears but it does not show that a charge or payment under cls. (a) and (b) of s. 71 sub-s. 1, is, therefore, a tax. These provisions relate to certain taxes, because as stated in sub-s. 1 the Municipality may, instead of imposing a water-rate, etc., do what is authorized by those clauses, and as already pointed out, the provisions of sub-s. (4) imply that the Legislature did not regard such a charge or payment as itself a tax.

The third reason is that the water-rate for private service is as much a general tax as a general water-rate relating to public hydrants. This, however, is not correct, for the general water-rate is imposed whether or not the water is taken, and without the rate-payer's consent, whereas this water rate is only leviable if the water is actually supplied and the rate payer consents to its being supplied. There is a clear distinction between the two, as is pointed out in the case of Badcock v. Hunt (1).

The fourth reason is that s. 71 (1) (b) contemplates the case of supply of water by meter or arrangement in individual cases of cantonments, railways, religious and secular public institutions and the like. No authority is given for this view and it is opposed to the wording of cl. (b) which makes no reference to measurement as does cl. (a) and says "arrange with any persons", not with any body of persons of the kind mentioned above.

The fifth reason is that the Municipality has in all previous revisions of water-rate issued notices and has also issued a similar notice in the new proposed revision of water-rates. This may be true but it does not affect the legal question already discussed.

It is only evidence of conduct which might lend support to the plaintiff's contention, if the point were not free from doubt. And such notices were required by law in the other case mentioned because the rules as to stoppage and limit of the supply (Nos. 5, 8, 9 and 10) fall under s. 48 (k), and, therefore, have to be previously published under s. 48 (2). An alteration of the rules as to charges or payments, like that contained in Ex. 17, falls on the other hand under s. 46 (i) and requires no such previous notice. It may also be remarked that s. 60 requires a notice in the particular form of Sch. A, and Sch. A is confined to a notice of a desire to impose a tax, rate etc. This is further evidence that s. 60 is not intended to apply to the case where a rate is not a tax, but is chargeable under an obligation which is voluntarily incurred by being supplied with water on payment.

I am, therefore, of opinion, that the lower Court erred in holding that it was necessary for the Committee of Management to publish the alterations in Ex. 17 in the form of Sch. A; and that in consequence of their not having done so the levy of the water-rate in dispute was illegal. In this connection, it may be noted that the alterations were in one way less prejudicial to the plaintiff than the old r. 6, under which he was bound to pay any rate that the Municiaplity might fix. It is also in evidence that the alterations were published after being sanctioned, and the plaintiff had, therefore, prior notice of the alterations. If he considered the amount that he had to pay was too high, the proper remedy lay in his hands. He could have applied to have his pipe cut off.

I hold, therefore, that there was an error of law on the part of the lower Court and would reverse its decree and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act (II of 1903), ss. 2, 16- Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25 r-Execution of decree of Small Cause Court on Regular Side—Appeal, second, whether lies—Revision—Trees constituting grove, whether land.

Appellant obtained a decree from the Court of Small Causes against the respondent. The decree was transferred to the Court of the Munsif in order to enable the decree-holder to attach immoveable property. The appellant sought the attachment of certain groves held by the judgment-debtor in an area to which the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act applied. The respondent objected that under s. 16 of the Act the groves were not saleable in execution of the decree. The objection was allowed by the Executing Court and its order was upheld on appeal. Appellant came up to the High Court in second appeal:

Held, (1) that a second appeal was barred by the provisions of s. 102 of the C. P. C.;

(2) that the order of the lower Appellate Court was, however, subject to revision under s. 25 of the provincial Small Cause Courts Act;

(3) that the trees which constituted the groves, apart from the land on which they stood, were not "land" within the meaning of the definition laid down in s. 2 of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act, and that, therefore, s. 16 of the Act was not a bar to the sale of the trees appertaining or belonging to the groves held by the respondent in execution of appellant's decree.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken that no second appeal lies and that objection seems to be valid.

It appears that the decree-holder, the appellant in this case, obtained a decree from the Court of Small Causes against the respondent. The decree was transferred to the Court of Munsif, Allahabad, in order to enable the decree-holder to attach immoveable property. He sought the attachment of certain groves, held by the judgment-debtor, in an area to which the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act applies. The judgment-debtor objected that under s. 16 of the above mentioned Act the groves were not saleable in execution of a decree. The decree-holder then made a statement to the effect that he wanted to sell not the groves as they stood but only the trees. Evidently he meant that the purchaser would be required to cut the trees and take the timber or wood away. The question, therefore, that arose in the case was whether the trees were, apart from the land or as a part of the groves, situated in an area to which the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act applies, saleable, the judgment-debtor being a member of the agricultural tribe.

The learned Munsif allowed the objection of the judgment-debtor and held that the trees were not saleable. The learned District Judge affirmed this decision on appeal. The decree-holder has come in second appeal.

There can be no doubt that, on the authority of this Court, a second appeal is barred under s. 102 of the C. P. C.

The decree-holder has asked this Court to take up the matter under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act. It is contended by the learned Counsel for the respondent that s. 25 has no application in a case like this. In my opinion this contention of the respondent has no force. The order has been passed "in a case decided by the Court of Small Causes" and, therefore, it is an order which is subject to a revision by the High Court.

Coming to the merits of the case, the question stands thus:—"Whether the trees as apart from the land on which they stand are 'land' within the definition of s. 2 of U. P. Act II of 1903 Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act." The definition of "land" is the following:—

"The expression 'land' means land which is not occupied as the site of any building in a town or village and is occupied or let for agricultural purposes or for purposes subservient to agriculture or for pasture, and includes etc., etc."

Now, the question is, "whether the trees are 'land', and, if so, whether the trees are 'land let for agricultural purposes or for purposes subservient to agriculture'? It will be noticed that groves are a well-known thing and abound in villages. It cannot for a moment be believed that the Legislature could possibly lose sight of the existence of such an article as a grove or even trees as apart from the land on which they stand. I am driven to the conclusion that they never meant that groves of trees should be included within the term land held for agricultural purposes or for purposes subservient to agriculture." In numerous cases decided under the U. P. Tenancy Act, 1901, the words, 'land for agricultural purposes' have been interpreted as not including groves or trees. See Kesho Prasad v. Sheo Pragash Ojha (1), affirmed by the Privy Council in Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheo Pargash Ojha (2).

I am of opinion that s. 16 of the Bundelkhand Alienation of Land Act is no bar to the selling by the appellant of the trees

*Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 101—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 19, 20, Sch. Where a subsequent mortgagee pays off a prior mortgage, an intention to hold up the mortgage redeemed as a shield for his own benefit as against intermediate mortgagees must be presumed on behalf of the person paying off the mortgage, whenever necessity arises for such a presumption. [p. 267, col. 2.]

Where a man had a right to act in either of two ways he must be assumed to have acted according to his interest. [p. 268, col. 1.]

Where a subsequent mortgagee paid off a decree obtained by a prior mortgagee the day after the execution of his own mortgage and obtained a receipt in the name of the mortgagor but kept it with himself and recited the fact of the existence of the decree on the prior mortgage in his own mortgage stating that part of the money under the mortgage was required for paying off the decree:

Held, that all the circumstances pointed to the conclusion that it was the intention of the subsequent mortgagee to keep the security under the prior mortgage alive for his own benefit. [p. 266, col. 1.]

The principle underlying s. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable to the case of a subsequent mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage. [p. 266, col. 2.]

Where a prior mortgage is paid off with money borrowed from a subsequent mortgagee and the document creating the first charge is handed over to the subsequent mortgagee, the latter is entitled to the benefit of subrogation on the principle that there is an assignment in his favour by operation of law. [p. 267, col. 1.]

The advantages of the doctrine of subrogation are available to strangers who are mere volunteers having no pre-existing rights to protect and even to persons holding under invalid transfers, for instance, a transfer made pendente lite. [p 268, col. 1.]

The question as to whether the claim of a subsequent mortgagee based upon an earlier mortgage redeemed by him is within time depends upon the question, when the amount sued for became due to the prior mortgagee with reference to Art. 132 of Sch. 1 to the Limitation Act. If the due date fixed by the prior mortgage is found to have been beyond 12 years from the date of the suit, a further question of extension of time by payment of interest or by acknowledgment within 12 years of the due date would become material. [p. 268, col. 2.]

The rule of damdupat is not applicable to the case of a mortgage where only one of the parties thereto is a Hindu and the other is a non-Hindu. This rule cannot be let into the prejudice of a Hindu creditor by a non-Hindu debtor assigning his equity of redemption to a Hindu. [p. 268, col. 2; p. 269, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 80 of 1921, dated the 13th August 1921.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant Syed Hafiz executed the following mortgage-deeds in favour of the persons named against each:—

Serial No.	No. of Exhibit.	Date of the Mortgage.	Name of the Mortgagee.	Consideration.	Remarks.
1	P-6	27-4-1904	Bhagirath Ram-Pratap.	Rs. 2,000	Civil Suit No. 48 of 1912 decreed for Rs. 1,269-13-9 (Ex. P-8) on 10-7-1912.
2		16-9-1906	Sheo Narayan, Defendant.		C. S. No. 32 of 1915 decree dated 29-9-1915.
3		23-4-1907	Sheo Narayan, Defendant.
4	P-1	6-10-1913	Narayan, Plaintiff.	Rs. 5,000

Out of the consideration of the 4th mortgage Rs. 1,250 were employed for the satisfaction of the 1st mortgage decree dated 10th July 1912 passed in Civil Suit No. 48 of 1912. The plaintiff had undertaken hawala for Rs. 3,750 which he promised but could not pay to the intermediate mortgagee Sheonarayan as the latter refused to accept it on the ground that it was insufficient to satisfy his debts (Ex. P-10). The plaintiff brings this suit upon the basis of the mortgage redeemed by him for the recovery of the amount paid with interest at the rate provided in that deed. The First Court gave plaintiff a decree against the mortgagor and the mortgagee Sheonarayan who held two intermediate mortgages, but the lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has, therefore, come up in second appeal.

In Suit No. 48 of 1912 which was brought by Bhagirath Rampratap on the basis of the mortgage dated 27th April 1904 the present plaintiff was not a party, as his mortgage came into existence to pay off the preliminary decree passed in that case. When Sheonarayan instituted his Suit No. 32 of 1915 he had, however, impleaded him as a co-defendant, but he was discharged from the suit on the ground that he having redeemed the earliest mortgage dated 27th April 1904, claimed to be subrogated to all the rights of the prior mortgagee (Ex. P-9). It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that he paid off the earliest incumbrance on 7th October 1913 (Ex. P-2). It is argued before me that the appellant's intention was to take advantage of the prior mortgage paid off by him and that it was to his benefit to keep that mortgage security alive. On the other hand it was contended for the defendants that unless there is an agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee that he shall have priority over the other intermediate mortgagees the intention to keep the mortgage intact cannot be presumed and that in the particular case inasmuch as payment of the money to the 1st mortgagee was by the hand of the mortgagor the plaintiff cannot be said to have intended that the payment was to enure for his benefit, and that even if the payment was made by the plaintiff, he acted merely as an agent of the mortgagor and as such he was performing his own obligation and no presumption of an intention to keep the prior mortgage alive, can be made in the case.

In this case the receipt dated 7th October 1913 (Ex. P-2) evidencing the payment of Rs. 1,265 to the prior mortgagee was produced in Court by the plaintiff along with his own mortgage-deed dated 6th October 1913 (Ex. P-1). As the mortgage-deed dated 27th April 1904 of which Ex. P-6 is a certified copy was sued upon by the mortgagee and already filed as an Exhibit in Suit No. 48 of 1912 (Exs. P-7 and P-8), the same could not be got back from the mortgagee. Although the receipt Ex. P-2 stands in the name of the mortgagor defendant No. 1 still the fact that the plaintiff has produced it in Court clearly shows an intention, on his part, to rely upon it, and to base his rights thereon, in case of need. The case of Seetaram v. Lachman (1) is a direct authority for this view. The fact that the plaintiff got it inserted in the mortgage-deed (Ex. P-1) that the purpose of the loan to the extent of Rs. 1,250 was to satisfy the decree passed in Suit No. 48 of 1912 clearly signifies his intention to bring into existence a piece of evidence which may hereafter be useful to prove the existence of an agreement whereunder his money was borrowed and advanced and actually employed in redeeming the earliest encumbrance. The lower Appellate Court's observation that the mortgage-deed Ex. P-1 merely refers to the decree in Suit No. 48 of 1912 (Ex. P-8) and makes mention of the mortgage Ex. P-6 is without meaning. There is absolutely no reason to think that merely because the mortgage-debt becomes merged in a mortgage-decree and only a mention of the decree and not of the mortgage was made the intention of the transferee in doing so could have been not to use the mortgage, on which the decree was based, for the purposes of claiming the benefit of the doctrine of subrogation. Whether the right to subrogation arose under a mortgage or under a decree and whether s. 74 or s. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act applied, it was immaterial as will be seen from the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gopi Narain Khanna v. Bansidhar (2). The recitals in the mortgage about the existence of the decree, coupled with the circumstance that there was an immediate payment, the next day, of the full amount due to the mortgagee, and the fact, that the receipt, evidencing the payment, was produced from the custody of plaintiff, in this case all clearly point to one conclusion, and that conclusion is that it was the intention of plaintiff to keep the mortgage security alive, and that such keeping of the mortgage security alive was for his benefit.

The second point which the District Judge seems to have made out against the plaintiff's intention to keep the mortgage security alive is the undertaking of a hawala by him to pay Rs. 3,750 to the subsequent mortgagee Sheonarayan towards the satisfaction of his two mortgages dated 16th September 1906 and 24th March 1907 and his failure to discharge that undertaking or objection. On the basis of these two documents Sheonarayan instituted his suit, in 1915, i. e., 2 years after the plaintiff took his own mortgage. The District Judge does not seem to have at all directed his attention to some of the exhibits in the case which have a direct bearing on this point. He has simply indulged in surmises of his own for which there is absolutely no foundation. Exhibit P-10 is a certified copy of a written statement filed by the plaintiff on 2nd July 1915 in Sheonarayan's Suit No. 32 of 1915. It has been duly proved by the evidence of P. W. No. 4 whose testimony was not challenged by the defendant by cross-examination. It clearly mentions in para. 3 that on or about 9th October 1913 the plaintiff had carried the amount of the hawala to the house of Sheonarayan plaintiff in that case, for being paid to him but that the latter declined to receive the same, alleging that more was due and that consequently the amount of the hawala remained unpaid. Exhibit P-10 contains in paras. 4 and 5 a distinct declaration by plaintiff of his intention in taking the mortgage dated 6th October 1913, and also an assertion on his part that he claims priority in respect of the mortgage redeemed as against the present defendant Sheonarayan's mortgages of 1906 and 1907. There is also a disclaimer in unmistakable terms of his rights under his mortgage Ex. P-1 and a demand for the money due to him on basis of the mortgage redeemed. Then we have Ex. P-9 which is a certified copy of the oral pleadings dated 2nd July 1915 wherein we find the plaintiff's Pleader stating as under :—

"Since defendent No. 2 (described through mistake as defendant No. 1) falls back upon his former mortgage and does not wish to redeem plaintiff in this suit, he should be discharged. He is not necessary party in this suit."

This Ex. P-9 also contains the following order of the Court :—

"Since defendant No. 2 Narayan Ramji claims no interest on his subsequent mortgage and falls back upon prior mortgage of Nathmal Rampratap he has redeemed, and does not wish to redeem plaintiff in this suit, he becomes an unnecessary party and is discharged."

If the lower Appellate Court had cared to look into this documentary evidence on record, and realised the real signficance thereof, or the bearing it had, on the question of plaintiff's intention, I dare say his finding would not have been as it is.

The principle underlying s. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act as laid down by the Privy Council in the leading case of Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das (3) which was applied in Seetaram v. Lachman (1) a case of a subsequent mortgagee paying off an earlier mortgage, is equally applicable to the facts of this case also:

"The obvious question to ask in the interests of justice, equity and good conscience is what was the intention of the party paying off the charge? He had a right to extinguish it and a right to keep it alive. What was his intention ? If there is no express evidence of it what intention should be ascribed to him ? The ordinary rule is that a man having a right to act in either of two ways, shall be assumed to have acted according to his interest."

The learned District Judge says that the Privy Council case is distinguishable because there the person paying was a purchaser at an execution sale. If he thereby means that s. 101 or rather the principle underlying that section is applicable only to the cases of purchasers and not to subsequent encumbrancers, I must say it is a point of distinction which has long ceased to exist. As observed by Ismay, J. C., in Seetaram v. Lachman (1) the principle is applicable to puisne mortgagees paying off prior mortgages. The District Judge's view seems to be that there should be a definite assignment of the mortgage security, and that the payment should not be made by the hand of the mortgagor. His conclusion can well be stated in his own words:—

"If the subsequent mortgagee merely pays off the prior encumbrance, or a part of the mortgage-money is retained for satisfying a prior encumbrance there can be no right of subrogation. The prior encumbrance is discharged and is not kept alive. It also seems that it is of some importance whether the prior encumbrance is discharged by the mortgagor, whether it be by money obtained from the subsequent mortgagee or not, or whether it is discharged by the subsequent mortgagee himself. The lower Court has glossed over this point and has remarked that it does not matter whether the money was actually paid by the mortgagor or by the subsequent mortgagee. This is a view with which I am unable to agree."

Even in cases where the mortgage is paid off with the money borrowed from the subsequent mortgagee, and the document creating the first charge is handed over to the subsequent mortgagee, the benefit of subrogation is available on the principle that there is an assignment by operation of law, for, in such cases, there is no need of an assignment: see Nathuram v. Sheolal (4). Their Lordships of the Privy Council, in Mahomed Ibrahim Husain Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (5) which was a case of an agreement between the mortgagor and the subsequent mortgagee followed by a payment of first charge by the mortgagor, held, that the subsequent mortgagee was clothed with the rights created by the first charge as against the mesne encumbrancer, but that in the circumstances of that case the remedy had become barred by limitation. Looking at the present case from the point of view which finds support in the Privy Council case, I fail to see why the arrangement, recited in the mortgage-deed (Ex. P-1), to the effect that Rs. 1,250 were required, and actually advanced, for redeeming the decree based on the prior mortgage, should not be held to represent an agreement between the morgagor and the plaintiff, that the latter will be entitled to subrogation, followed as it is by a payment of the first charge by the mortgagor as was done in the aforesaid Privy Council case. Justice Mittra in Nathuram v. Sheolal (4) has reproduced with approval a quotation made by the eminent Judge Sir Asutosh Mookerjee in Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamadeo Persad (6) as clearly explaining the principle of subrogation and I cite it as an authority which lays down the law correctly and clearly:

"The true principle is, that where money due upon a mortgage is paid, it shall operate as a discharge of the mortgage, or in the nature of an assignment of it, as may best serve the purposes of justice and the just intent of the parties. It makes no difference whether the party on payment of the moneys took an assignment of the mortgage or a release, or whether a discharge was made, and the evidence of the debt cancelled. The debt itself may be held still to subsist in him who paid the money, as assignee, so far as it ought to subsist, in the nature of a lien upon the land, and the mortgage be considered in force for his benefit, so far as he ought in justice to hold the land under it, as if it had been actually assigned to him."

In view of the authorities just cited I do not at all feel pressed by the argument used by the learned District Judge to defeat the plaintiff's right of subrogation. In support of the proposition that an intention to hold up the mortgage redeemed as shield for his own benefit must be always presumed in the case of a subsequent mortgagee paying off a prior mortgage, whenever necessity arises for the same, I may cite the following cases:—

Anand Prasad Dube v. Krishna Chandra Mukerji (7), Ram Sarup v. Ram Lal (8), Bai Reva v. Valimahomed Miyamahomed (9), Jaggeswar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan Mitra (10), Dinobundhu Shaw Chowdhury v. Jogmaya Dasi (11) and Chidambara Nadan v. Musuvathi Munni Nagendrayyan (12).

The law which ordinarily is an embodiment of strong common sense, will always presume the intention to keep the security alive particularly where there are intermediate encumbrances still subsisting against the mortgaged property and the continuance of the security redeemed is certainly for the benefit of the person redeeming.

It is next argued before me that the benefit of the doctrine of subrogation cannot be availed of by a stranger or a mere volunteer, who, has nothing at stake, or, who has no pre-existing rights of his own to protect, or is a person whose interest has come into being during the pendency of a mortgage suit, his transaction being invalid as against the mortgagee who is paid off on the principle of lis pendens. In view of the overwhelming authority to the contrary I see no force in this contention. The advantage of this doctrine of subrogation has been extended to all such persons in several cases decided by American, English and Indian Courts. I need only cite the following:—

Syamalarayudu v. Subbarayudu (13), Chama Swami v. Padala Anandu (14) and Tangya Fala v. Trimbak Daga (15), where several other cases are also cited in support of the extension of the benefits of the doctrine of subrogation to such strangers or persons holding invalid transfers.

There is also an additional reason why the defendant should pay off the mortgage Ex. P-6 redeemed by plaintiff. The mortgagee in favour of defendant Sheonarayan were at their date, subject to the prior encumbrance Ex. P-6 in favour of Bhagirath Rampratap. Sheo Narayan was not required to pay up the decree (Ex. P-8) based on that mortgage although he was a party to the suit No. 48 of 1912 and the decree was passed against him. That decree was paid off with the present plaintiff's money. Sheonarayan has thus reaped the advantage of the payment. In spite of the invalidity of plaintiff's mortgage (Ex. P-1) on the grounds of lis pendens as against the prior mortgagee Bhagirath Rampratap with which the defendant Sheonarayan has absolutely no concern, he is entitled to be reimbursed by the defendant with the moneys paid by him to redeem a subsisting prior charge, and therefore, to be subrogated to the position of the said prior mortgagee. The plaintiff was perfectly right and legally justified in making his election to fall back on the prior mortgage Ex. P-6 and use it as a shield in answer to the suit No. 32 of 1915 brought by Sheonarayan to enforce his own mortgages.

Having thus held that plaintiff is entitled to subrogation, the next question which I have to consider is whether the claim based upon the earlier mortgage redeemed by him is within time. This will depend upon the question when the money sued for became due, to the plaintiff, under Art. 132 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act. In view of the decision of the Privy Council in Mahomed Ibrahim Husain Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (5) followed by Mittra, A. J. C., in Nathuram v. Sheolal (4) this question must be decided with reference to the due date of mortgage which was paid off, so that if the due date as fixed by the said mortgage is beyond 12 years from the date of the suit, a further question of an extension of time by payment of interest as such or by acknowledgments within 12 years of the due date, would ordinarily become material. But in the present suit which was instituted on 12th April 1919 the cause of action is stated to have accrued on 1st January 1919. While the defendant's written statement nowhere denies this express allegation in the plaint. Under O. VIII, r. 5, C. P. C., the allegation must, therefore, be considered as admitted and the claim is, therefore, well within 12 years from the due date. There is, therefore, no necessity for me to decide in this case the question whether limitation could be counted from the date of payment that is 7th October 1913, as was done in Bora Shib Lal v. Munni Lal (16) although that is a fairly sound and arguable point.

The only other point that now remains for consideration is whether the interest to be allowed to the plaintiff should be subject to the rule of damdupat. It is contended that the principal sum left unpaid under the prior mortgage was Rs. 400 and, therefore, nothing more than Rs 800 should be claimable by the plaintiff. In the alternative it is also contended that under no circumstances the plaintiff should get more than Rs. 2,500, which is double the amount he paid for the satisfaction of that mortgage. This argument loses sight of the fact that the mortgage, Ex. P-6, was a mortgage where only one of the party thereto was a Hindu and the other was a non-Hindu.

(13) 21 M. 143; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 457.
(14) 31 M. 439; 3 M. L. T. 395; 18 M. L. J. 306.

The mere circumstance that because the person who enforces the mortgage now is a Hindu and the person against whom it is enforced is also a Hindu, instead of the original mortgagor who was a Muhammadan ought not to improve the position of the present defendant Sheonarayan for the simple reason that the rule cannot be let into the prejudice of a Hindu creditor by a non-Hindu debtor assigning his equity of redemption to a Hindu. It is interesting to find that the present defendant himself has defeated a similar objection urged on behalf of the Muhammadan mortgagor in answer to his own mortgage suit. No authority has been cited in support of this proposition but authority to the contrary is not wanting see Hiralal Girdharlal v. Nagar Jeyram (17). I, therefore, see no reason to reduce the claim of the plaintiff for interest to any extent. I, therefore, allow the appeal and set aside the decreee of the lower Appellate Court dismissing the suit, and restore that passed by the Court of first instance.

As the due date fixed by the decree of the First Court has long passed by, and the defendant is justly entitled to ask for extension of the period of redemption, it follows there must be a modification in the decree thus revived as regards the date and the price thereby fixed for redemption. I, therefore, direct that interest at the rate provided for in the prior mortgage be calculated for the period between 30th May 1921 and 13th April 1924, the date hereby fixed as the due date and the same be added to the price of redemption already fixed. Besides this, plaintiff's costs of the two appeals will be added to the price of redemption. A decree embodying these directions be passed in the case. The respondent Sheonarayan will bear his own costs throughout. The other respondents were unnecessarily joined as parties to this appeal. They will have no right of redemption and no costs as none has appeared for them.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 254 OF 1918.

September 6, 1921.

Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Shah.

MOTILAL HIRABHAI AND OTHERS—OPPONENTS NOS. 1 TO 5—APPELLANTS

versus

BAI MANI—APPLICANT—RESPONDENT.

Company—Mortgage of shares—Issue of new shares—Redemption—New shares, whether accretion.

The question whether an accretion to mortgaged Company shares by the issue of fresh capital can be treated as belonging to the corpus depends on whether accumulated profits are distributed as dividend or converted into capital. If a sum that is entered in the Balance Sheet to the credit of the Reserve Fund is transferred from the Reserve Fund to the Capital Account and new shares are issued to the existing share-holders, it may be said that there is a distribution of capital and the mortgagee is only entitled to interest on the new shares, but if the share-holders prefer that instead of getting dividends paid to them in cash, the amount to the credit of Profit and Loss Account available for payment of dividends in a particular year should be transferred to the Capital Account and new shares issued in respect thereof, there is a distribution of dividends and the mortgagee would be entitled to retain the new shares. [p. 271, col. 2.]

Plaintiff's father was the owner of certain Company shares but was entitled to retain only a certain sum out of the dividend, the balance being payable to A and G during their lifetime. Subsequently he mortgaged some of the shares with A. In the meantime the capital of the Company was increased by the issue of new shares called B shares, each of the original share-holders being allotted one B share for each old share held by him, and the B shares were to be paid for out of the dividends payable on the original shares, such dividend being payable to the share-holders at a certain rate and the balance being credited towards the calls on the B shares. After the death of A and G, plaintiff, who had become entitled to the shares, brought a suit to redeem them from the trustees of the estate of A. The plaint did not specifically mention the B shares but claimed to redeem the original shares "together with the issues thereof." The trustees of the estate of A filed a statement showing the dividends received in respect of the original shares as well as in respect of the B shares. The decree eventually passed in the suit allowed redemption of "the mortgaged shares together with the issues mentioned in the suit" and the decree was confirmed on appeal. In execution the question arose whether the mortgagor was entitled to the B shares or whether the B shares merely represented the dividend on the original shares and consequently belonged to the mortgagee:

Held, that having regard to all the circumstances of the case it was a fair inference that the profits of the Company were capitalized and that the new shares were allotted to the holders of the old shares as part of the capital and did not represent the dividends on the old shares and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to the B shares. [p. 274, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmedabad.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This is an appeal by some of the defendants in Suit No. 673 of 1918 in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Ahmedabad against an order passed by the Subordinate Judge in Darkhast No. 96 of 1918 issued by the successful plaintiff in execution of his decree. That decree provides as follows: "The plaintiff do pay Rs. 11,939-15-0 to defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and redeem from them the mortgaged shares, together with the issues mentioned in the suit and the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 do on receiving the above sum get the said shares transferred to the name of the plaintiff in the books of the defendant No. 6 Company." This decree was confirmed on appeal to the High Court.

In order to understand the questions which are at issue in this appeal it will be necessary to set out the facts relating to the mortgage which was sought to be redeemed in that suit. The plaintiff was Mani, the daughter of one Girdharlal Dalpatram, who had a dispute with one Achratlal regarding the ownership of forty-eight shares in the Ahmedabad Ginning and Manufacturing Company. That dispute was settled by arbitration. As a result, twenty-four shares were transferred by Girdharlal to Achratlal, the remaining twenty-four were to remain in the name of Girdharlal but he was only to retain Rs. 1,100 out of the dividends, the balance being payable to Achratlal and Gulab his mistress. In 1883 Girdharlal in consideration for Rs. 7,500 borrowed from Achratlal transferred to the latter five out of the twenty-four shares retained by him, Girdharlal, under the arrangement of 1883. Achratlal died in 1885 and thereafter Girdharlal not having paid the excess dividends over Rs. 1,100 to Gulab borrowed Rs. 4,439-15-0 from the trustees of Achratlal on the same security. Thereafter the trustees continued to receive the dividends on the shares. Gulab is now dead and Girdharlal is entitled to the shares and all dividends declared thereon on redemption of the mortgage. The principal issue in the suit was on what terms the plaintiff should be allowed to redeem. The defendants claimed to retain the dividends without an account being taken and also to be entitled to interest on the principal debt.

The Trial Court held that the plaintiff should be allowed to redeem on payment of the principal debt without any account being taken of interest or dividends. It is important to note that throughout the judgment the Subordinate Judge refers to the mortgaged property as consisting of five shares which were numbered in the plaint 266 to 270. The original face value was Rs. 1,000 for each share. It is admitted, however, that before 1883 for each original share a sub-share of Rs. 500 had been issued, although Beaman, J., in his judgment refers to the face value of the five shares as amounting to Rs. 7,500, as if in some way or other the sub-shares were considered as increasing the face value of the original shares. These sub-shares presumably were transferred to Achratlal although they are nowhere referred to in the judgment, but the decree allows redemption of the mortgaged shares together with the issues mentioned in the suit. It is these last words which have formed the foundation for the present dispute. The five shares numbered 266 to 270 with their five sub-shares existing at the date of the mortgage of 1883 constituted the mortgaged property, as stated in para. 4 of the plaint. But in the prayer of the plaint, the plaintiff asked for an account to be taken, and for a direction, that on payment being made, the five shares in dispute as also the issues thereof that there might be at present, should be transferred to the plaintiff's name. There was no averment that any fresh issues had come into existence after the mortgage.

Now in 1886 certain special resolutions were passed by the Company, to the effect that—

(1) The capital of the Company should be increased by Rs. 5,25,000 to be called B capital divided into 350 whole shares of Rs. 1,000 and 350 half shares of Rs. 500. To those of the present share-holders who had a whole share of Rs. 1,000 one whole share of B capital was to be given and to those who had a present half share of Rs. 500 one-half share of Rs. 500 of the B capital was to be given.

(2) At the time of declaring a dividend the share-holders should be paid a dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. in cash and the rest should be credited in the certificate for call.

We have been given to understand that the B capital has been fully paid up out of dividends declared in excess of 6 per cent. but there is nothing on the record of the suit or of the Darkhast to show by what instalments the B capital became fully paid up.

Considering that it was perfectly well known that the trustees of Achratlal, by reason of the five shares 266 to 270 and their five sub-shares, representing A capital, standing in their name, had become the holders of five whole shares and five sub-shares of B capital, it is almost incredible that the question whether the B shares should also be transferred on payment of the principal debt should have passed unnoticed. Even the five sub-shares of A capital are nowhere specifically referred to. It was eminently a question to be decided in the suit and not in execution proceedings. The Execution Court can only give effect to the decree as it stands. The defendants have to transfer to the plaintiff the mortgaged shares with the issues mentioned in the suit, but there is no mention of B shares throughout the proceedings except in Ex. 14 referred to by the learned Judge below. If they had been referred to in the course of the suit then it might be said that the Execution Court might order all shares and sub-shares issued after the mortgage to be transferred after ascertaining what shares had been so issued. But the mere fact that the plaintiff prayed that all subsequent issues should be transferred does not give the Execution Court power to deal with subsequent issues if there was no evidence before the Trial Court of subsequent issues and it could not be said that they were mentioned in the suit.

We do not even know whether the sub-shares of A capital which are mentioned in the special resolution of 1886 as half shares bore the same numbers of the corresponding whole shares or were given fresh numbers. But as far as we can gather from the meagre information on the record the calls on the B capital were paid by means of dividends which would otherwise have been paid to the holders of the A capital, their dividends in the meanwhile being restricted to 6 per cent. Eventually, therefore, the mortgagee instead of getting Rs. 7,500 in cash as dividend in excess of the 6 per cent. actually paid on the A capital mortgaged became the owner of fully paid shares of B capital. In any event, it might be argued that the mortgagor would not be entitled to have these shares transferred to him without an account being taken of the amount of dividend which was utilised in paying the calls on the shares instead of being paid in cash to the mortgagee. But this Court has decided that the mortgagor is not entitled to an account of the dividends as he was not liable to pay interest on the loan. It would seem, therefore, that if the question had been considered at all in the suit proceedings the mortgagor would at the least have been directed to pay Rs. 7,500 before he would get back the B shares, but obviously that is not an order which can be made in execution. It has been contended that a mortgagee of shares is in the same position as a life tenant, and that any accretion to the mortgaged shares by the issue of fresh capital must be treated as belonging to the corpus but as pointed out by Lord Herschell in Bouch v. Sproule (1) that depends on whether accumulated profits are distributed as dividend or converted into capital. If, as in that case, a sum which is entered in the Balance Sheet to the credit of the Reserve Fund is transferred from the Reserve Fund to the Capital Account and new shares issued to the existing share-holders, it may be said that there is a distribution of capital and the life-tenant can only get the interest on the new shares, but if the share-holders prefer that instead of getting dividends paid to them in cash, the amount to the credit of Profit and Loss Account available for payment of dividends in a particular year should be transferred to the Capital Account and new shares issued in respect thereof, clearly there is a distribution of dividends, and the life-tenant would be entitled to retain the new shares. But we have to endeavour to ascertain what was actually decided by the Court which passed the decree.

The learned Subordinate Judge in allowing the plaintiff, under the terms of the decree, to redeem the B capital as well as referred to Ex. 14 (which seems to be a mistake for Ex. 78) in the suit which was a statement brought in by the defendant of the dividends of the five shares received after Bhadarva 1939. It contains the dividends on the five shares and sub-shares in existence at the date of the mortgage as also of the five shares and five sub-shares of B capital. He deduces from that statement that the defendant did not claim the B capital shares themselves as representing payment of dividends. He also points out that the mortgagee had always treated the B shares as part of the property mortgaged, and that when the mortgagor prayed for redemption of the five shares with all the issues thereof up to the date of the suit, no objection was made to the claim by the defendants in their written statement and as the five mortgaged shares mentioned in the decree clearly included the five A sub-shares without mentioning them, they also must be taken as including the five whole and five holf shares of B capital. There is considerable force in this argument. If there was no evidence at all on the record from which it could be deduced that the learned Judge was aware of the issue of the B capital it might be said that the mortgaged shares referred only to A capital, but with Ex. 78 before him the learned Judge was aware of the B capital and yet throughout the case the mortgaged property is referred to as the five shares. If the defendants when asked to bring in an account of the dividends made no claim to include the B shares as representing dividends but only mentioned the dividends on the B shares and if they allowed the mortgaged property to be referred to throughout as the five shares Nos. 266 to 270, I think it may fairly be assumed that it was so obvious to the Court and to the parties that the B shares were accretions to the A shares that no one thought of taking the precaution of stating that as a fact. I should prefer to take this view, rather than the opposite one, that both parties understood that the B capital should be treated as dividends, so that it was not necessary for the Court to make it clear that only the A capital could be redeemed. I think the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Shah, J.—[After stating the facts of the case his Lordship proceeded:—] The defendants have appealed to this Court and it is argued on their behalf that the decree does not refer to these new shares and that the plaintiff is not entitled to them, as the High Court must be deemed to have by necessary implication negatived her claim to them. It is further urged that the question arising between the parties with reference to these new shares cannot be dealt with in execution ; that these shares represent the dividends of the old shares and not an accretion to capital, that they should go to the representatives of Achratlal and Bai Gulab and not to the plaintiff, and that in any case the plaintiff should pay back the original profits used by the Company in paying up the calls of the new shares.

On behalf of the respondent it is urged that the terms of the decree are wide enough to cover these new shares, that the decree should be interpreted in the light of the prayer clause whereby she claimed five shares with all the issues in relation thereto up to the date of suit which would include the new shares of the B capital now in question. It is also urged that the defendants never raised the contention that they were entitled to these shares of the B capital even though they contended that they were entitled to all the profits of the old shares and were in no way liable to account for the same, and that the point must be deemed to have been decided against them by implication. It is also urged on her behalf on merits that these new shares formed an accretion to the capital and that as between the remainderman and the life-tenant, on the expiry of the interest of the life-tenant, the shares must go to the remainderman, according to the principle of the decision in Bouch v. Sproule (1).

As regards the first question relating to the construction of the decree, it is by no means free from difficulty. In the plaint no express reference was made to these shares of 1886 though the fact must have been known to the plaintiff. In the prayer clause, however 'the five shares Nos. 266—270 together with the issues thereof that there may be at present' have been referred to. In the written statement the original five shares are referred to, but no contention is raised as to the new shares of the B capital. The judgment of the Trial Court is silent and so are the judgments of the High Court on the question. At the same time it may be mentioned that the trustees filed a statement (Ex. 78) of the dividends received from time to time, in which they showed the dividends received not only on the old shares of the A capital but also on the new shares of the B capital. They, however, did not show the new shares as forming part of the dividends received. The question was not raised on either side and the expression "mortgaged shares" used in the judgment of the Trial Court and the words "the mortgaged shares together with the issues mentioned in the suit" are not clear enough to place the matter beyond controversy. Having regard to the importance of the point and the absence of any evidence as to whether the shares represented the dividends on the old capital, it is difficult to hold that the decree gave to the plaintiff something, to which no express reference was made in the judgments or in the pleadings. The proceedings in the suit do not throw any light on the meaning of the words used; and the words used in the decree are capable of being interpreted in either sense. The "mortgaged shares" might include the accretion to the shares: but where the question, whether the new shares were an accretion to the capital, has not been raised and decided on its merits, I do not think that under the terms of the decree the new shares could be held to be included in the expression "mortgaged shares".

As regards the point that the question must be deemed to have been decided by implication, I do not see how it could be treated as having been decided against the plaintiff. There is some force in a similar contention urged on behalf of the plaintiff against the defendants. Though the new shares were not expressly mentioned in the plaint the words used in the prayer clause were clearly wide enough to include them. The trustees might have, and it may be said with some justice, ought to have, raised the point as to the new shares; and if they did not raise it, it must be deemed to have been decided against them. After a careful consideration of the question and taking into consideration the attitude of the trustees as indicated by the statement of accounts filed by them in the suit, I am not satisfied that the effect of the omission on their part to raise the question ought to be pressed against them to the extent of holding that the point must be deemed to have been decided against them by implication. It would be reading the mofussil pleadings with a strictness which might work injustice and which under the circumstances of this case I must decline to do.

The question then arises whether the rights of the parties to the new shares could be determined in these proceedings.

I think they could be determined. The words of the decree are not unequivocal: and under the circumstances the question whether the new shares are an accretion to the mortgaged property appears to me to be a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. The scope of the inquiry in the execution proceedings must be determined with reference to the terms of s. 47 of the C. P. C. but it is not necessary to put any strict construction upon that section, so as to exclude the consideration of a question which seems to be so closely connected with the subject-matter of the decree. Further, under s. 47 it would be open to us to treat the proceeding as a suit, if necessary, under s. 47 subject to the conditions mentioned in that section. I do not think, however, that it is necessary to adopt that course in this case.

In connection with this question, I must say that the evidence adduced by the parties is meagre. As to the proceedings of the Company, there is a purshis put in by the defendants which gives some information as to the way in which the new capital was raised and the new shares issued. But the difficulty of deciding a question of fact of this nature has been pointed out in various English cases, of which Bouch v. Sproule (1) is a type. We have to consider the provisions of the Settlement of 1883, and the statement of accounts filed by the trustees.

I should have preferred to have the copies of the Articles of Association and of the Resolutions of the Company with reference to the B capital and the way in which the calls were made in respect of the new shares. It is needless, however, to delay these proceedings any further: neither party has asked for any further opportunity to adduce evidence on this question.

According to the terms of the Settlement of 1883 as also on the findings of the High Court in the appeals from the Trial Court's decree, it is clear that Achratlal and Bai Gulab had only a life-interest in the old five shares and that ultimately they were to belong to Girdharlal or his heirs subject of course to the mortgage right created subsequently by Girdharlal in favour of Achratlal. Thus all the dividends would go to Achratlal and Bai Gulab and the old shares would absolutely belong to the plaintiff after the mortgage amount was paid. The accident of the shares having been transferred to Achratlal as security for the loans makes no difference to the rights of the parties to the shares apart from the mortgage. It is clear that the old shares carried with them the right to the allotment of the new shares. For instance it is difficult to hold that if the shares had not been mortgaged and transferred to Achratlal and had continued in the name of Girdharlal, the new shares could have been or should have been issued to Achratlal as part of the profits of the old shares, and it is not suggested on behalf of the defendants that in respect of the remaining nineteen shares or such of them as continued in the name of Girdharlal, the trustees of Achratlal, have or could have claimed the shares of the new capital B issued to Girdharlal as part of the dividends which were claimable by them under the Settlement. The right to be allotted the new shares went with the old shares; and I find nothing on the record to support the view that the new shares formed part of the dividends in respect of the old shares. The evidence as to how the calls were received is not clear; but it seems to me to be a fair inference under the circumstances that the profits of the Company were capitalized and that the new shares were allotted to the holders of the old shares as part of the capital and did not represent the dividends on the old shares. At any rate the trustees have produced no evidence to show that that is not the correct inference. On the contrary their own statement of the profits received shows that the new shares were not treated as part of the dividends received on the old shares. It is very doubtful whether under the terms of the Settlement, apart from the mortgage, Bai Gulab could have claimed the dividends on these new shares as part of the dividends on the old shares during her life-time from Girdharlal. The money was advanced to Girdharlal on the security of the old shares; and the new shares, as I understand the effect of the Company's proceedings, were an accretion to the old shares. The title to these shares would follow the title to the old shares: and in my opinion the plaintiff is entitled to claim them. The special Resolutions of the 5th September p886, a printed copy whereof has been produced before us, also show that in substance what the Company did was to capitalize the profits.

No doubt the question would arise as to whether there is any equity in favour of the trustees as regards the amount of the shares which but for the capitalisation of the profits the Company might have distributed as dividends on the old shares. The trustees had the benefit of the security afforded by new shares during the continuance of the mortgage; and the question of their right to the profits of these shares as forming part of and going with the profits of the old shares has already been decided in the suit in favour of the trustees. I do not think, therefore, that there is really any equity in their favour; and if the profits were capitalized by the Company, I do not see how the defendants can claim those profits on the footing that if they had not been capitalized they would have been distributed as dividends on the old shares. I do not think that under the circumstances the principle underlying the decision in Malam v. Hitchens (2) can apply to this case.

I, therefore, concur in the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 4 OF 1921.

November 22, 1922.

Present:—Justice Sir B. K. Mullick, KT. and Mr. Justice Ross.

RADHAKANTO PARHI—PLAINTIFF —APPELLANT

versus

MATHURA MOHAN PARHI— DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Estates Partition Act (V of 1897), ss. 5, 119—Proprietor in possession of fractional share in estate—Allotment on partition—Jurisdiction, meaning of—Error in mode of partition—Civil suit, whether maintainable.

Sub-clause (3) of s. 5 of the Estates Partition Act applies only to cases where a proprietor has an undivided share held in common tenancy in specific mouzas forming part of the parent estate but where he has no interest which extends over the whole estate; in other words, it applies only to proprietors who have an interest in some out of the total number of villages constituting the estate. [p. 276, col. 1.]

A proprietor of a mahal which is composed of two mouzas and who is in possession of a fractional interest in each is not entitled to claim an allotment in each mouza representing his assets in that mouza. [p. 276, col. 2.]

A Court is said to exercise jurisdiction when it exercises its power to adjust any jural relationship between the parties before it. [p. 277, col. 1.]

A Court has jurisdiction to decide rightly as well as wrongly and if a Deputy Collector has, in making a partition, disobeyed the provisions of sub-cl. (3) of s. 5 of the Estates Partition Act and, instead of making an allotment under that sub-clause, has proceeded under sub-cl. (5), then that error cannot be remedied in a Civil Court. Section 119 of the Act would be a clear bar. [p. 277, col. 2.]

Appeal from the judgment of the Sub-Judge, Balasore.

FACTS.—Plaintiffs were the owners of a two-annas and eight-pies share in a mahal. Subsequently they acquired a further five-annas and four-pies share in twenty villages in the mahal. During certain partition proceedings between the co-owners of the mahal, who were for purposes of partition formed into separate groups indicated by letters of the alphabet, plaintiffs, who were included in group F, were allotted a certain share in M which was one of the twenty mouzas and certain other shares in other villages of the mahal. The interest allotted to the plaintiffs in M exceeded the value of their five-annas and four-pies share in the twenty mouzas but did not come up to the value of an eight-annas share in those mouzas, which the plaintiffs owned by virtue of their two-annas eight-pies shares in the entire mahal and five-annas four-pies share in those particular mouzas. The total interest, however, allotted to the plaintiffs was equal to the total value of their interest in the entire mahal. The order of the Collector making the allotment was confirmed by the Commissioner and finally by the Board of Revenue. Plaintiffs thereupon instituted the present suit for a declaration that the partition made by the Revenue Authorities was irregular, illegal and ultra vires and that they were entitled to get assets to the extent of eight-annas interest in the twenty villages and to the extent of two-annas eight-pies share in the remaining mouzas of the mahal. The suit was dismissed by the Trial Court and the plaintiffs went up to the High Court in appeal.

Mr. S. A. Asghar (with him Messrs. G. P. Das and B. N. Das), for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. N. Sinha, B. R. Chaudhuri, S. N. Roy and S. C. Chatterjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—[After setting out the facts his Lordship proceeded :—] Now, the first question that arises is whether in fact any error was committed by the Revenue Authorities? If the Revenue Authorities complied with the provisions of the Bengal Estates Partition Act then clearly no suit can lie. The matter turns upon the construction of s. 5 of the Bengal Estates Partition Act (Act V, B.C., of 1897) which runs as follows:

"(1) If the interest of any recorded proprietor who is entitled to claim partition is an undivided share in an estate held in common tenancy, he shall be entitled to have assigned to him as his separate estate, land of which the assets shall bear the same proportion to the assets of the parent estate as his undivided share in the parent estate bears to the entire parent estate.

(2) If the interest of such recorded proprietor is the proprietary right over specific mouzas or lands forming part of the parent estate and held by him in severalty, he shall be entitled to have assigned to him as his separate estate the said mouzas or lands.

(3) If the interest of such recorded proprietor consists of an undivided share held in common tenancy in specific mouzas or tracts forming part of the parent estate but not extending over the whole area of the parent estate, he shall be entitled to have assigned to him as his separate estate land, situated within such specific mouzas or tracts, of which the assets shall bear the same proportion to the assets of such specific mouzas or tracts as his undivided share in such specific mouzas or tracts bears to the entire mouzas or tracts:

Provided that, if the interest of such recorded proprietor consists of such an undivided share in more than one mouza or tract, he shall not be entitled to have land assigned to him in every such mouza or tract, but the Collector may assign to him as his separate estate land situated in any one or more of the said mouzas or tracts, subject to the condition that the assets of such land are in proportion to the aggregate of the interests which he holds in all such mouzas or tracts.

(4) If the interest of such recorded proprietor consists partly of land held in severalty, and partly of an undivided share either in the whole estate or in specific land held in common tenancy, he shall be entitled to have the portion of the common land falling by partition to his share added to the land held by him in severalty, and the estate thus formed shall be assigned to him as his separate estate, so that the assets shall bear the same proportion to the assets of the whole estate as his interest in all the land and undivided shares held by him bears to the aggregate interests of all the proprietors.

(5) If the interest of such recorded proprietor is of more than one of the kinds specified in the preceding sub-sections, land shall be assigned to him as far as possible in accordance with the principles therein laid down."

It is contended by the learned Counsel for the appellants that as a result of the plaintiff's purchase of the 5-annas 4-pies share in the twenty mouzas they, at the time of the partition, became possessed of an 8-anna share in twenty mouzas, and of a 2-annas 8 pies share in the remaining fifty-four mouzas, and that under the provisions of sub-cl. (3) of s. 5 they were entitled in one or more of the twenty mouzas to an allotment of which the assets shall be proportionate to their total interest in the entire twenty mouzas.

The learned Counsel also applies the same principle to the 2-annas 8-pies interest of the plaintiffs in the remaining fifty-four mouzas.

In my opinion this contention is unsustainable. Sub-clause (3) of s. 5 applies only to cases where a proprietor has an undivided share held in common tenancy in specific mouzas forming part of the parent estate but where he has no interest which extends over the whole estate; in other words, it applies only to proprietors who have an interest in some out of the total number of villages constituting the estate. If he has a share in the remainder also, then it follows that he has a fractional interest in the entire estate as well as a fractional interest in a part, the latter fractional interest being the difference between the larger and the smaller interest; that is to say, if, as in this case, he has a half-share in twenty mouzas and a one-sixth share in fifty-four mouzas, it must be held that he has a one-sixth share in the entire estate and in the twenty mouzas a fractional interest represented by the difference between one-half and one-sixth. That is the view taken by the Deputy Collector, who passed the order, dated the 28th August, 1917. Although the Collector appears from his order, dated the 4th of December, 1917, to have been of the erroneous opinion that the case fell within sub-cl. (4) of s. 5, in the result his final order of the 4th September, 1913, was correct. The plaintiffs in fact are proprietors coming within sub-cl. (1) and sub-cl. (3) of s. 5 and, therefore, under sub cl. (5), the Deputy Collector was entitled to make the allotment as far as possible in accordance with the principles contained in the first two of these sub-clauses. In this case it has been found impracticable to give to the plaintiffs in Mouza Mandari or in any other mouza within the twenty mouzas, an interest which will compensate the plaintiffs for their entire interest in the twenty mouzas. So the Deputy Collector has assigned to the plaintiffs an interest in Mouza Mandari only to the extent of Rs. 5,234-12-11 and has allotted lands in mouzas other than the twenty mouzas to compensate for the balance of the plaintiffs' assets in the twenty mouzas which amounts to Rs. 1,271-5-0.

And even if it be held that the case is one falling exclusively within sub-cl. (3) then under the proviso to that sub-clause the Deputy Collector was entitled to give the plaintiffs their 8-annas share in the twenty mouzas and their 2-annas 8-pies share in the remaining mouzas, in any one or more mouzas of either group. As I read this sub-clause a proprietor of a mahal which is composed of two mouzas and who is in possession of a fractional interest in each is not entitled to claim an allotment in each mouza representing his assets in that mouza; such a construction would defeat the entire principle of compactness where there are many villages and when the proprietor holds a different fractional interest in each.

It is next contended on behalf of the appellants that the allotment contravenes sub-cl. (3) because the plaintiffs have not obtained in mouza Mandari, which is the only mouza appertaining to the group of twenty mouzas which has been allotted to them, an interest equal to their interest in the entire group. Now although the assets of their half-share in the twenty mouzas are Rs. 6,506 1-11 the assets of their 5-annas 4-pies share amount only to Rs. 4,400, and as this is a case falling under sub-cl. (5) and as lands of which the assets are Rs. 5,234-12-11 have been allotted to them in Mandari, there has been a strict compliance with the terms of the Statute. He is only entitled to land within the twenty mouzas of which the assets are Rs. 4,400 and that claim has been more than satisfied.

On the merits, therefore, it seems clear that the Deputy Collector has not only acted with jurisdiction but that he has fully complied with the law, and, therefore, the general question as to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to set aside revenue partitions does not really arise in this case.

The second point that was made by the learned Counsel for the appellants was that there had been a failure to comply with the provisions of s. 30 of the Act inasmuch as the claimants in groups A, B, K had been allowed at a late stage of the proceedings to claim one joint block. It appears that in the preliminary stages they had each applied for a separate block in the Court of the Deputy Collector; but that after the general arrangement had been made, they changed their minds and wished to have one compact block in joint tenancy. There is no provision of law forbidding such a request. The Deputy Collector granted it and the terms of s. 4 (2) of the Act clearly show that it is open to one or more co-sharers to ask that their interest shall be formed into one separate estate to be held as a joint undivided estate. There is no limitation as regards the stage at which such an application can be made; and, in my opinion, there was no irregularity in the Deputy Collector's having entertained the application even after he had made the general arrangement and had given each of these co-sharers a separate block.

Finally the question of jurisdiction has been argued before us at some length and although it does not arise in the view I take, I will deal with it shortly. Jurisdiction, I think, in reference to the matter before us, must mean the power or authority to judge and a Court is said to exercise jurisdiction when it exercises its power to adjust any jural relationship between the parties before it. The exercise of jurisdiction with which we can here interfere must relate to the subject-matter, pecuniary value, locality or the parties; these are the matters which form the foundation of a Court's jurisdiction, and if a Court wrongly assumes that the foundation exists when in fact it does not exist then and then only it is wrongly exercising jurisdiction. But jurisdiction in its wider sense is sometimes understood to mean the power to do certain specific things which are ordained by Statute; it is in the narrower sense that we must understand the word here. If the Court has assumed jurisdiction correctly, that is to say, if by reason of its local situation or pecuniary authority, or by reason of the subject-matter, or the position of the parties the Revenue Court had power under the Statute to entertain the partition proceeding, then, in my opinion, every error made in carrying out the partition in accordance with the terms of the law would not necessarily invalidate the proceeding and render it null and void. As has been often observed a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrongly as well as rightly and if the Deputy Collector has, in making the partition, disobeyed the provisions of sub-cl. (3) of s. 5 of the Estates Partition Act and instead of making an allotment under that sub-clause he has proceeded under sub-cl. (5) then that error cannot be remedied in a Civil Court. Section 119 of the Estates Partition Act would, in my opinion, be a clear bar. Where the foundation of jurisdiction does not exist as in cases where a revenue sale is held though there is no arrear of revenue at all, or a certificate sale is held in execution of a certificate issued without authority, a Civil Court has an undoubted right to declare the sale to be a nullity and to restore the property to the owner. So again where a property such as a burial ground, which the Estates Partition Act forbids the Deputy Collector to partition, is partitioned, I think a suit will lie to declare that the partition so far as the burial ground is concerned is null and void; but if the Deputy Collector merely commits an error of law, it would be contrary to principle to hold that a Civil Court can interfere for the purposes of re-adjusting the arrangement and making a fresh partition.

But, then, the learned Counsel for the appellants contends that in the case before us a question of title or interest in the parent estate is involved and, therefore, the appellants are entitled, on the authority of Kalanand Singh v. Kamlanand Singh (1) and Raghunath Prasad Narayan Singh v. Khajeh Muhammad Gawhar Ali (2) to obtain a declaration that they have an 8-annas share in the twenty mouzas. In my opinion these decisions have no bearing on the present case. What was decided in these cases was that it was open to a party to sue for a declaration to, and possession of a property if his interest or title to such property had been affected by the Deputy Collector's proceeding. Sections 23 to 27 of the Estates Partition Act expressly recognize the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to make decrees in these matters, and there can be no question that s. 119 would not bar a suit for declaration of title or of the extent of interest claimed by a recorded proprietor if aggrieved by an order made by the Deputy Collector under s. 23. In the present case there is no denial whatsoever that the plaintiffs are entitled to an 8-annas interest in the twenty Mouzas and obviously no declaration in this respect need be given. The sole question is whether it is open to the plaintiffs to get a declaration that the proceeding of the Deputy Collector was null and void by reason of his having misconstrued the provisions of s. 5 of the Act. In my opinion such a suit would not lie and the learned Subordinate Judge was right in dismissing it.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs to the contesting respondents only.

Ross, J.—I agree that the appeal should be dismissed; and, for the reasons given by my learned brother, I hold that the partition conformed to the requirements of s. 5 of the Act.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 74 OF 1924.

January 26, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Walsh and Mr. Justice Sulaiman.

Munshi RAVI NANDAN PRASAD —DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANT

JAGAR NATH SAHU AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 90 —Execution of decree—Sale—Auction-purchaser, whether entitled to apply to set aside sale—Substantial loss, meaning of—Misrepresentation as to quality of property, effect of.

The expression, "a person whose interests are affected by the sale" in r. 90 of O. XXI of the C. P. C., is wide enough to include the auction-purchaser. An auction-purchaser is, therefore, entitled to make an application under this rule to set aside the sale and is consequently debarred from bringing a separate suit for that purpose. [p. 279, col. 2.]

Where an auction-purchaser makes an application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the C. P. C., to set aside the auction-sale, the principle of caveat emptor does not apply where it is shown that there has been a misdescription or a concealment amounting to a substantial misrepresentation affecting the quality and value of the property. [p. 281, col. 1.]

The expression "substantial loss" in r. 90, O. XXI of the C. P. C., is not confined to pecuniary loss. [ibid.]

An auction-purchaser at a Court auction is entitled to make his own choice, and he is entitled to know what it is for which he is asked to pay, and when he discovers that he is burdened with some charge of which he was ignorant, he is entitled to say "the amount of this charge is not in itself a matter of great consequence to me, it is its existence which stamps the property with a character I do not like, and I should not have purchased, or, at any rate, I was not prepared to pay a substantial price for, the property if it was charged in any way." [p. 281, cols. 1 & 2.]

A decree-holder who even honestly misdescribes the subject-matter of the sale by misrepresentation, such as the description "free from encumbrances," when there is an encumbrance, cannot be heard in a Court of Law to complain that the purchaser should have known what he was buying. [p. 281, col. 2; p. 282, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Walsh, J.—This is a first appeal from an order which raises an important question—though to my mind a simple question—of the proper construction of O. XXI, r. 90 of the C. P. C. In the Court below an auction-purchaser who had purchased property put up for sale under a decree, applied to have the sale set aside on the ground that he had suffered substantial loss owing to irregularity in the publication and conduct of the sale. An objection was taken in the Court below that the auction-purchaser had no right to apply under this rule. That objection was overruled by the learned Judge, who adopted the view taken by the Madras High Court in a case to which I will refer in a moment, and he then went on to hold that the property had been misdescribed by a material omission from the sale proclamation which omitted to mention that the property was subject to a charge called a perjawat, that the applicant was unaware of it, and that he was induced to enter into the purchase by misrepresentation, which led him to believe that he was purchasing an absolute ownership, whereas it was only a lease-hold property, and he, therefore, set the sale aside and directed that the money should be refunded to the purchaser.

The main question which has been very fully argued before us—all the authorities both before and since the present Code having been referred to during the discussion—was whether the learned Judge was right in holding that an auction-purchaser can apply under O. XXI, r. 90. The question whether he can or cannot is obviously a very important one to auction-purchasers as a class, because if he can, and does not, or if he does, and applies unsuccessfully, he is clearly prohibited under r. 92 of the same Order from bringing a suit. This prohibition may, in certain cases, turn out to be a serious disadvantage to auction-purchasers. Under the old Code he could, and often did, bring a suit, and in some Courts a sort of traditional belief has taken root that he can bring a suit and cannot apply under this rule. If he has to apply under the rule, he has by the provisions of the Code very little time at his disposal in which to do so, and if he allows the time to run out, he cannot fall back upon a right to sue, which, if it existed, would give him much more time to prepare for his case and to collect the relevant material. It might, however, on the other hand be pointed out that there are very good reasons why the Code should have provided that he should apply, and not bring a suit. Everybody else who can conceivably be affected by the sale—using that term in its widest sense—has to apply and cannot sue. There does not seem any real reason why the auction-purchaser should stand in any different category. Moreover the Court executing the decree, controlling and carrying out the sale, is obviously the Court best equipped for determining the question whether there has been irregularity or fraud in the publishing or conduct of it, and a fortiori if it is the best Court for the purpose, it is clearly best in the interests of the parties and for the Court that the matter should be disposed of as speedily as possible and by an application, rather than by a dilatory suit, for after all it is the execution proceedings which are concerned, and it is desirable that the question whether the sale ought to be confirmed or not should be settled as speedily as possible. But whether the foregoing observations are sound or not—and they are merely obiter—they cannot affect the interpretation of this rule if the language of the rule is clear.

The question whether an auction-purchaser is entitled to apply, depends on the question whether he is included in the expression 'a person whose interests are affected by the sale." It is necessary to observe that this expression was not contained in the corresponding provision which was in force up to 1908, and up to that date the auction-purchaser could not apply but could bring a suit. It follows, therefore, that for the purpose of determining this question, the cases decided before 1908, or decided after 1908, with reference to proceedings which had begun before 1908, bearing upon the question whether auction-purchasers could apply or could properly bring a suit, are wholly irrelevant, and for my part, I decline to look at them. Unfortunately I find them still cited, as though they were relevant and authoritative, in text books dealing with the law under this rule, and they have been cited as authorities in one decision from which I feel compelled to differ. The expression to be considered is:—"whose interests are affected by the sale." I find myself compelled to hold as a matter of law that a person who is the highest bidder, whose bid is accepted, who is compelled by law to pay a deposit, and unless something intervenes, is compelled by law to complete his purchase, is a person "whose interests are affected by the sale:" It is impossible to use a wider term than "a person's interests." In the ordinary use of the word in the English language it is a term covering every sort of interest recognized by law, such as, in the case of an auction-purchaser, liability to pay the money, liability to complete and take a transfer of the property, and from his own point of view the necessity of finding the necessary funds, and also the necessity of carrying through to fruition the provisional contract into which he has entered. If the expression were "interests in the property," it would, of course, be confined to an interest in the property sold antecedent to the sale. If the word were merely "interest" without the plural and without the words "in the property" it might be possible to hold that the word "interest" was confined to interest in the thing itself at the time of the sale. But that is not the expression, and to my mind the actual expression in the rule is free from ambiguity or difficulty of any kind and ought to be construed as meaning what it says. It would be unnecessary further to labour this point if it were not for two decisions of the Patna High Court relied upon by the appellant. The first is the case of Khetre Mohan Datta v. Sheikh Dilwar (1) decided in the year 1918. No reference is contained, either in the judgment, or in the head-note, to the rule which the Court was construing. The Court seems to have assumed that the question was settled beyond controversy and not open to argument. The judgment says:—"The Munsif very properly held that the auction-purchaser was not a person who could come in and attack his own purchase," and it went on to say "it is quite clear that it is not open to a party who purchases at an auction-sale to impugn the validity of his own purchase." It is clear, therefore, that the Court was treating it as a matter which was well-settled. I cannot, with great respect, accept the expression used in the foregoing quotation, that an auction-purchaser complaining of any irregularity antecedent to the sale, is attacking his own purchase. What he is attacking is the conduct of the sale on the publication of the material factors or description of the property put up for sale, and it seems to me a misdescription to say that in seeking relief from a burden which has been unjustly imposed upon him by an irregularity misdescribing the subject-matter of his purchase, or concealing material facts, he is making an attack upon his own purchase. It is merely a complaint that he has, either as the result of a mistake, or of a trick, bought something which he had not the slightest intention to buy, and that he is saddled with something which was not, so far as he is concerned, his purchase at all. The Madras High Court in 1921 in the case of Bhavirisethi Gopala Krishnayya v. Pakanati Pedda Sanjeena Reddy (2) without apparently being aware of the decision in Patna held that the expression included the auction-purchaser. This is the decision which the Court below has rightly followed. I merely wish to say with regard to it, that I find it puts too narrow an interpretation even on the word "interest." It treats the word "interest" as being an interest in the property which he has acquired at the sale, declining to hold as the Patna High Court has done, that it was confined to the narrow meaning of interest prior to the sale. For my part, as I have already said, I see no reason for limiting it even to the notion of interest in the property sold. The matter came again before the Patna High Court in the year 1923 in the case of Kartik Chandra Chatterji v. Nagendra Nath Roy (3) and that Court had before it, and had to construe r. 90 with which we are now concerned, and it also had the advantage of considering the decision I have just referred to of the Madras High Court. The learned Judge who delivered judgment in that case repeated what he had said in the previous case of the Patna High Court to which I have referred, saying that it was settled in that Court, that is to say Patna, that the auction-purchaser could not apply except under r. 91, and in explaining that r. 90 was not designed for the relief of the auction-purchaser at all, it cited decisions from the Calcutta High Court and by the Privy Council antecedent to 1908, which to my mind are irrelevant. The Court declined to follow the view taken in Madras, holding that it was precluded from doing so by the language of r. 90, and held that "interest affected by the sale" mean "interests in the property existing before the sale." I do not think that we have any right to insert fundamental amendments of this kind into the plain language of a rule. To my mind that is not interpretation but legislation, and I can only repeat that we are bound to take the words as they stand, and that it is quite obvious that an auction-purchaser whose bid is accepted and who is provisionally bound to complete his purchase, is a person whose "interests are affected by the sale." I would even be prepared to go further by way of attempting to explain why the word "auction-purchaser" is not used in the rule as it is used in the next rule, which provides that the auction-purchaser may apply to set aside the sale where the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the property, and say that in a case, for example, where the auction-purchaser was a mere trustee or agent employed to purchase on behalf of a syndicate of persons who were either unwilling or unable to be present, and who entered into the purchase on their behalf in his own name, and then quarrelled with them and declined to take the necessary steps to set aside the sale if there has been irregularity against which they desired to protect themselves, yet although they were not actually the purchasers at the sale in so many words, they would be persons whose interests were affected by the sale, and who might ultimately apply on the ground that the auction-purchaser declined to do so on their behalf. The result is that, in my view, the auction-purchaser is now brought into the same category as the decree-holder judgment-debtor and other persons in previous rules upon the subject, and may apply under r. 90 with the natural result that he is prohibited from bringing a suit on the same complaint. On this ground I hold that the appeal fails subject to the further question whether we are prepared to confirm the learned Judge on the merits.

The question of the merits is really a much more difficult one, largely by reason of the fact that the learned Judge is so satisfied, that the merits of the application are established, that he has omitted to state the steps by which he arrives at certain conclusions or inferences which he has summarized in his judgment. I agree with him that the principle of caveat empter does not apply under this rule where it is shown that there has been a misdescription or a concealment amounting to a substantial misrepresentation affecting the quality and value of the property. I use the word "quality" advisedly, because I do not think that the expression "substantial loss" is necessarily confined to "pecuniary loss." It is not true to say that if a man thinks he is buying unencumbered property and finds afterwards that it is encumbered to no greater extent than Rs. 5 per annum, that the difference is necessarily represented by capitalizing the annual sum of Rs. 5. A man making a decision whether he shall bid and purchase a property is a free agent. He is entitled to make his own choice, and he is entitled to know what it is for which he is asked to pay, and, in my judgment, he is entitled to say—when he discovers that he is burdened with some charge of which he was ignorant—"the amount of this charge is not in itself a matter of great consequence to me, but its very existence is a thing which stamps the property with a character I do not like, and I should not have purchased, or at any rate I was not prepared to pay a substantial price for the property if it was charged in any way." Now there are two features about this case which impress me very much in favour of the finding that substantial loss has been made out. The proclamation described the property as free from encumbrance. To my mind that was a fundamental misdescription and misrepresentation of the character of the property. It was a misrepresentation holding out the property to be free when it was not free. One attack which the appellant has made upon the finding of the learned Judge is that the learned Judge says in his judgment: "he, the purchaser purchased it thinking that it is muafi land, and, therefore, paid a very big sum for it," and it is said that the learned Judge has gone beyond the evidence in holding that fact in favour of the applicant, because the applicant did not, as he really should have done, go into the box. Whether by a sort of mutual understanding, which frequently happens without a clear record being left behind to testify to it by those present at the trial, it was treated as common ground that the applicant thought he was getting free property one cannot say with certainty in this case. But it seems to me that the appellant is in this difficulty. He had been the mortgagee of the property and he was in possession of the documents relating to it, and a very superficial acquaintance with them must have shown him the existence of this encumbrance. Either he was guilty of gross carelessness in supplying the materials to the Court without consulting the relevant documents which would have shown him what the materials were, or he knew and wilfully concealed the existence of this small charge. Inasmuch as he himself allowed the Court to describe the property in the proclamation as free from encumbrance, it does not lie in his mouth to complain that the learned Judge has attributed to the purchaser the same belief which the decree-holder allowed the Court to advertise. A man who even honestly misdescribes the subject-matter of a sale by misrepresentation, such as the description "free from encumbrance" when there is an encumbrance, cannot be heard in a Court of Law to complain that the purchaser knew what he was buying. The learned Judge has found that the purchaser has suffered substantial loss, and even conceding that a pedantic criticism of the judgment may succeed in showing that there are gaps in the reasoning by which he has reached his conclusion, the judgment satisfies me that the learned Judge was convinced that this was one of those cases—which I described in the foregoing observations—in which the mere monetary amount of the existing charge was not the only material factor in holding that the purchaser had suffered substantial loss by reason of the irregularity in the publication and description of the sale in the proclamation, but that he arrived at that conclusion because he was satisfied—and I think rightly that the purchaser objected to buy the property with any encumbrance at all quite apart from the question what its amount might be. I think there was abundant evidence to justify the finding that substantial loss had been suffered in the sense in which that expression is used in s. 90, even though the sum was not a large one, and upon the evidence I should have come to the same conclusion.

We, therefore, hold that the appeal must be dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Sulaiman, J.—I agree. Under s. 311 of the old Code the decree-holder or any person whose immoveable property had been sold could apply to have the sale set aside on the ground of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting it. On the language of that section it was quite clear that an auction-purchaser could not apply. The Privy Council in the case of Birj Mohan Thakur v. Rai Uma Nath Chowdhury (4) held that an anction-purchaser did not come within the meaning of that section. In the later case of Kala Mea v. Harperink (5), their Lordships of the Privy Council affirmed the decree in a civil suit brought by an auction-purchaser on the ground of misrepresentation made by the sale officer. The language of the corresponding provision in the new Code has been materially altered. Under O. XXI, r. 90 in addition to the decree-holder and to any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets, every person whose interests are affected by the sale, has a right to apply. There can be no doubt that the expression "any person whose interests are affected by the sale" is much wider and the question is whether it includes an auction-purchaser also or not.

It is impossible to answer this question on mere general considerations. On the one hand it may be conceded that an auction-purchaser purchases the property at an open competition where no warranty of title is given and that, therefore, when he bids he takes a certain amount of risk if it turns out that the property which he has got is not worth the amount which he paid. It must also be conceded that to give him a summary remedy under this rule to apply to have the sale set aside would be taking away from him the right to bring a separate suit, and would also be curtailing the period during which he can seek his remedy. On the other hand it cannot be denied that if there exist heavy incumbrances on a property which is put up for sale and they are not announced at the time of the sale the auction-purchaser may offer a very high price for it and may be seriously prejudiced thereby. An auction-purchaser is not ordinarily a party to the proceedings and he often comes on the scene at the last moment and knows very little about the property that is put up for sale. If all the particulars necessary to disclose to him the nature of the interest he is going to bid for, are not mentioned at the time and he has no right to have the sale set aside by reason of such omission it would be denying him justice As I have said it is unsafe to answer the question on general considerations only. It is our duty to interpret the words of the rule as they stand. The expression perhaps is not as clear as it may have been and it is its ambiguity which has led to a conflict of opinion between the Patna and Madras High Courts. The learned Judges of the Patna High Court in the case of Khetre Mohan Datta v. Sheikh Dilawar (1) and in the case of Kartik Chandra Chatterji v. Nagendra Nath Roy (3) seem to take the expression 'interests' as meaning an interest in the property put up for sale. They therefore, argue that the auction-purchaser's interest in the property is really created by the sale and cannot be said to have been affected by it. On the other hand the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in the case of Bhavirisetti Gopala Krishnayya v. Pakanati Pedda Sanjeeva Reddy (2) have taken the view that if the interests of an auction-purchaser are affected when the sale is to be set aside they must also be affected if the sale is to be confirmed.

I agree with my learned brother that the expression 'a person whose interests are affected by the sale' must be taken in its general sense and there is no justification for restricting it to mean interest in the property put up for sale. As pointed out by him the word 'interest' is not used in the singular but is in the plural number. It is easy to imagine cases where the interest of a person may be affected by the sale though he may have no actual interest in the property which is put up for sale. The expression is of a much wider scope and there seems to be no good ground for holding that it should not include an auction-purchaser. The Calcutta High Court also has taken the view that the expression is of very wide import [Abdul Aziz v. Tafazuddin (6).]

I wish, however, to guard myself against being understood to hold that by conceding the right to an auction-purchaser to apply under this rule, I mean to open a door for a general enquiry into the title of judgment-debtors. To do so would be to call upon decree-holders to prove the titles of their judgment-debtors in the property which they are seeking to sell. I take it that if the decree-holder, in a bona fide belief that the interest which he wants to sell vests in his judgment-debtor and without any fraud, misrepresentation or concealment, puts up that interest for sale, it cannot be said that there has been a material irregularity in the omission if a subsequent enquiry were to disclose that the judgment-debtor did not really own the entire interest which was put up for sale. Under O. XXI, r. 15 which deals with cases of attachments, all that is required is a specification of the judgment-debtor's share or interest in the property to the best of the belief of the decree-holder, and so far as he has been able to ascertain the same. The same principle it seems to me would apply to a mortgagee-decree-holder also. A decree-holder has a right to put up for sale what he honestly believes to be his judgment-debtor's property and may offer it to be purchased without giving any warranty of title at all.

The only case where a question of title can be gone into in these summary proceedings would be a case where an auction purchaser attempts to prove that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest whatever. It is supposed that there is an implied guarantee that at least some interest is being put up for sale, and, therefore, if it be a fact that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest whatsoever the auction-purchaser is given a remedy under r. 91 to apply to have the sale set aside. He has no general right to ask the Court to enquire into the interest of the judgment-debtor and set aside the sale if it is satisfied that he did not possess the exact amount of interest which was announced to be sold.

In the present case the property was put up for sale and was described as a free-hold. There was nothing in the proclamation of sale to suggest that the judgment-debtor had merely a lessee's interest in the property. Under O. XXI, r. 66, it is the duty of the decree-holder to see that all incumbrances to which the property is liable are mentioned as well as every other thing which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property. Even if it be assumed that the ground rent payable on this land cannot be called an incumbrance on the property, nevertheless it must be conceded that it was a particular which was material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property. The mortgagee decree-holder had the title deeds in his possession and must be deemed to have been aware that the property was only lease-hold. His omission to describe it as such was a deliberate omission and it certainly amounted to a material irregularity within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 90. All the conditions under which this land is held are not shown in these proceedings. We do not know exactly what the terms are on which the occupier can be ejected. Further there is a claim on behalf of the Municipal Board for a haq chaharum. That, however, is not admitted either by the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser. It is reasonable to assume that the auction-purchaser would not have offered such a high price for this property if he had known that the property he was going to purchase was a mere lease-hold and not a free-hold. I, therefore, agree with the Court below that it is estalished that there was a material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale and in consequence of that irregularity the auction-purchaser has suffered substantial loss.

By the Court.—The order of the Court is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 71—Execution of decree—Sale—Non-payment of purchase-money—Re-sale—Order directing payment of deficiency—Suit to set aside order, whether lies.

An order under O. XXI, r. 71 of the C. P. C., directing a defaulting purchaser to pay the balance of the original purchase-money comes within the provisions of s. 47 of the Code and a separate suit to set aside the order is not maintainable. [p. 285, col. 1.]

(Case-law referred to.)

Appeal from the decree of the First Additional District Judge, Lucknow at Barabanki, dated the 22nd September 1924, in Regular Civil Appeal No. 65 of 1924, reversing that of the Munsif, Fatehpur.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellant.

Mr. Naim Ullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This case has been referred to a Bench for a decision of the question whether a separate suit lies to set aside an order passed under O. XXI, r. 71 of the C. P. C. The appellant Mathura Prasad obtained a Revenue Court decree for profits to an amount of Rs. 2,959, and in execution of this decree brought certain immoveable property to sale. The plaintiff-respondent Kunwar Bahadur Singh purchased the property at auction-sale for Rs. 1,300, but did not deposit 25 per cent. of the price as required by O. XXI, r. 84. The property was thereupon re-sold in accordance with that rule and was purchased by the decree-holder for a sum of Rs. 600. Mathura Prasad then applied in accordance with O. XXI, r. 71 to recover the balance of the original purchase-money from the defaulting purchaser. On 11th December 1922 an order was made in his favour. On 9th January 1924 the present suit was instituted for a declaration that the plaintiff was not liable to make good this deficiency. It was objected that the suit was not legally maintainable. The learned Munsif gave effect to this contention, the learned Additional District Judge overruled it, and hence the present appeal by the decree-holder.

In support of the view that a separate suit lies the appellant relies on two decisions of the Allahabad High Court, Deoki Nandan Rai v. Tapesri Lal (1) and Tapesri Lal v. Deokinandan Rai (2). The former decision held that no appeal lay from an order of the kind now in dispute and the latter that a separate suit lay to set it aside. Both rulings proceeded on the principle that the order was a mere administrative order and not a judicial order, and, therefore, could not constitute a decree. This view has been recently overruled by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Sita Ram v. Janki Ram (3). It is true that the actual point for decision in that case was whether the order was appealable as a decree, but the case in Deoki Nandan Rai v. Tapesri Lal (1) was expressly dissented from and the reasoning of their Lordships was fatal to the contention that a separate suit would lie. They held that the order was a judicial order and was a decree within the meaning of s. 47, C. P. C. If the order comes under s. 47 it follows by the very terms of that section that no separate suit lies to set it aside. That no separate suit lies to set aside a decree except on the ground of fraud has been held by two decisions of this Court [Suraj Bakhsh Singh v. Brijraj Kunwar (4) and Kishan Dayal v. Deputy Commissioner, Partabgarh (5).] Rulings of other High Courts are in accordance with the most recent ruling of the Allahabad Court. We need only refer to Amir Baksh Sahib v. Venkatachala Mudali (6), Gur Baksh Lall v.

Jawahir Singh (7), Gangadas Dayabhai v. Bai Suraj (8) and Rajacharya Sheshacharya v. Chimanna Gurushantappa (9).

Quite apart from authority we think that on the language of the Code an order under O. XXI, r. 71 comes within the provisions of s. 47. The matter may be looked at in two ways. In the first place it is a proceeding between the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser as representative of the judgment-debtor. There is ample authority for the proposition that the auction-purchaser is the representative of the judgment-debtor. In the second place the language of r. 71 itself shows that it was intended that these proceedings should be treated as execution proceedings. The rule says that the amount of default shall be recoverable from the defaulting purchaser "under the provisions relating to the execution of a decree for the payment of money." These words clearly indicate that the proceedings should be regarded as execution proceedings.

We accordingly hold that the present suit is not maintainable. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the suit with costs in all Courts.

MYLAI UDAYAN—DEFENDANT No. 3—RESPONDENT.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 49—List of properties allotted on partition signed and attested, whether partition deed—Registration, whether necessary—Admissibility in evidence to prove division of estate.

The question whether a document is a deed of partition or a mere memorandum of partition is a pure question of fact to be decided on a perusal of the actual document. [p. 285, col. 2.]

After an award directing a partition was passed by panchayatdars, a list was drawn up which contained the shares given to the different members and was signed by them and attested by witnesses:

Held, that the document was a deed of partition declaring an interest in the immoveable property mentioned therein and, if unregistered, it was not admissible in evidence respecting any transaction affecting such property. [ibid.]

Semble—If the document were looked at not as evidence of a transaction affecting immoveable property but merely in order to show that a division of status had taken place it would only evidence an intention to divide and not the actual division itself. [p. 286, col. 1.]

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of Small Causes, Trichinopoly, dated the 19th February 1923, in Small Causes Suit No. 5943 of 1922.

Messrs. S. Muthiah Mudaliar and K. Subramanyan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. R. V. Sheshagiri Rao and K. V. Shesha Iyengar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit on a pronote. The 3rd defendant denied liability on a plea that he was divided from the family. The Small Cause Judge accepted this plea on the evidence of Ex. I. There is oral evidence to the same effect which he has not discussed. The sole question raised by petitioner (plaintiff) is whether Ex. I is acceptable in evidence inasmuch as it is a deed of partition affecting immoveable property and not registered.

Counter-petitioner raises the usual argument that Ex. I is a mere memorandum. He cites various rulings, but this is a pure question of fact to be decided on a perusal of the actual document. [Spencer, J., has made the same observation in Ayyakutti Mankondan v. Periasami Koundan (1).] Exhibit 1 is described as a list of partition resultant upon the award passed by panchayatdars. It contains the share given to 3rd defendant, mentions three items out of that share made over to Kannusami, is signed by Kannusami and 3rd defendant, and is attested by four witnesses. It is, in my opinion, too formal a document to be described as a mere memorandum. It is a deed of partition declaring an interest in the immoveable property mentioned therein; and as such being unregistered under s. 49 of the Indian Registration Act, it cannot be received in evidence of any transaction affecting such property. However, the counter-petitioner argues that it can nevertheless be received in evidence to prove division of status relying upon Saraswatamma v. Paddayya (2).

In that case the document in question was a deed of partition which was unregistered. The question arose whether a document which operates to convert a change in the status of the family and effects a division of right was admissible in evidence if unregistered (page 353*). Ayyakutti Mankondan v. Periasami Koundan (1) and Pothi Naicken v. Nagama Naicker (3) were admitted authority to the contrary. Venkatasubba Rao, J., holds that a document merely creating a separation in status does not itself create any interest in immoveable property and a deed of partition referring to immoveable property and not registered may be looked at for ascertaining if it contains evidence of an intention to divide. It is admissible as proving the conduct of the parties. Spencer, J., holds that such a document is admissible to prove division of status. He considers that the document if duly registered and used to prove the actual partition would be one affecting immoveable property, but if unregistered and used only to prove division of status it would be one not affecting immoveable property. This view runs counter to that of Sadasiva Iyer, J., in Ayyakutti Mankondan v. Periasami Koundan (1).

In my opinion if the document is filed on the strict understanding that it must not evidence any transaction affecting immoveable property, its scope in the majority of cases will be very small. At most I think it will evidence, as observed by Venkatasubba Rao, J., an intention to divide. For instance the document now in question is inadmissible from the words "the entire western portion" to the end. All that is admissible is the heading "list of partition as result of award passed by panchayatdars on 12th August 1918 in favour of Mayileri Udayan son of etc." From this no doubt it may be inferred that there was an intention to divide at this date. For evidence of actual division the rest of the document would be necessary—but that portion evidences a transaction affecting immoveable property and being unregistered is inadmissible. Therefore, the Small Cause Judge is wrong when he writes "it is seen from Ex. I that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are divided," for that is more than Ex. I can prove. He could have found that Ex. I evidenced an intention to divide, and actual division was proved by defence witnesses Nos. 2 and 3. I do not think, however, that anything will be gained by sending this case back for a finding on the oral evidence after a lapse of twenty-four months and I decline to interfere. The petition is dismissed. No costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 150 OF 1924.

December 9, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Dalal, J. C.

DHANI RAM—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

versus

MAIKOO LAL—DEFENDANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), ss. 23, 25—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 116—Suit for rent—Denial of tenancy—Question of title—Order directing return of plaint—Revision, whether lies—Landlord and tenant—Estoppel.

Where a plaint is returned by a Small Cause Court under s. 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the case is disposed of by the Small Cause Court by its decision that it has no jurisdiction, and its order is open to revision under s. 25 of the Act. [p. 287, col. 1]

The matter is, however, different where the Court after contest comes to the contrary opinion and decides that it has jurisdiction and continues with the proceedings. In such a case the proceedings are still pending in the Small Cause Court and no case has been decided, and the provisions of s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act would consequently be inapplicable. [ibid.]

Where in a suit for rent the defendant denies the tenancy set up by the plaintiff and claims ownership of the premises for a third person, no question of title arises between the parties, inasmuch as the defendant does not claim title in himself. The question at issue is one of tenancy only and a Court of Small Causes is capable of deciding that question. [p. 287, cols. 1 & 2.]

A person who has been let into possession of premises as a tenant cannot deny his landlord's title however defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. Even where the title to the premises rests with a third person if the defendant has been put into possession by the plaintiff the defendant would be estopped from denying the plaintiff's title. [p. 287, col. 2.]

Application for revision against the judgment and decree of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, Lucknow, dated the 30th July 1924.

Mr. Ganesh Prasad, for the Applicant.
Mr. Raj Bahadur, for the Oppsite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision from an exceedingly summary order of the Additional Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Lucknow. The plaintiff sued for rent of a certain period of time from the defendant whom he designated as his tenant. The learned Judge made no enquiry as to whether the defendant was the plaintiff's tenant or not. The note of the Judge is "defendant's Pleader denies tenancy and title of the plaintiff." Prompt action was thereupon taken under s. 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and the plaint returned to the plaintiff. It is abundantly clear that without taking any thought in the matter the lower Court refused to exercise jurisdiction which was vested in it.

First objection is made that this Court has no right of revision under s. 25 of the Act because no case has been decided by the lower Court. In support a Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court: Subal Ram Dutt v. Jagadannada Majumdar (1) was quoted. The reasoning of that judgment does not appeal to me. It appears that the same Court held to the contrary in a later case: Umesh Chandra Palodhi v. Rakhal Chandra Chatterjee (2). In my opinion a learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court has considered this question with care in Makhan Lal Parsottam Das v. Chunni Lal Brij Lal (3). So far as the lower Court is concerned it has disposed of the case by deciding that it has no jurisdiction. In that view a case has been decided by that Court. The matter would have been different if the lower Court had after contest come to the contrary opinion and decided that it had jurisdiction and continued with the proceedings. In such a case proceedings would be pending in the Small Cause Court and no case would have been decided. I hold that the provisions of s. 25 are applicable here.

The question at issue is one of tenancy and not of title. The defendant does not say that he is the owner of the premises. He claims ownership for a third person: his brother. That, however, is not a question of title between the parties. The Court of Small Causes is capable of deciding whether the defendant is the plaintiff's tenant or not. As pointed out by my brother Saiyed Wazir Hasan in Shams-ud-din Khan v. Fateh Shah (4), a tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title, however, defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. Even where the title rests with the third person if the defendant had been put into possession by the plaintiff, the defendant would be estopped from denying the plaintiff's title. Under the circumstances the suit is one which does not raise a question of title as between the plaintiff and the defendant. The issue is very simple. Is the defendant the plaintiff's tenant or not and if he is, is any rent due from the defendant. If the defendant is not the plaintiffs' tenant the suit has to be dismissed and if he is, a decree must be passed against the defendant for the balance of rent.

I set aside the order of the lower Court and direct it to proceed with the suit according to the instructions given above. Costs here and heretofore shall abide the result.

NATHA RAM—OBJECTOR—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (2), 47, 151, O. IX, r. 13—Execution of decree—Objection by legal representative of deceased judgment-debtor—Objection allowed ex parte*—Application to set aside* ex parte order, maintainability of—Inherent power of Court.

In execution of a mortgage-decree, the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, who had been brought upon the record of the execution proceedings after the death of the judgment-debtor, filed certain objections under s. 47 of the C. P. C. On the date fixed for the hearing of the objections the decree-holder did not appear and the Court passed an ex parte order allowing the objections

The decree-holder put in an application for setting aside the ex parte order alleging that he had no notice of the date of hearing:

Held, (1) that the objector having set up his own right to the property his objections must be taken to have come under s. 47 of the C. P. C.; [p. 288, col. 2.]

(2) that the order allowing the objections, although an ex parte order, amounted to a decree under the provisions contained in sub-cl. (2) of s. 2 of the C. P. C.; [ibid.]

(3) that, therefore, O. IX, r. 13 of the Code was applicable to the matter and it was competent to the Court to set aside the ex parte order on being satisfied that there were sufficient reasons for the absence of the decree-holder on the date of hearing; [ibid.]

(4) that in any case the Court had inherent jurisdiction to review its ex parte order provided sufficient cause was shown. [ibid.]

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, dated the 11th July 1923.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Gulzari Lal and P. L. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a first appeal from order which has been filed by the decree-holder and arises out of the following circumstances: A mortgage-decree for sale was obtained against Madan Lal who died subsequent to the decree. In his place Onkar Das his brother and Natha Ram his nephew were brought upon the record as his legal representatives and heirs. There were first certain objections filed by Onkar Das with which we are not concerned in this appeal. On the 15th of November 1922 Natha Ram filed certain objections purporting to be made under s. 47 and also under O. XXI, r. 58 of the C. P. C. Notice was issued to the decree-holder, but the report of the process-server was that he refused to accept notice. The Court considered the service sufficient and ordered that ex parte proceedings should be taken on the 24th of February 1923 the objector got the objections amended as being exclusively under s. 47, and on that date the Court passed an ex parte order allowing the objections.

On the 28th of February 1923 the decree-holder put in an application for setting aside the ex parte order, alleging that he had no notice of it, and also stating that the objection under O. XXI, r. 58 was not maintainable. The learned Judge has dismissed this application summarily, holding that O. IX, r. 13 of the C. P. C., does not apply to execution proceedings, and that, therefore, the application is not maintainable.

A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies before us. If the original objection had been one under O. XXI, r. 58 and had been allowed, then the objection that no appeal lies could have been entertained. But we have already pointed out that Natha Ram was brought upon the record as a representative of the deceased judgment-debtor. In his objection he set up his own right to the property, and, therefore, his objection must be taken to have come under s. 47. This was clearly held in the case of Dulla v. Shib Lal (1) by a Bench of which one of us was a member. The objection being under s. 47, the order which was passed on the 24th of February 1923—though an ex parte one amounted to a decree. Under s. 2, sub-cl. (2) of the C. P. C., a decree includes the determination of any question within s. 47. It follows, therefore, that O. IX, r. 13, would in terms be applicable. The learned Judge was quite wrong in holding that the application for setting aside the ex parte decree was not maintainable. Even if O. IX, r. 13 were not expressly applicable, the Court would have an inherent jurisdiction to review an order which had been passed ex parte, provided of course sufficient cause is shown.

The learned Advocate for the respondent contends that a contrary view has been expressed in the case of Bharat Indu v. Asghar Ali Khan (2) following the case of Hari Charan Ghose v. Manmatha Nath Sen (3).

We may point out that the case before the Calcutta High Court arose out of proceedings under O. XXI, rr. 100 and 101, which were not execution proceedings. In the case decided by this Court the application for execution had been struck off on the ground that the decree-holder had failed to prosecute it with due diligence. The facts of that case, therefore, are quite different.

In the present case we have already held that the order of the 24th of February 1923 amounted to a decree, and that, therefore, O. IX, r. 13 was clearly applicable.

Instead of sending the case back to the Court below we have thought it convenient to dispose of the question of fact ourselves. On the one hand we have the sworn affidavit of the decree-holder that he had no notice of the date fixed. As against it there is the report and affidavit of the process-server. We find it difficult to believe that if the decree-holder was aware of the date and was actually present in the Court compound as alleged by the opposite party, he would have deliberately allowed the objection to be heard ex parte.

We accordingly hold that it is established that the decree-holder was ignorant of the date fixed and that he could not attend the Court on that day, and that sufficient cause has been shown for his non-appearance within the meaning of O. IX, r. 13.

We accordingly allow the appeal and set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, with the result that the ex parte decree dated the 24th of February 1923 is also set aside, and the objections of Natha Ram are restored to the file, and we direct that they should be disposed of according to law. Costs in both Courts will abide the event, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Belgaum, in Suit No. 26 of 1919.

Mr. Bahadurji (with him Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram), for the Appellant.

Mr. Patwardhan (with him Mr. A. G. Desai), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed on behalf of the shop by the name of Krishnappa Anna Goregaonkar of Nipani against Krishna Annappa Goregaonkar, Vahiwatdar and proprietor of the shop Anna Satappa Shet Goregaonkar of Poona, for an account of certain dealings which the firm at Nipani had with the shop at Poona. The lower Court has appointed a Commissioner to take accounts, and has further directed that whatever amount is found due may be taken into account in the other suit between the parties. An objection was taken on behalf of the defendant in the Trial Court that the suit could not lie. But that objection was not allowed.

The defendant has appealed from the preliminary decree passed by the Trial Court, and has urged the same objection before us. It is an admitted fact in the case that the plaintiff firm consists of three partners, one of whom is Krishnappa Anna Goregaonkar. It is also an admitted fact that the defendant, Krishnappa Anna Goregaonkar, is the sole proprietor of the shop Anna Satappa Shet Goregaonkar of Poona. It is clear that such a suit is not maintainable. Having regard to the ruling in Rustomji v. Purshotamdas (1), it seems to us that the suit is bad, and on that ground this suit ought to have been dismissed by the lower Court. It does not really matter to the parties one way or the other, because all that could be determined in this suit will have to be determined in the other suit between the partners wherein accounts of the partnership are to be taken.

We reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the suit. The defendant should get his costs from the plaintiffs, that is, Sakharam and Bala as representing the plaintiff's firm in both the Courts. The cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

In Appeal No. 274 of 1920, which arises out of a suit filed by Krishna Annappa Shet as a partner in the firm of Krishnappa Anna Goregaonkar against the two other partners Sakharam and Bala for dissolution of the partnership and for accounts the issues were framed on that footing in the suit and the lower Court has passed a preliminary decree directing the partnership to be dissolved, appointing a Receiver, and ordering accounts to be made up according to the karar, that is according to the terms of the partnership deed, dated 11th March 1918.

The plaintiff has appealed from this preliminary decree, and in support of the appeal it is urged that on a proper construction of cl. 7 of the partnership deed no accounts should be taken at all, that the partnership assets should be handed over to him, and that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 should be declared to have no share in the profits in view of the conduct attributed to them by the plaintiff. It does not appear that this point was raised in time in the lower Court. No doubt, in the purshis which was given on behalf of the plaintiff on the 26th March, 1920, that point was put forward before the Court. But the Trial Court proceeded to pass a preliminary decree. The questions that the plaintiff has raised in appeal, are really in the nature of objections to the account. They can be properly raised when the accounts are taken, and if he finds that accounts are not made up according to the karar, that is according to the partnership deed, it would be open to him then to put forward the objections now urged on his behalf. It would be open to the Court then to consider whether the defendants should or should not be given any credit for their share in the profits. The objections made in appeal appear to us to be premature. There is no valid objection at this stage to the preliminary decree which has been passed by the Trial Court. We confirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

As regards costs in the suit, we think that the proper order would be that all costs in the suit should be reserved to be dealt with by the lower Court when accounts are made up.

The cross-objections substantially fail and must be dismissed with costs.

A suit for redemption by a co-mortgagor must be treated as a representative suit on behalf of all the co-mortgagors and operates as a bar to a subsequent suit for redemption by any of the other co-mortgagors. [p. 291, col. 2.]

Where, however, no proceedings are taken in the previous suit for redemption after the preliminary decree, the suit must be regarded as still pending and a subsequent suit for redemption by another co-mortgagor would be barred not under s. 11 but by virtue of the provisions of s. 10 of the C. P. C. In such a case another co-mortgagor can apply to continue the proceedings and the Court would have power to extend the time for payment under the proviso to r. 8 (4) of O. XXXIV of the C. P. C. Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rai Bareli, dated the 12th March 1923, setting aside that of the Munsif, Rai Bareli, dated the 11th September 1922.

Mr. H. K. Ghose for Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal was heard by a Bench of two Judges on a certificate made out by one of us that it was a fit case for such hearing.

The plaintiff Narayan sued for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage dated 23rd December, 1873, executed by himself when he was a minor, by his mother, one cousin and a widow of another cousin. For practical purposes it may be taken that in 1900 the owners of the equity of redemption were Narayan plaintiff and his brother Ram Prasad. There were executed subsequent transfers of the property by way of further charge one by all the persons who were parties to the document of 1873, another by the widow of the plaintiff's cousin and the third by another cousin of the plaintiff. Those documents are Exs. A-2, A-3 and A-4 on this record.

In 1900 Ram Prasad sued for redemption and obtained a preliminary decree on 27th November, 1900, which was upheld by the Appellate Court of the District Judge on 14th August 1901. Narayan was a party defendant to the suit but was exempted in the decree. This preliminary decree was not taken any further either by Ram Prasad by depositing money for redemption or by the mortgagee by application for sale as required by proceedings corresponding to the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 8, C. P. C.

On 18th April, 1922, the plaintiff brought the present suit for redemption on the grounds that the mortgage had not yet been redeemed and that the suit was brought within the period of 60 years from the date of the mortgage. The lower Appellate Court set aside the decree passed in the plaintiff's favour by the Trial Court and dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that a second suit for redemption was barred. The plaintiff has come here in second appeal in consequence.

There is conflict of opinion between the Madras and Bombay High Courts on this subject. In Vedapuratti v. Vallabha Valiya Raja (1) a Full Bench consisting of five Judges including the Chief Justice held unanimously that where a suit for redemption has been instituted and a decree for redemption has been passed therein but not executed a subsequent suit is not maintainable for the redemption of the same mortgage. This view was reiterated by that Court in Ranga Aiyangar v. Narayana Chariar (2) by a Bench of two Judges. The Bombay High Court in Ramji Bapuji Patil v. Pandhari Nath Ravji (3) held by a majority of 2 to 1 that such a second suit did lie. The Bombay High Court specifically dissented from the view expressed in Vedapuratti v. Vallabha Valiya Raja (1) while the Madras High Court in the case reported as Ranga Aiyangar v. Narayana Chariar (2) dissented from the Bombay ruling. We are of opinion that the Madras ruling has better reasons on its side and we are also impressed by the reasons given by the dissenting Judge Mr. Justice Shah in the Bombay case. As pointed out by that learned Judge at page 364* of the report, it is difficult to see how the bar of res judicata can be avoided as to the second suit. Under the provisions applicable to a decree for redemption under the Transfer of Property Act there would be a further objection that a suit was barred under the provisions of s. 244 of the former Code corresponding to s. 47 of the present Code. That bar is now removed by the proceedings between the preliminary and final decree being turned into those in a suit under O. XXXIV of the present Code.

Under s. 11 no Court shall try a suit in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties. Explanation VI enacts that where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating. It is clear to us that when Ram Prasad brought his suit he brought it in his representative capacity for himself and his brother Narayan the plaintiff to the present suit. It was pointed out that Narayan was exempted from the decree. To us this procedure appears to emphasize the representative character of Ram Prasad's suit. The Court at the time was of opinion that Ram Prasad represented both himself and Narayan and there was no necessity to keep Narayan's name on the record. Narayan consented to Ram Prasad's desire to redeem the entire property and thereby admitted the representative nature of Ram Prasad's suit. We have quoted s. 11, C. P. C., in bar of the present suit. Possibly s. 10 would be better applicable as the former suit has not been taken to a conclusion and is still pending. Our observations, however, will equally apply to the provisions of s. 10 of the C. P. C.

There is a single Judge ruling of this Court: Bhairon Bakhsh Singh v. Raghubansa Kunwar (4) in which a second suit for redemption was held to be maintainable. The learned Judge, however, took care to mention in his judgment that the plaintiff in the former suit was not maintaining the suit on behalf of the co-mortgagors. We are not concerned whether that decision on facts was sound or not. When such was the finding on facts it would naturally follow that the second suit

(1) 25 M. 300; 12 M. L. J. 128.
(2) 32 Ind. Cas. 30; 39 M. 896; 30 M. L. J. 13; 18 M. L. T. 596.
(3) 49 Ind. Cas. 894; 43 B. 334; 21 Bom. L. R. 56.

would not be barred under Explanation VI of s. 11 C. P. C. Possibly if we had been deciding that case on the merits we would not have arrived at the conclusion at which the learned Judge did as to the want of representative character of the plaintiff in the first suit. The analogy of a suit brought by a reversioner may be applied here. In Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheo Pargash Ojha (5) their Lordships of the Privy Council applied the principle that when a reversionery heir obtains a decision in respect of an alienation by a Hindu widow he does so in his representative character and the estate passes unimpaired to those entitled to the reversion on the death of the widow. They considered there the danger of a feigned issue in a suit brought in a representative capacity and observed. "But this danger is mainly serious where the failure of the first suit has been brought about by fraud or collusion where, of course further and different considerations would arise." When the suit of a reversioner is taken to be one in his representative character there is all the more reason for considering a suit by a co-mortgagor to be of a similar character.

We agree, therefore, with the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff's suit was barred.

The matter, however, does not end here. The suit brought by Ram Prasad is still pending and as Ram Prasad sued in a representative capacity the plaintiff of this suit Narayan can proceed with the previous suit where it was left off by Ram Prasad. As already pointed out no final decree has been passed in that suit because the defendant made no application for the passing of a decree that the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold and the proceeds applied in payment of what may be found due to the defendant. The Court has power under the proviso to r. 8 (4) of O. XXXIV to postpone from time to time the date fixed for payment of money by the mortgagor. We set aside the decrees of the two subordinate Courts and treat the plaint of Narayan as an application for deposit of money and postpone the day of payment in Court to six months from to-day's date. Under the preliminary decree of the suit of which Ram Prasad was plaintiff all the deeds Exs. A-2, A-3, and A-4 were made payable at the time of redemption of the mortgage of 1873. We direct that an account shall be prepared, counting interest on Exs. A-2, A-3 and A-4, for whole years : in the case of A-2 up to 2nd September, 1924, in the case of A-3 up to 8th February, 1925 and in the case of A-4 up to 2nd November, 1924. This will save trouble to the office and do substantial justice between the parties. The papers shall immediately be sent down to the Trial Court which is directed to declare within two months of to-day's date what that amount is, including the amount of the usufructuary mortgage of 1873. Narayan will then have four months within which to deposit the sum declared by the Trial Court. On such deposit being made action shall be taken under rule 8 (1), otherwise it will be open to the defendant mortgagee to apply for sale.

We also direct that parties shall bear their own costs in all the Courts in the proceedings subsequent to Narayan's plaint as the question of law was a doubtful one.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Mortgage by manager—Mortgage-suit—Necessity, absence of—Prayer for personal decree made at late stage, whether can be entertained—Privy Council appeal—Respondent lodging case but failing to appear at hearing—Costs—Practice.

In a suit to enforce a mortgage executed by the manager of a joint Hindu family it was found that the money had not been borrowed for legal necessity and the suit was dismissed. In an appeal before the Privy Council it was contended that the manager who had executed the mortgage was liable on the personal covenant for the debt contracted by him and it was prayed that a simple money decree may be passed against him :

Held, that having regard to the fact that no such claim had been made in the Courts below the claim for a simple money decree against the manager could not be entertained, as the entertainment of any such claim would require an amendment of the plaint, and the case was not such in which their Lordships were prepared to exercise their discretion to allow an amendment.

In a Privy Council appeal, where the respondent lodges a case, but does not appear at the hearing, and the appeal is dismissed, the respondent is entitled to costs up to the lodging of the case.

Appeal from a decree of the Allahabad High Court, dated the 15th February 1922, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 9th April 1919.

JUDGMENT.

Mr. Ameer Ali.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Allahabad dismissing a suit brought by the appellant for the enforcement of a mortgage executed in his favour by one Jai Gobind Tewari on the 28th of August 1907. Jai Gobind Tewari was a member of a joint Hindu family subject to the Mitakshara and apparently managed the family business.

The suit was brought before the Subordinate Judge of Basti against all the members of the joint family; and some transferees of part of the property were joined as defendants.

The plaintiff who is a money-lender alleges that Jai Gobind Tewari had borrowed from him two sums of money which in the aggregate amount to Rs. 2,715 on two bonds, for legal family necessity, and for this amount he passed the mortgage bond in suit.

The defendants Nos. 3 to 6, who alone contested the suit, urged, it was not for legal necessity or family benefit as the plaintiff alleged.

The Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's claim for sale of the mortgaged property under r. 4, O. XXXIV, of the C. P. C.

The High Court on appeal came to the conclusion that the onus was on the plaintiff to establish legal necessity in order to bind the joint family by the acts of Jai Gobind and that he had failed to prove such necessity. They accordingly dismissed the claim. The plaintiff has appealed to His Majesty in Council from this order of dismissal.

Their Lordships have heard learned Counsel for the appellant at considerable length and they find themselves in agreement with the High Court in holding that no legal necessity is established. The principle applicable to a case where it is sought to bind the joint family by the acts of the managing member has been clearly enunciated by Lord Justice Knight Bruce in the case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1).

Their Lordships think that the decree of the High Court is right and that the appeal should be dismissed.

But it has been contended that even if the joint family is not bound by the mortgage created by Jai Gobind Tewari, he is liable on the personal covenant for the debt contracted by him. No such case was made in the plaint or urged before the High Court, nor is any such case made in the grounds of appeal before their Lordships or in the case as originally lodged by the appellant. The claim was for a mortgage decree. According to Counsel's statement it was only when the appeal came into his hands that the idea of a decree on the personal covenant occurred to the plaintiff's advisers. Their Lordships are of opinion that having regard to the circumstances of the case the claim for a simple money decree against Jai Govind urged before the Board cannot be entertained. No such decree could be made without an amendment of the plaint; and although it is in their Lordships' discretion to allow an amendment even at the last stage, they do not think that this is a case in which that discretion should be exercised.

As regard the respondents' costs they appear to have lodged a case but did not appear at the hearing. They are clearly entitled to their costs up to that stage. The rule in such circumstances is stated in Mr. Norman Bentwich's Practice of the Privy Council in Judicial Matters on page 337 as follows:

"When respondents lodged a case, but did not appear at the hearing, the appeal was dismissed with costs to be paid to respondents down to the lodging of the case, and ordered to be paid out of the deposit placed in the registry as security."

Their Lordships will humbly advise his Majesty to dismiss the appeal with costs to the respondents up to the lodging of the case.

MANGAL SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by co-parcener, whether can be challenged by successors-in-interest—Widow, decree obtained against, whether binding on reversioners—Collusion—Burden of proof.

A Hindu co-parcener has no absolute right to transfer family property without legal necessity. A transfer of family property by a co-parcener which is not supported by legal necessity is not binding on the estate and is liable to be challenged by the other co-parceners or by the successors-in-interest of the alienor. [p. 295, col. 1.]

Muhammad Muzamil-ullah Khan v. Mithu Lal, 11 Ind. Cas. 220; 8 A. L. J. 901; 33 A. 783, relied on.

A Hindu widow represents the estate for the time being though her rights are to a certain extent qualified. If she fights a case against a third party, she represents the estate and fights the case in a representative character on behalf of all the subsequent reversioners. A decree fairly and properly obtained against her in the absence of any fraud or collusion would be binding on the reversionary heirs. It is only when the decree relates to a matter personal to her, that it would not be so binding. It is immaterial, however, that the decree is an ex parte decree, unless there is anything special which would suggest that it was not fairly and properly obtained. In the absence of any such evidence an ex parte decree obtained against the widow would be binding on the reversioners. [p. 295, col. 2.]

Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh, 30 Ind. Cas. 657; 37 A. 496; 13 A. L. J. 594, Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh, 48 Ind. Cas. 553; 40 A. 593; 28 A. L. J. 549; 24 M. L. J. 361; 9 L. W. 52; 23 C. W. N. 326; (1919) M. W. N. 155; 36 M. L. J. 597; 21 Bom. L. R. 511; 45 I. A. 168 (P. C.), followed.

A Hindu executed a simple mortgage of certain property. After his death the mortgagee obtained an ex parte decree on the mortgage against the widow of the deceased. Plaintiff, who was the next reversioner to the estate of the deceased, brought a suit for a declaration that the mortgage was without necessity and that the decree was not binding on him:

Held, that in order to succeed the plaintiff must prove not only that there was no legal necessity for the mortgage, but also that the ex parte decree obtained against the widow was not binding on him owing to collusion or some other circumstance which would take away its binding character. [ibid.]

First appeal from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Basti, dated the 17th May 1923.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for a declaration that the mortgage-deed, and a decree on the basis of it obtained by the contesting defendants, were collusive, null and void, and not binding on the plaintiff. The plaintiff is a separated brother of Kalap Nath Singh deceased. On Kalap Nath Singh's death his son Harbans Singh survived him. On the death of Harbans, Kalap Nath Singh's widow, Musammat Acharja, succeeded to the estate as a Hindu mother. Kalap Nath in his life time had executed a simple mortgage-deed on the 13th of May 1914 when his son Harbans was alive. After the death of Kalap Nath and Harbans, the defendant mortgagee instituted a suit on the basis of the deed, and obtained an ex parte decree on the 4th of November 1920, against Musammat Acharja.

The plaintiff, as the next reversioner, has instituted a suit alleging that the original mortgage-deed was without any legal necessity, and was, therefore, not binding on the joint Hindu family estate, and further that the decree obtained by the contesting defendants against the widow Musammat Acharja, was a collusive one.

The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that it had not been established that the decree was either fraudulent or collusive. It did not go into the question of the mortgage having been for legal necessity, but it dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff as reversioner had no right to challenge an alienation made by Kalap Nath. In the opinion of the Munsif the only person who could have challenged it was Harbans the other co-parcener. On appeal to the lower Appellate Court the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has a right to call upon the mortgagee to prove legal necessity for the mortgage. He has not recorded any express finding as to whether the decree obtained against Musammat Acharja was or was not a collusive one. He has also omitted to decide himself whether the mortgage had been for legal necessity but has remanded the case for the disposal of the question of legal necessity.

In our opinion the view of the learned Judge that the plaintiff has a right to challenge the alienation in case the decree is not in his way, was quite correct. A co-parcener has no absolute right to transfer the family property without legal necessity. The transfer by Kalap Nath, if it was without legal necessity, was, therefore, not binding on the estate, and was liable to be challenged by Harbans. A Full Bench of this Court in the case of Muhammad Muzamil-ullah Khan v. Mithu Lal (1) has laid down that the right to challenge an alienation is not only confined to the members of the family, but can also be availed of by subsequent transferees. It seems to us that, that right must also be availed of by successors-at-law. If an alienation is made by one member of a joint Hindu family, which is really not binding on the estate, and afterwards that member dies, and also the surviving members die, the reversioners would have the right to challenge the alienation. We are, therefore, of opinion that if the decree passed against Musammat Acharja was not in the plaintiff's way, he would be entitled to challenge the alienation.

It is contended on behalf of the respondent that the decree against Musammat Acharja cannot bind the plaintiff reversioner, because he has not claimed through her. This contention cannot be accepted. A Hindu widow represents the estate for the time being though her rights are to a certain extent qualified. If she fights a case against a third party, she is representing the estate and is fighting the case in a representative character on behalf of all the subsequent reversioners. A decree fairly and properly obtained against her in the absence of any fraud or collusion, would be binding on the reversionary heirs. It is only when the decree relates to a matter personal to her, that it would not be binding. This was the view clearly expressed by Banerji, J., in the Full Bench case of Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (2), and that view has been approved of by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (3).

It is next contended on behalf of the respondent that inasmuch as the decree against Musammat Acharja was an ex parte decree, there was not a proper and fair fight. It is urged that this Court has held that a compromise decree between a Hindu widow and a third party would not necessarily bind a reversioner. A compromise decree is merely an embodiment of a private contract entered into by a widow and private persons. There is clearly in such a case no adjudication by the Court. An ex parte decree, however, stands on a different footing. There is no confession of judgment by her, and the plaintiff has to prove by evidence and satisfy the Court that he has got a good case. We, therefore, think that an ex parte decree, unless there be anything special which would suggest that it was not fairly and properly obtained, would be binding on the reversioners.

We are, therefore, of opinion that before the suit can be finally disposed of, it is not only necessary to find whether there was or was no legal necessity, but it is also necessary to determine whether the ex parte decree against Musammat Acharja had been fairly and properly obtained, and whether it was without any fraud or collusion.

As the Court of first instance has recorded a finding on the absence of fraud or collusion, it will be necessary for the Appellate Court to decide that question itself. Under the circumstances a remand to the First Court with regard to the question of legal necessity was inconvenient. Both the issues should be disposed of by the lower Appellate Court.

We accordingly set aside the order of the lower Court, and remand this case to the lower Appellate Court with the direction to re-admit it to its original number and to dispose of it according to law. Costs in the Court below and in this Court will abide the event, including in this Court fees on the higer scale.

Musammat SUNDER BIBI—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60 (n)—

Execution of decree—Maintenance, right of, whether liable to attachment and sale—Procedure—Receiver, appointment of.

A right of maintenance is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree by virtue of the provision contained in cl. (n) of s. 60 of the C. P. C.

The proper remedy of a decree-holder, however, lies, in a fitting case, in the appointment of a Receiver for realising the rents and profits of the property, paying out of the same a sufficient and adequate sum for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family, and applying the balance, if any, to the liquidation of the judgment-creditor's debt.

Appeal from a decree of the Allahabad High Court, (Mr. Justice Walsh and Mr. Justice Wallach) in Execution First Appeal No. 296 of 1920, dated the 2nd May 1921, and printed as 63 Ind. Cas. 181, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 10th August 1920.

Messrs. L. De Gruyther, K. C., and E. B. Raikes, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Shaw.—The Board is of opinion that the conclusion reached by the High Court by their judgment of 2nd May, 1921, was correct. It is to be regretted that the High Court did not itself, in the exercise of its powers, appoint a Receiver of this property which the judgment-creditor seeks to attach and bring to sale.

Their Lordships do not agree with the High Court on the subject of the actual legal position of the right of maintenance conferred upon the judgment-debtor. That right of maintenance arose under a compromise which was made between the judgment-debtor and his brother. The compromise agreement is not produced, but its terms are said by the parties to be recorded in a decree pronounced by the Subordinate Judge of Jaunpur on 20th May, 1915. The substance of this agreement is that the judgment-debtor one of the two brothers, parties to the compromise, was declared to have a right of maintenance in certain villages enumerated, the right being conferred expressly "without power of transfer."

In the present case the Subordinate Judge in his judgment of 10th August, 1920, correctly limits the issue between the parties to this maintenance question. No other point was brought before the Board. Speaking of the plaintiff, the Judge says:—"He now wants to execute that decree against the property in 16 villages, which the judgment-debtor has got from his younger brother, Raja Lal Bahadur Singh, for his maintenance. His prayer is that this right of maintenance be proceeded against and a Receiver appointed to realise rents and profits of the above named 16 villages and the decretal amount be paid out of the said realisation as far as possible. To this the judgment-debtor objects on the ground that the right of maintenance is not attachable under s. 60 of the C. P. C."

Their Lordships are of opinion that the right of maintenance is in point of law not attachable and not saleable. They think that s. 60 of the C. P. C. Head N, precludes an application for that purpose.

The proper remedy lies, in a fitting case, in the appointment of a Receiver for realising the rents and profits of the property paying out of the same a sufficient and adequate sum for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family, and applying the balance, if any, to the liquidation of the judgment-creditor's debt. The High Court point out in their judgment "the appropriate remedy is what is known as equitable execution or indirect execution, namely, by the appointment of a Receiver who takes the place of the debtor and acts as an officer subject to the directions of the Execution Court in collecting and disbursing the debtor's income in accordance with the directions of the Execution Court towards the discharge of the claim of the decree-holder." These views appear to the Board to be sound.

Their Lordships think that the judgment of the High Court should be modified in the sense described, and that the case should be remitted to the High Court to make the appointment of the Receiver on the terms just quoted.

In the circumstances their Lordships think that there should be no costs of this appeal; and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 2—Execution of decree—Agreement prior to decree not to execute decree against particular judgment-debtor, effect of.

Section 47 of the C. P. C. is wide enough to permit any valid objection to be taken by a judgment-debtor to the execution of a decree by the decree-holder or his legal representative. [p. 298, col. 2.]

Any pre-decretal agreement between parties to a suit, by the terms of which the passing of the decree is not to be objected to but execution of the decree is not to be taken out against a particular judgment-debtor, can be pleaded and given effect to in execution proceedings and O. XXI, r. 2, C. P. C., is no bar to the entertainment of an objection based on such an agreement. [p. 298, col. 1.]

Mr. K. V. Sesha Iyangar, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Veera Ragava Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The 9th defendant, the judgment-debtor is the appellant. A decree was passed on the 11th of November 1913 against defendants Nos. 1 and 9 and the family properties of defendants Nos 2 to 5, 10 and 12 for Rs. 1,453-12, subsequent interest and costs. Various ineffective applications were made to execute the decree. E. P. No. 156 of 1922 was filed for attachment and sale of the 9th defendant's properties. When the properties were attached, he filed a petition objecting to the execution of the decree on the ground that the plaintiff undertook not to proceed against him and to exonerate him and executed an agreement to that effect on the 5th of November 1913, namely before, the date of the decree. The agreement relied by the appellant is in these terms ".....As I have taken a promissory-note for Rs. 1,000 from you and from Narayanaswami Naicken, son of Tirumalai Naicken of Sankarapuram and as I paid the Rs. 1,000 to Narayanaswami Naicken only and as you have signed in the promissory-note only as joint for Narayanaswami Naicken I shall recover the whole amount from Narayanaswami Naicken only. If instead of that, I recover the amount from you I alone shall be responsible to you for the amount of (loss) sustained by you".

The lower Courts without admitting the agreement in evidence held on the authority of Arumugam Pillay v. Krishnaswami Naidu (1), that such an agreement cannot be pleaded as a bar and allowed execution to proceed.

The question for consideration in this Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal is whether the agreement relied upon by the appellant, made prior to the passing of the decree in the suit, can be pleaded as a defence to the execution of the decree. In Chidambaram Chettiar v. Krishna Vathiyar (2) it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that such an agreement can be pleaded in proceedings taken in execution of the decree. In the course of his judgment in that case the Officiating Chief Justice pointed out. "The powers of the Court executing a decree are laid down in s. 47, the terms of which are extremely wide" and stated, "By a long course of decisions in this Presidency it has been held that an agreement made before the passing of the decree by which the decree, was not to be executed for a certain time, is a matter to be enquired into and decided by the Executing Court." The decision was based upon the "very comprehensive terms of s. 47" and upon the prior decisions of this Court. In Doraiswami Moopan v. Subbalakshmi Palayee Ammal (3) this decision was accepted as stating the correct law by Sadasiva Aiyer and Napier, JJ., though they distinguished in that particular case the Full Bench decision. The learned Judges point out "The agreement in question was not to further prosecute the suit, that is, not to obtain a decree in the suit. The decision in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Krishna Vathiyar (2) does not apply, as the agreement before decree in that case was to the effect that a decree was to be passed but the decree so obtained was not to be executed" It is to be noticed that the learned Judges do not in any way limit the scope of that decision. The Full Bench decision was followed in Sambasiva Aiyar v. Thirumalia Ramanuja Tathachariar (4) but it was not applied as in that case the adjustment pleaded though subsequent to the preliminary decree was prior to the final decree. It was urged by the learned Advocate-General in Sambasiva Aiyar v. Thirumalai Ramanuja Tathachariar (4) that the Full Bench ruling required reconsideration or, at any rate, that it should be confined to the facts of the case before the Full Bench. With reference to this argument the learned Judges Ayling and Krishnan made the following observations, ".....we are not justified in cutting down the effect of the Full Bench in the manner suggested. We think the Full Bench decided that any pre-decree agreement between parties to a suit, by the terms of which the passing of the decee is not to be objected to but the execution is to be stayed in whole or in part either temporarily or for all time, can be pleaded and given effect to in execution proceedings and O. XXI, r. 2 is no bar to it. Though the arguments of the Advocate-General against the view of the Full Bench and in favour of the Calcutta view to the contrary as stated in Benode Lal Pakrashi v. Brajendra Kumar Saha (5) and Hassan Ali v. Gauri Ali (6), are not without force, we consider we are bound by that ruling. It is eminently desirable that on a question of procedure there should be certainty and finality" The Full Bench decision has been followed again in a very recent decision reported in Arunachala Goundan v. Swaminatha Aiyar (7). It is pointed out by the learned Judges Spencer and Devadoss that "The District Judge's refusal to allow the appellant to set up in these execution proceedings, any agreement prior to decree, and his direction to the appellant to seek his remedy in a separate suit cannot, however, be supported. Section 47 of the C. P. C. is wide enough to permit any valid objection to be taken by a judgment-debtor to the execution of a decree by the decree-holder or the decree-holder's legal representative", and the learned Judges refer to the Full Bench decision. The decisions in Arumugam Pillay v. Krishnaswami Naidu (1) and in Koonameni Mallaya v. Kanneganti China Kotaya (8) no doubt try to limit the scope of the application of the Full Bench decision. But in the latest decision in Arunachala Goundan v. Swaminatha Aiyar (7), as has been already pointed out by us, the Full Bench decision is given full effect and the decision is based upon the very wide terms of s. 47 of the C. P. C.

(1) 56 Ind. Cas. 976; 43 M. 725; 12 L. W. 41; 39 M. L. J. 222.

(2) 37 Ind. Cas. 836; 40 M. 233; 21 M. L. T. 24; 5 L. W. 132; (1917) M. W. N. 44; 32 M. L. J. 13.

(3) 46 Ind. Cas. 880; 8 L. W. 205; (1918) M. W. N. 547.

In our opinion the Full Bench decision applies to this case and the agreement relied upon by the judgment-debtor should be considered by the lower Court on its merits. We, therefore, set aside the order appealed against and remand the case to the lower Court for disposal according to law. The appellant will have his costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

A period of one hundred years, and even of fifty five years, is not necessarily too short for the growth of a custom of pre-emption in the United Provinces, where such a custom is well-known to be very common. [p. 301, col. 1.]

A village was owned by a single proprietor between the years 1818 and 1820. The Wajib-ul-arz of 1833, however, contained an entry recognizing the existence of the custom of pre-emption in the village. The entry was repeated with fuller details in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1860 and again in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1885. The Wajib-ul-arz of 1833 recognized only one category of pre-emptors, but that of 1860 recognized three categories including the one mentioned in the earlier wajib-ul-arz, and the Wajib-ul-arz of 1885 recognized four categories, also including the one mentioned in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1833. In a suit for pre-emption brought by a person who belonged to the category of pre-emptors which was recognized in all the three wajib-ul-araiz as against a stranger:

Held, (1) that in order to prove the existence of a custom of pre-emption the plaintiff was entitled to rely on the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of the last Settlement of 1885, which raised a prima facie presumption that there was a custom of pre-emption existing in the village, and could supplement this evidence by the entries in the earlier Wajib-ul-araiz of 1860 and 1833 as corroborative evidence; [p. 301, col. 1.]

(2) that as the entries in these wajib-ul-araiz raised a prima facie presumption in favour of the plaintiff the burden lay on the defendant to show the contrary by producing evidence to rebut that presumption; [ibid.]

(3) that the mere fact that more than one hundred years prior to the suit and about fifty five years prior to the last Settlement the village was owned by a single proprietor was not sufficient to rebut the presumption arising from the entries in the successive wajib-ul-araiz; [ibid.]

(4) that the preferential right of the plaintiff having been recognized in all the wajib-ul-araiz, the addition of new categories of pre-emptors in the Wajib-ul-araiz of 1860 and 1885 did not negative the existence of a custom of pre-emption in favour of a person belonging to the category recognized in all the wajib-ul-araiz. [p. 301, col. 2.]

The mere fact that an entry with regard to pre-emption in later wajib-ul-araiz is fuller than an earlier one does not raise a presumption that the wajib-ul-araiz do not constitute a record of custom, for the later wajib-ul-araiz may very well be mere amplifications of the previous wajib-ul-arz. The case may, however, be different where the entries in the later wajib-ul-araiz absolutely contradict the entries in the previous wajib-ul-araiz and cannot be reconciled with them. [p. 302, col. 1.]

An entry in the wajib-ul-arz of an exclusively Hindu village situate within the Gorakhpur District made in the Settlement of 1885, with regard to the existence of a custom of pre-emption, is entitled to special weight and the Court is entitled to presume that the Settlement Officer, before making the entry, was fully satisfied of a custom of pre-emption having existed in the village. [p. 301, col. 2.]

Where a fresh wajib-ul-arz is not prepared at a partition, it does not necessarily follow as a matter of law or principle that the custom or contract in force before the partition is no longer to have effect or operation. In the absence of a contract to the contrary the old custom would continue even after the partition. The partition, however would have the effect of confining the right to the new physical units created at the time of the partition. Under the pre-existing custom persons who were jointly liable for payment of Government revenue would have had a right of pre-emption as against a stranger. After the partition those proprietors whose shares are situated in another mahal are no longer under any joint liability to pay such a revenue. Owners of one mahal can, therefore, in no sense be called co-sharers of a vendor qua the share sold in another mahal. In order, therefore, to establish that a right of pre-emption exists in such a case it is not sufficient for a plaintiff to show merely that previous to the partition a custom of pre-emption existed in the village. It is necessary for him to show, either on the construction of the wajib-ul-arz or by other evidence, that the custom of pre-emption which obtained in the unpartitioned mauza had survived on partition of that mauza into separate mahals so as to give a sharer in one of the new mahals a right to pre-empt property in another of those mahals, in which he was not a sharer at the date of the sale. [p. 302, cols. 1 & 2.]

The mere fact that a plaintiff has instituted a suit for pre-emption at the instigation of other persons would not by itself disentitle him from getting a decree. If the plaintiff has a legal right to pre-empt, it is unnecessary for the Court to consider from what source he is going to procure the pre-emption money. If after obtaining a decree he allows any stranger to come in or attempts to transfer the property to such stranger it would be open to the co-sharers of the village to bring a suit for pre-emption. [p. 304, col. 1.]

In the absence of evidence to the contrary houses or buildings situate within the area of a zemindari appertain to the zemindari and are included in and pass with it. [p. 304, col. 2.]

(Case-law referred to.)

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 30th of July 1921.

Dr. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Messrs. Sankar Saran and Iswar Saran, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—[May 29, 1924.]—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. Under a sale-deed dated the 31st of August 1919 Musammat Padmavati defendant No. 2 transferred to Rai Bahadur Babu Abhainandan Prasad defendant No. 1 a 7-anna and odd share in holding No. 6 mahal No. 3 of village Magadiha and a 12-anna share in mahal No. 2 patti No. 1 of the same village for Rs. 25,000. The plaintiff claimed that under a custom prevailing in this village he was entitled to pre-empt this sale inasmuch as it had been effected without any offer being made to him in the first instance. He also alleged that the sale consideration mentioned in the deed was inflated, the true consideration being only Rs. 19,243-2-0.

The defendant-vendee inter alia denied the existence of this alleged custom and also pleaded that in consequence of a subsequent partition the custom even if it had existed before ceased to exist. It was also pleaded that the plaintiff was not a co-sharer in mahal No. 2, and it was also a part of the defence that the defendant himself was a near relation of the vendor and, therefore, the plaintiff had no preference over him. The allegation of the plaintiff that the sale consideration mentioned in the deed was not correct was denied, and it was further pleaded that the present suit was not a bona fide one but had been instituted in collusion with one Babu Jugul Kishore who was a stranger to this village. There was a further plea that the sale-deed covered two houses which were not liable to pre-emption.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that there is a custom of pre-emption prevailing in both the mahals of this village, and that even if the plaintiff is not a co-sharer in mahal No. 2 he is entitled to pre-empt the share sold in that mahal inasmuch as he is a proprietor in the village. He has also held that the evidence adduced by the defendant that there had been a refusal before the sale, was not sufficient to establish the plea. He has further held that the mere fact that the suit was brought at the instance of some other person is no ground for its dismissal. As to the consideration he has held that there is nothing to show that the sale consideration entered in the deed was exaggerated.

The defendant vendee has come up in appeal to this Court and on his behalf some of the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge are challenged. The plaintiff has, however, submitted to this decree and does not challenge the finding as to the sale consideration.

Five main grounds have been urged before us.

First, that no custom has been established to exist in this village and that in any case if such a custom existed it has ceased to exist in consequence of the partition.

Secondly, that the defendant is a rishtedar qaribi (near relation) of the vendor and that, therefore, the plaintiff has no preference over him.

Thirdly, that the plaintiff had in fact refused to purchase the property before the sale was made to the defendant.

Fourthly, that the suit is not a bona fide suit and is liable to be dismissed, and Fifthly, that the plaintiff has no right to claim pre-emption in respect of the houses in question.

In support of the alleged custom the plaintiff relied on entries in the Wajib-ul-arziz of 1833, 1860 and 1885. He also relied on a judgment in the case of the year 1901 and a judgment of the year 1907, and also on a reference in those judgments to an earlier pre-emption decree of 1880. On the other hand it has been contended on behalf of the defendant that having regard to the previous history of this village, the variations in the three wajib-ul-arziz, and the partition which has since been effected, there is really no custom in this village. In order to show the previous history of this village reliance is placed on two documents called, 'kaifiyat mahtawi' and 'kaifiyat sarishtai nizamat' of 1833 and 1860 respectively. These documents show that soon after the district of Gorakhpur had been acquired by the British Government from the Nawab Wazir of Oudh the village was farmed out to one Sheikh Farhat from 1210 to 1212 Fasli. From 1213 to 1215 Fasli the village was in possession of certain mortgagees Mirza Hasan Ali Beg and Assubut Ali. From 1216 to 1219 Fasli it was farmed out to three persons Ganesh Dat, Balgobind and Dat Ram. From 1220 to 1224 Fasli Ganesh Dat and Dat Ram were in possession. On the 29th of February 1818, however, the whole village appears to have been sold and the name of Gobind Singh, auction-purchaser, was recorded exclusively. Subsequent to this and about 1820 Gobind Singh sold this village to three persons, Sheo Nath, Nandlal and Balgobind. At the time of the Regular Settlement of 1833 a four-anna share was recorded in the names of Uma Dat and Sheo Nath, an eight-anna share in the names of Nandlal and Balgobind and the remaining four-anna share in the names of Bisheshar Dat, Mahesh Dat and Sankar Dat. It is not disputed that from the year 1820 onwards there have always been more than one co-sharer in this village. It is strongly contended that inasmuch as the village was owned by a single proprietor from the year 1818 to 1820 there could possibly have been no occasion for the growth of a custom of pre-emption and that, therefore, the entry in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1833 must be taken to be a record of contract. It is then urged that the subsequent entries in the Wajib-ul-araiz of 1860 and 1885 must, therefore, also be presumed to have been records of contract. We are, of opinion, that this is not a correct way of approaching the question. The plaintiff is entitled to rely on the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of the last Settlement of 1885. That entry raises a prima facie presumption that there is a custom of pre-emption existing in this village. The plaintiff can further supplement this evidence by the entries in the earlier Wajib-ul-araiz of 1860 and 1833 as corroborative evidence. If these wajib-ul-araiz raise a prima facie presumption that a custom of pre-emption exists in the village the burden would lie on the defendant-vendee to show the contrary by producing evidence to rebut that presumption. All that is established in this case is that about the year 1820, that is to say, more than 100 years ago (and about 55 years prior to the Last Settlement) there was a single proprietor in this village. In our opinion this circumstance by itself is not sufficient to rebut the presumption arising from the entries in the successive wajib-ul-araiz. A period of 100 years and even of 55 years is not necessarily too short for the growth of a custom of pre-emption in these provinces where such a custom is well-known to be very common. It is not essential to show that such a custom is immemorial, [vide Kuar Singh v. Mamman (1) and Lakhraj Bharthi v. Anrudh Tewari (2)].

The next point urged is that inasmuch as there are variations in the three wajib-ul-araiz the presumption is negatived. It is pointed out that under the wajib-ul-arz of 1833 a right was given to mere co-sharers in the village, whereas in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1860 a right was given to near co-sharers (hissedar qaribi), then to co-sharers in the thok and then to the other co-sharers in the village, and in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1885 a right was given to own brothers, then to near relations, then to co-sharers in the patti and then to co-sharers in the village. It is apparent, therefore, that in the year 1833 there was only one category of pre-emptors, in 1860 there were three categories, and in 1885 there were four categories.

We must, however, note that so far as the right to pre-empt the property in favour of a co-sharer as against a stranger is concerned this was recognized in all the three wajib-ul-araiz. The plaintiff is not claiming a preference against the defendant on the ground that he is either an own brother or a near relation of the vendor. He claims the right of pre-emption on the ground that he is a co-sharer while the defendant-vendee is a perfect stranger. The addition of the new categories in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1885, therefore, does not necessarily negative the existence of a custom of pre-emption in favour of a co-sharer as against a stranger.

We may point out that the entry made at the Settlement of 1885 is of particular importance. According to the Gazetteer of Gorakhpur (pp. 151-2) the Settlement operations commenced soon after 1883 and lasted till 1890. Gorakhpur proper was inspected in 1886-87 or after. The Settlement was sanctioned from 1889 to 1919. Now under the Circular of the Board of Revenue dated the 24th of August 1886 which was issued for the guidance of officers conducting the Settlement operations in Gorakhpur district it was provided that the Settlement Officer should make a note of custom or constitution peculiar to a mahal and it was further provided that as regards mahals which belonged to proprietors other than Muhammadans the Settlement Officer was to record a right of pre-emption only when the proprietors expressly demanded that it be noted and proved conclusively that the custom existed. In the year 1886 this village was an exclusively Hindu village and we are entitled to presume that at that time the Settlement Officer before making this entry was fully satisfied that a custom did exist in the village. We have had occasions to refer to the Circular in several cases. [vide the cases of Nandan Singh v. Guptar Singh (3) and Babban Pande v. Lachhman Chaudhri (4).]

As a special significance attaches to the entry in the last wajib-ul-arz we are entitled to draw a very strong presumption from it, specially as it purports to record a custom of pre-emption and not only an agreement as to such a right.

It may also be noted that it is possible that when a more thorough enquiry was made in 1885 complete details of the custom were recorded which were not forthcoming at the time when the Wajib-ul-arz of 1860 or of 1833 was prepared. It was held in the case of Returaji Dubain v. Pahlwan Bhagat (5) that the mere fact that subsequent wajib-ul-araiz are fuller raises no presumption that they were not records of a custom, for the latter wajib-ul-araiz may very well be mere amplifications of the previous wajib-ul-araiz. The case may be different when they absolutely contradict the entries in the previous wajib-ul-araiz and cannot be reconciled with them.

We have already noted that in addition to the entries in these wajib-ul-araiz the plaintiff has produced the judgments of 1901 and 1907. The judgment of 1901 also contained a reference to a pre-emption decree of 1880. We, therefore, find that the custom did exist.

We are also of opinion that the effect of the partition of 1897 which was subsequent to the year 1885, when the last wajib-ul-arz was prepared, cannot be deemed to extinguish the custom. No new wajib-ul-araiz were framed at the partition of 1897 and there is nothing on the record to show that the co-sharers intended that the old custom should be abrogated. It was held in the Full Bench case of Dalganjan Singh v. Kalka Singh (6) that such a partition had not necessarily the effect of extinguishing the previously existing custom. In the recent case of Digambar Singh v. Ahmed Sayeed Khan (7) their Lordships of the Privy Council quoted with approval the view of Mr. Justice Banerji that "where a fresh wajib-ul-arz has not been prepared at partition, it does not necessarily follow as a matter of law or principle, that the custom or contract in force before partition is no longer to have effect or operation.

The view that in the absence of evidence to the contrary the old custom would continue even after the partition has been consistently followed by this Court, [vide the cases of Jokhan Singh v. Sabhajeet Singh (8) and Deokinandan v. Mehtab Rai (9)]. We, therefore, think that the mere fact that there has been a partition of this village would not necessarily extinguish the right. The partition, however, would have the effect of confining the right to the new fiscal units. Under the pre-existing custom the persons who were jointly liable for payment of Government revenue had a right of pre-emption as against a stranger. After the partition those proprietors whose shares are situated in another mahal are no longer under any joint liability to pay such revenue. Owners of one mahal can, therefore, in no sense be called co-sharers (hissadaran) of the vendor qua the share sold in another mahal. In order, therefore, to establish that the plaintiff has a right of pre-emption in this mahal it is not sufficient for him to show merely that previous to the partition a custom of pre-emption existed in this village. In the Privy Council case of Digambar Singh v. Ahmad Sayeed Khan (7) their Lordships at page 141* pointed out that a mere proof that prior to the partition of the village the custom of pre-emption existed would not be sufficient to entitle the appellant to a decree. It would be necessary for him to show either on the construction of the wajib-ul-arz or by other evidence that the custom of pre-emption which obtained in the unpartitioned mauza would survive on partition of that mauza into separate mahals so as to give a sharer in one of the new mahals a right to pre-empt property in another of those mahals in which he was not a sharer at the date of the sale.

The plaintiff is not a co-sharer in mahal No. 2. He is a proprietor in the village. There is nothing to show that at the time of the partition the right of the proprietors in the village to pre-empt shares sold in mahals other than their own was preserved. In the absence of any such evidence the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for pre-emption of the share sold in mahal No. 2. The learned Vakil for the respondent has relied on the judgments of 1901 and 1907 to show that they are evidence of a right of pre-emption having been exercised in favour of a co-sharer in another mahal. This view is expressed by the learned Subordinate Judge also. We are, however, unable to accept that this was so. A perusal of the judgment of the year 1901 makes it quite clear that the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that it had not been established in that case that the plaintiff was a co-sharer of another mahal and not of the same mahal in which the share sold was situated whereas the judgment of 1901 which unfortunately has not been printed shows that the claim was decreed not on the ground that the plaintiff was a co-sharer in another mahal but on the ground that he was a near relation of the vendor.

The defendant vendee says that he is a rishtedar qaribi of the vendor and, therefore, claims that he comes under the first category of the entry in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1885. There is a pedigree attached to the written statement filed by the defendant which shows that the defendant was the nephew of Babu Sham Lal who was the maternal grandfather of the husband of the vendor Musammat Padmavati. He is not related in the direct paternal line but is related through a female and he is related really to the vendor's deceased husband and not to the vendor herself. Furthermore the several links in the pedigree show that he is not a near relation (hissedar qaribi) though he may be called a distant relation (hissedar baidi) of the vendor's husband. We are, therefore, not satisfied that the defendant-vendee can bring himself within the second category mentioned in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1885, namely, the category of near relation so as to have a preference over the plaintiff.

The defendant in support of his plea of refusal produced considerable oral evidence. The story told on his behalf was that prior to the execution of the sale-deed and after the contract had been settled Sham Sunder Lal, the mukhtar-am of the defendant, went to the village Magadiha and took with him Narain Lal, karinda of the vendor. Narain Lal then summoned all the co-sharers and proprietors of the village and they were asked in a meeting as to whether they would take the property. They all refused saying that they were themselves, indebted and could not afford to purchase it. It is said that the plaintiff Pashpat Nath Pande was also present there and definitely refused to purchase the property. In support of this story four witnesses have been examined. Narain Lal is dead and could not be produced, but Sham Sunder Lal, mukhtar-am supports the defendant. As however, he is under the control and influence of the defendant it is not possible to place implicit reliance on his statement. The second witness is Bansidhar. As to this witness Sham Sunder Lal had stated that he was a karinda of Babu Abhainandan Prasad, but the witness himself was not questioned on this point in cross-examination. Bansidhar is not a person of such a status that his evidence must necessarily be accepted. The third witness is Har Sewak. He is also a man of not very high status and admits that he is indebted to the defendant-vendee (Mukhtar Saheb). The fourth witness Kali Charan is a tenant of the defendant. All these four witnesses were examined before the learned Subordinate Judge who had a full opportunity of hearing them and marking their demeanour and after having heard their evidence he was not satisfied that they should be believed. We may also note that the defendant's story is not a probable one. According to the khewat there are a very large number of co-sharers in this village. It is also in evidence that the plaintiff lives sometimes in village Charpani and sometimes in village Magdiha. It is difficult to believe that it could be imagined beforehand that on the date proposed all the co-sharers would be available or could be persuaded to come and attend the meeting. The defendant is a member of the legal profession and one would expect that he would have taken every precaution to get refusals from the persons who were likely to pre-empt. It is not suggested that registered notices were issued to the co-sharers or their signatures obtained on any paper. The recital contained in the sale-deed also shows that the vendor's husband had acquired the property under a pre-emption decree and the vendee was, therefore, aware of the right of pre-emption. Under the circumstances it was to be expected that the defendant-vendee would have taken greater precaution of procuring proof of a direct refusal. The plaintiff has gone into the witness-box and denied that any offer was made to him or that he refused to purchase. No doubt the oral evidence on the side of the defendant is more voluminous, but in the face of the above mentioned circumstances we find it impossible to differ from the view taken by the Court below that that evidence should not be accepted. We must, therefore, hold that it has not been established that the plaintiff had refused to purchase the property before the sale was effected.

The next point urged is that the plaintiff is himself highly indebted to various persons and, therefore, is not in a position to pre-empt this property. It is suggested that the suit is really brought at the instance of Jugul Kishore who himself is a stranger. Two witnesses Hari Shankar and Kali Prasad were produced to prove an admission of the plaintiff that he was fighting this case in the interest of Jugul Kishore with whom he had entered into some secret arrangement. We find it difficult to believe that even if that was so the plaintiff would have been advertising the fact to witnesses like Hari Shankar and Kali Prasad. It is true that the plaintiff is heavily indebted and it is unlikely that without raising money from some source or other he would be able to pre-empt this property. All the same it is difficult to record a finding that it has been established that the plaiutiff is fighting the case not on his own behalf. Furthermore, we are of opinion that even if it had been established that the plaintiff had instituted the suit at the instigation of other persons that would not by itself have disentitled the plaintiff from getting a decree. If the plaintiff has a legal right to pre-empt it is unnecessary for the Court to consider from what source he is going to procure the pre-emption money. If subsequent to this litigation he allows any stranger to come in or attempts to transfer the property to such stranger it would be open to the co-sharers of the village to bring a suit for pre-emption. It was held in the case of Athar Husain v. Idu Shah (10) by the Oudh Court of which one of us was a party that the mere fact that the suit was instituted at the expense of another person and that the person claiming pre-emption was merely a nominal plaintiff acting on his behalf was immaterial so long as the plaintiff had the legal right to pre-empt. This view has been followed by this Court in the case of Makhan v. Shyam Lal (S. A. No. 1444 of 1922 decided on the 25th of January, 1924).

The last point to consider is as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to pre-empt the two houses situated in mahal No. 2 which have been transferred under the sale-deed. In this mahal the entire patti No. 6 has been transferred, and it is not disputed that these houses stand on the land so transferred. Ordinarily these houses would be deemed to be appurtenant to the zemindari property unless there was evidence to show that they were treated separately and stood on a distinct and separate footing. Reliance is placed strongly on behalf of the defendant on the circumstances that in the sale deed these houses are separately mentioned and their boundaries are separately given. In every village, however, zemindars have their collection houses which are appurtenant to the zemindari. Our attention has not been drawn to any specific evidence which would indicate that these houses were held and occupied separately and independently of the zemindari. It was held in the case of Abu Hsuain v. Ramzan Ali (11) that in the absence of evidence to the contrary the houses or buildings situate within the zemindari area were included in and passed with the zemindari. [See also Banke Lal v. Jagat Narain (12).] We may also note that in the sale-deed no separate valuation of these houses has been entered.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal succeeds as regards mahal No. 2 and fails as regards mahal No. 3 in which we find that the plaintiff is entitled to a preferential right. The sale in this case was effected for a consideration of Rs. 25,000 the correctness of which is no longer challenged here but there are no materials on the record to enable us to determine what portion of that consideration was paid on account of the share sold in mahal No. 2 and what part of it was paid on account of the portion sold in mahal No. 3 including the materials of the houses standing therein which are comprised in the sale. We accordingly direct the lower Court to determine after taking such additional evidence as the parties may adduce.

What portion of the sale consideration should be paid by the plaintiff for the portion of the property in dispute which is situated in mahal No. 3 including the materials of the houses in question as a condition precedent to the enforcement of the pre-emptive right?

Two months' time will be allowed for the return of the finding and ten days will be allowed from the date of receipt of the finding for filing objections.

The case came on after the finding for final hearing and the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are fully set forth in our remand order dated the 29th of May 1924. An issue was sent down to the Court below for a finding as to what portion of the sale consideration should be paid by the plaintiff for the portion of the property in dispute which is situated in mahal No. 3 including the materials of the houses in question as a condition precedent to the enforcement of the pre emptive right. The finding of the Court below is that Rs. 23,076 would be the total price payable by the plaintiff on account of the property which can be pre-empted. The question to be decided in the Court below was one of fact. The plaintiff was altogether absent and his Vakil stated in the Court below that he had no instructions. Certain objections have been filed to the finding returned by the Court below. But there is no evidence in support of those objections. The finding must, therefore, be accepted. We accordingly allow this appeal and modify the decree of the Court below to this extent that we decree the plaintiff's claim for the portion of the property in dispute which is situated in mahal No. 3 including the materials of the houses in question on payment by the plaintiff within two months from this date a sum of Rs. 23,076. In the event of payment the parties shall pay and receive costs in both Courts in proportion to their failure and success including in this Court-fees on the higher scale. In case the amount mentioned above is not deposited in Court within the time fixed the suit shall stand dismissed with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Hindu Law—Idol, nature of—Legal status—Shebait, position and powers of—Shebaitship, devolution of—Removal of idol, whether permissible.

A Hindu idol is a "juristic entity." It has a juridical status with the power of suing and being sued. Its interests are attended to by the person who has the deity in his charge and who is in law its manager, with all the powers which would, in such circumstances, on analogy, be given to the manager of the estate of an infant heir. [p. 306, col. 2.]

A person founding a deity and becoming responsible for the duties attached to its worship is de facto and in common parlance called shebait. This responsibility is discharged by a pious Hindu, either by the personal performance of the religious rites or by the employment of a Brahmin priest to do so on his behalf. The founder or his successor may confer the office of shebait on another. [p. 307, col. 1.]

Under the Hindu Law when the worship of a Thakur has been founded, the shebaitship is invested in the heirs of the founder, in default of evidence that he has disposed of it otherwise or that there has been some usage, course of dealing, or some circumstances to show a different mode of devolution. [p. 310, col. 1.]

There may be difficulties in adjusting the legal status of an idol to the circumstances and requirements of its protection and location and there may also be a variety of other contacts of such a "persona" with mundane ideas, but a family idol cannot be reduced to the position of a mere moveable chattel. [p. 309, col. 1.]

The Will of an idol in regard to its location must be respected. If in the course of a proper and unassailable administration of the worship of the idol by the shebait, it be thought that a family idol should change its location, the Will of the idol itself, expressed through his guardian must be given effect to. It is open to an idol acting through his guardian, the shebait, to conduct its worship in its own way, at its own place, always on the assumption that the acts of the shebait expressing the Will of the idol are not inconsistent with the reverent and proper conduct of its worship by those members of the family who render service and pay homage to it. [p. 310, col. 2; p. 311, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment and decree of the Calcutta High Court (Sir Lancelot Sanderson, Kt., Chief Justice and Justice Sir Thomas Richardson. Kt.,) dated the 10th April 1923, in Appeal from Original Civil Jurisdiction No. 92 of 1922, reported as 77 Ind. Cas. 833, reversing the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 1st June 1922, reported as 76 Ind. Cas. 985.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Shaw.—The questions raised by this appeal are of a wide and general importance. They have reference to the control and worship of a Hindu family idol. It may be explained that although one idol is referred to, called, of course, the Thakur, there were two others, the Thakurani, a female idol referred to in some of the papers as the consort of the Thakur, and there was also a third, a sacred or deified stone called the Salgram Sila,

These three idols became the objects of the pious worship of the family of the founder, Mutty Lal Mullick, who originally installed them. But the points in the case can be more simply treated by referring to the one, namely, the principal idol the Thakur.

The appeal is from a decree dated the 10th April, 1923, made by the High Court in Calcutta in its Civil Appellate Jurisdiction reversing a decree dated the 1st June, 1922, made by the same Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The case was argued at great length, and a large mass of authorities was cited.

Before entering upon the legal questions which were debated, their Lordships think it not inadvisable to state the family history, in so far as it concerns the installation of this idol. It was established and consecrated many years ago by a wealthy Hindu inhabitant of Calcutta, Babu Mutty Lal Mullick, in his family dwelling house, in a Thakur Ghar, or room therein, set apart for worship.

Mutty Lal Mullick died in 1846 leaving a widow, Ranganmoni, and an adopted son, Jadulal, then two years of age. He left a Will dated 17th August, 1846 (shortly before his death). He had for some time prior to his death set up and established and consecrated the idol, and no doubt is thrown upon the fact that the idol so installed became unquestionably the object of worship by himself and the family. The Will provided that his widow should be the malik or proprietor and attorney, for the protection and care of the whole of his estate until his adopted son Jadulal attained the age of 20, and the enumeration included the Sri Iswar Thakurs, Thakuranis etc., established by him and ancestorial.

Upon the adopted son attaining 20 the property was to be made over to the son as his heir. There was a power to the widow, in case the adopted son died without issue to adopt another. A gift was made to the widow of one lac of rupees, together with various jewels and silver with right of residence in the family residence. With regard to the maintenance and worship of the idol certain funds, amounting to Rs. 600 a month, were to be drawn by the widow and therewith she was to defray the expenses of the idol's Sheba (or worship) and for religious festivals and ceremonies, "in the method that I have paid and defrayed the same hitherto." Upon the adopted son attaining 20 the widow was to "make over the whole of the property to him fully and he will in a like manner protect the whole of the property and effectuate the kreah karmas, or religious acts and ceremonies."

It seems accordingly clear that in Mutty Lal Mullick's lifetime the idol was, as already stated, established as a household god; and the pious founder, narrating his own upkeep and maintenance of the deity, gave funds in order that those should be continued; and he prescribed the duty of continuance to the widow during the adopted son's minority and upon the son thereafter during his life.

One of the questions emerging at this point, is as to the nature of such an idol, and the services due thereto. A Hindu idol is, according to long established authority, founded upon the religious customs of the Hindus, and the recognition thereof by Courts of Law, a "juristic entity." It has a juridical status with the power of suing and being sued. Its interests are attended to by the person who has the deity in his charge and who is in law its manager with all the powers which would, in such circumstances, on analogy, be given to the manager of the estate of an infant heir. It is unnecessary to quote the authorities; for this doctrine, thus simply stated, is firmly established.

A useful narrative of the concrete realities of the position is to be found in the judgment of Mukerji, J. in Rambrama Chatterjee v. Kedar Nath Banerjee (1).

"We need not describe here in detail the normal type of continued worship of a consecrated image,—the sweeping of the temple, the process of smearing, the removal of the previous day's offerings of flowers, the presentation of fresh flowers, the respectful oblation of rice with flowers and water, and other like practices. It is sufficient to state that the deity is, in short, conceived as a living being and is treated in the same way as the master of the house would be treated by his humble servant. The daily routine of life is gone through with minute accuracy; the vivified image is regaled with the necessaries and luxuries of life in due succession, even to the changing of clothes, the offering of cooked and uncooked food, and the retirement to rest."

The person founding a deity and becoming responsible for these duties is de facto and in common parlance called shebait. This responsibility is, of course, maintained by a pious Hindu, either by the personal performance of the religious rites or—as in the case of Sudras, to which caste the parties belonged—by the employment of a Brahmin priest to do so on his behalf. Or the founder, any time before his death or his successor likewise, may confer the office of shebait on another.

Under the Will of Mutty Lal Mullick he did not adopt the latter course, but he acted as shebait with the Brahmin assistance referred to. After his death his widow officiated similarly as the ministrant of the worship, and she used, as directed, the endowed funds specially destined for the upkeep and worship of the deity. After the adopted son Jadulal reached the age of 20 he then became de facto the person, charged with the same duties, to be performed as fully as his adoptive father and mother had performed them.

It must be remembered in regard to this branch of the law that the duties of piety from the time of the consecration of the idol are duties to something existing which, though symbolising the Divinity, has in the eye of the law a status as a separate persona. The position and rights of the deity must, in order to work this out both in regard to its preservation, its maintenance and the services to be performed, be in the charge of a human being. Accordingly he is the shebait custodian of the idol and manager of its estate. And so, paying proper respect to the religious proprieties of the case, the father, mother and adopted son were successively and de facto ministrants and custodians of this idol

The period during which this state of matters existed was in the narrative from anterior to 1846 till the year 1864. The widow's charge of the affairs of the idol had come to an end; and Jadulal the son's period of administration, he having reached the age of 20, had begun. Jadulal died in the year 1894. What had happened during his period of administration was this: that in 1881 he enlarged the old family dwelling-house, containing the Thakurbari in which the household gods had hitherto resided and were worshipped. He had erected a puja dalan for the worship of all the family Thakurs, including the three referred to, that is to say, instead of one house with its Thakurbari for the family, two houses were erected on adjoining plots of ground and between these the puja dalan was erected, having a private entrance from each of the private dwellings so that the family worship was conducted with due decorum and propriety in what was practically an annexe to either house.

Two other events occurred which are important during this period of Jadulal's regime. In 1888 he executed a deed of trust providing particular premises for the location and worship of the deities in the puja dalan aforesaid. The terms of this deed are the centre of the contentions raised by the parties in the appeal and will be more particularly hereinafter referred to. The other fact affecting this period was that in the year 1891 Ranganmoni, the widow of Mutty Lal Mullick, died. She made a very large endowment in favour of the family idol, amounting to about one lac of rupees. By her will she appointed Jadulal her executor and trustee and she made a disposition of her property in these terms:—

"I give and devise my tenanted land, No. 129, Bowbazar Street in Calcutta, to my said trustee, his heirs and representatives to be held by him and them upon trust, to apply the rents and income thereof, after providing for the payment of taxes and other outgoings, in the performance of the daily and periodical worship of the idol, consecrated by my late husband, called Radha-Shamsunder, such worship to be performed by my said son and his descendants."

Jadulal died in 1894, leaving issue, three sons and four daughters. The estates were large, and a suit for partition among the three sons ensued. Questions of importance were raised as to:—

(1) The provisions of Jadulal's Will; and

(2) The endowment by Ranganmoni.

On the former head the disputes and differences were submitted to the arbitration of the late Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, who delivered an award in 1899. That award was made a rule of Court. In the partition proceedings, Mr. Bonnerjee declared that the three sons, as Jadulal's heirs, were entitled to the residue of the father's estate in three equal shares. He allotted one of the two houses to the first son, another to the third son, and, in regard to the second son, the present appellant, he was, so to speak, paid out in money in order that he might erect a desirable residence for himself. Among other trusts declared in Jadulal's Will was the following, namely:—

The trust for the worship of the said Jadulal Mullick's hereditary Goddess Sri Sri Singhabahini Debi and other family deities during his turn or pala of worship.

It is to be observed that, although the turn or pala of worship as amongst the three sons was recognized in that part of the award the idols in question in this case were not named.

In a subsequent part of the award various turns of worship were given to the sons in order. As to the Thakurbari, or puja dalan plans were referred to, and it was declared to be the joint property of the three sons. Prohibition was made against the two sons vested in the adjoining properties raising any structure or building of any kind which might interfere with the joint property. The situation created by this deed accordingly was that, while the deities were not named, the joint property of the three sons in the house dedicated to the idol was declared and the system of worship by turn or pala was established.

With regard to Ranganmoni's estate and endowment, a suit was brought in 1904, and in June, 1905, it was decreed that a scheme should be framed for carrying on the varied trusts of the lady's Will and, subject to provision being made therefor, her estate should be divided into three equal shares among the plaintiff and defendants in this suit. A commission was accordingly issued to Babu Bhupendra Nath Basu to frame a scheme of worship and to partition the residue. This was done by return to the commission, which appointed the worship of Thakur Sri Sri Radha Shamsunderji, the idols in question in this suit, in the following terms:—

"I direct that the sheba and worship of the Thakur Sri Sri Radha Shamsunderji and of the Thakur located at Mahesh and Brindaban and the Ekodistha sradh will be preformed by the parties and their heirs by turns of one year each, the first turn commencing from the 1st day of Baisakh in the Bengali year 1317 and such first turn shall devolve on the said Pradyumna Kumar Mullick and his heirs, the second turn commencing from first day of the month of Baisakh 1318 shall devolve on the said Pramatha Nath Mullick and his heirs, and the third turn commencing from the first day of the month of Baisakh 1319 shall devolve on the said Manmatha Nath Mullick and his heirs, and so on by rotation. On the demise of any one of the parties, his heirs will become entitled to his turn of worship, and the party having the turn of worship will perform such worship without any interference by any of the other parties."

The family very sensibly acted in accordance with the rules set down in these proceedings. The practical result was that the parties, now judicially separated, continued the worship of the idols. The idol was, of course, not removed by the parties during their period of worship of pala because in the building as constructed the idols were located as mentioned in a building adjoining their respective houses.

In the year 1910-11 the second son's establishment was set up. The idol was removed to his house in connection with certain festivals considered suitable for the occasion and, after these were concluded in February, 1911, was brought back to the puja dalan. In May, 1911, the second son's year of pala, or turn of worship, came round and the family idol was removed to the Thakurbari of his house and family worship continued there for one year. In 1914 the same thing occurred, the first respondent being still an infant. It is not suggested in any part of the case that these temporary transfers of the location of the family idol (such temporary transfers on occasions of festivals are familiar in the community) were not conducted with complete reverence and propriety and without interruption of the ordinary daily services tendered to the idol or any of the rights connected with its worship. In short, the results of the partition suit, the interpretation of the Wills of Jadulal and Ranganmoni, and the award made therein, were so far worked out without defect or friction.

When the appellant's pala, however, again came round, namely, in 1917, the transfer of the idol by him as before to his Thakurbari was objected to by the first respondent, who had now attained majority (with whose objection the third son concurs); and the broad question in this appeal is whether that objection is well-founded in law.

In substance the objection is founded upon the deed executed in 1888 by Jadulal.

The argument in the Appellate Court is thus recorded by Richardson, J.—

The learned Standing Counsel, Mr. B. L. Mitter, founding on Mutty Lal's Will, argued that the testator treated the idols or images which he had set up as his personal property and left them absolutely to Jadulal. When pushed, Mr. Mitter said that Jadulal might, if he had so pleased, have thrown them into the river.

The Appellate Court rejected that proposition. And this Board can give no countenance to it. As is added in the judgment referred to :—

The inclusion of the idols, however, among items of property, moveable and immoveable, does not show that the testator regarded his interest in them in the same light as his interest in his secular property. The careful directions given later in the Will show that the testator intended the worship of the ancestral deities and the deities he had established to be a charge upon his estate.

There may be, in the nature of things, difficulties in adjusting the legal status of the idol to the circumstances and requirements of its protection and location and there may, no doubt, also be a variety of other contacts of such a persona with mundane ideas. But an argument which would reduce a family idol to the position of a mere moveable chattel is one to which the Board can give no support. They think that such an argument is neither in accord with a true conception of the authorities, nor with principle. The Board does not find itself at variance with the views upon this subject taken in the Appellate Court or with the analysis of the authorities there contained.

The Appellate Court, it is true, felt itself constrained by the terms of the deed of 1888 to arrive at a conclusion adverse to the case of the appellant ; but upon the main points in argument, both as to the contention that the household god was mere property, and as to Jadulal's right being absolute therein, this appeal was argued before the Board by the Counsel for the respondents here on the footing that if the Appellate Court's decree depended on the reasons given, it could not be defended. The Board is, on the contrary, of the opinion that, upon the two points they discussed, the reasoning and view of the High Court are sound.

Their Lordships would only add, on the subject of property, that the argument is said to be supported by the judgment of Banerjee, J. in Khetter Chunder Ghose v. Hari Das Bundopadhya (2). In that case the facts were that the household idol was made over to relatives, owing to the family, whose idol it was, being unable to carry on the worship on account of the paucity of profits of the endowed lands, and it was held that the transfer was justified in the interests of the idol. It was a proper and a pious act. The shebait, being charged fundamentally with the duty of seeing to the worship being carried on, and, having the concurrence of the entire family to the transaction, did have power to carry through the transaction "for the purpose of performing its worship regularly through generation to generation." The members of the family were thereby deprived of no right of worship. The interests of worshippers and idol were conserved. Their Lordships do not think that such cases form any ground for the proposition that Hindu family idols are property in the crude sense maintained, or that their destruction, degradation or injury are within the power of their custodian for the time being. Such ideas appear to be in violation of the sanctity attached to the idol, whose legal entity and rights as such the law of India has long recognized.

The argument as to property being thus displaced, their Lordships have now to consider the position of Jadulal, the grantor of the deed of 1888.

Was he shebait of this idol in the narrower sense as the appellant contends or did he succeed by virtue of Mutty Lal's Will to the rights and privileges possessed by the testator ? In the deed of 1888, Jadulal declares as follows :—"Whereas the said Babu Mutti Lal Mullick, the father of the said Jadulal Mullick, established and consecrated the Thakur called Radha Shamsunderji." As has been seen, during, his life Mutty Lal Mullick had de facto performed piously and regularly all the duties which the law would charge upon the custodians of the idol. It stands without question that Jadulal himself was fully performing similar duties and functions. As was said by Lord Hobhouse in

(1) 17 C. 557; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 911.

Gossamee Sri Gridhariji v. Romanlalji Gossami (3).

"According to Hindu Law, when the worship of a Thakur has been founded, the shebaitship is held to be vested in the heirs of the founder, in default of evidence that he has disposed of it otherwise, or there has been some usage, course of dealing, or some circumstances to show a different mode of devolution."

A similar principle appears also to have been implied in the judgments of Jagannath Prasad Gupta v. Runjit Singh (4), Sheoratan Kunwari v. Ram Pargash (5) and Jai Bansi Kunwar v. Chattar Dhari Singh (6).

To apply this law to the present case, Jadulal was the sole heir of his father and, by the general law of India, he thus stood vested with the right of custody of, and management of the trust for the family idol which his father had consecrated and set up. So far as the legal status and rights of Jadulal as grantor of the deed of 1888, the deed proceeds to narrate :—

"Whereas the said Jadulal Mullick is now desirous of dedicating the said premises to the said Thakur in the manner hereinafter expressed."

This is perfectly correct language in acknowledgment of the fact that the Thakur existed and was the capable recipient in law of the property dedicated to it. The deed then proceeds to declare that certain premises, described in the schedule, "shall be for ever held by the said Jadulal Mullick his heirs, executors, administrators and representatives to and for the use of the said Thakur Radha Shamsunderji to the intent that the said Thakur may be located and worshipped in the said premises and to and for no other use or intent whatsoever. Provided always that if at any time hereafter it shall appear expedient to the said Jadulal Mullick his heirs, executors, administrators or representatives so to do it shall be lawful for him or them upon his or their providing and dedicating for the location and worship of the said Thakur another suitable Thakurbari of the same or greater value than the premises hereby dedicated to revoke the trusts hereinbefore contained and it is hereby declared that unless and until another Thakurbari is provided and dedicated as aforesaid the said Thakur shall not on any account be removed from the said premises and in the event of another Thakurbari being provided and dedicated as aforesaid the said Thakur shall be located therein but shall not similarly be removed therefrom on any account whatsoever."

This passage has been quoted in full so as to make clear the three propositions which seem to follow, namely, first, the recognition as mentioned of the idol as the dedicatee second, the conveyance in no respect whatever appears to be a conveyance of the idol, but is a conveyance of the premises described in the schedule to and for the use of the idol and for no other use; third, this use is not to be interfered with by Jadulal's heirs, executors, administrators or representatives except upon providing for the dedicatee another Thakurbari of the same or a larger value. When that is done Jadulal's heirs, etc., could revoke the trusts of the premises affecting the present puja dalan, and unless and until that is done the idol is not to be removed therefrom.

It is this last proposition which raises the real difficulty in the case and their Lordships express no surprise that the High Court should have felt it. Upon a full consideration their Lordships have come to the conclusion that this was not a dedication, in any sense of the word, of the idol as property, nor of the idol at all. It was a dedication of real estate in trust for the idol, recognized as a legal entity, to which such dedication might be made.

The true view of this is that the Will of the idol in regard to location must be respected. If, in the course of a proper and unassailable administration of the worship of the idol by the shebait, it be thought that a family idol should change its location, the Will of the idol itself, expressed through his guardian, must be given effect to. This is in accordance with what would appear to be the sound principle of the position and it is further in accord with the authority on the subject. In the case already referred to so far did the decision go that it was expressly said by Lord Hobhouse in Gossammi Sri Gridhariji v. Romanlalji Gossammi (3)

(3) 16 I. A. 137 at p. 144; 17 C. 3; 13 Ind. Jur. 211; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 350; 8 Ind. Dec (N. S.) 541 (P. C.).

"The Thakur Dowjee, or those who speak for him on earth, need not take advantage of this gift."

A fortiori it is open to an idol acting through his guardian the shebait to conduct its worship in its own way at its own place always on the assumption that the acts of the shebait expressing its Will are not inconsistent with the reverent and proper conduct of its worship by those members of the family who render service and pay homage to it.

A question was raised whether the right of worship of an idol can be made the subject of partition. Their Lordships have already referred to this point when dealing with the arbitration proceedings.

In 14 Bengal L. R., page 166, the point aros especially in the case of Mitta Kanth Audhikaree v. Nirunjun Audhlkaree (7). The head-note is as follows:—

"The reasons for which one of several joint owners is entitled to a partition of the joint property, apply also to the case of a joint right of performing the worship of an idol. The joint owners of such a right are entitled to perform their worship by turns."

And, in Sir Richard Couch's judgment, the following rule of law is referred to:—

"The suit is founded upon the right, of the plaintiff,...as property, to a partition. No doubt the plaintiff is entitled to that; and the decree of the First Court was right in awarding it. But that decree has not made provision for the term that each of the three persons, the plaintiff and the two defendants, should have, and does not state whether the plaintiff is to have his turn first, or second, or third. We must, therefore, direct the Extra Assistant Commissioner to determine by lot in what order the plaintiff and the two defendants shall exercise the right to worship the idol: and having determined that he should insert in his decree, so that it will be settled in what order they are to exercise the right of worship."

The sole objection made in these proceedings to the removal by one of the shebaits during his pala or turn of worship to his residence is founded upon the deed of 1888 already analysed. In para. 13 of the defence "this defendant admits that the plaintiff's turn of worship commenced on and from..... the 14th April, 1917. On the 2nd April, 1917, this defendant, who had attained majority on or about 20th November, 1914,...objected." In the evidence of the first respondent, he deposed as follows:—

"Babu Bhupendra Nath Basu divided the turn of worship of six Thakurs, and each of us have one year:.....my only objection is based on the deed of dedication; apart from the deed there would be objection to the removal because the Thakur has its own house where arrangements are made for sheba. I have said that my only objection is on the deed of dedication."

While, however, this is the only objection actually made by the objecting defendant, it has to be pointed out that the idol is not otherwise represented in the proceedings, though the result might conceivably vitally affect its interests. In that sense the contest has related to the establishment of individual rights as between contesting shebaits. The interests of the female members of the family, especially in view of the fact that they are excluded from the managership of the idols, might need special protection. They are entitled to participate in the worship established by Mutty Lal Mullick without obstruction or inconvenience.

Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that it would be in the interests of all concerned that the idol should appear by a disinterested next friend appointed by the Court. The female members of the family should also be joined, and a scheme should be framed, for the regulation of the worship of the idols.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the case should be remitted to the High Court to be dealt with in accordance with this report. It will be necessary in these circumstances to set aside the decrees of both the Courts below. The parties must bear their own costs in the Courts of India and before this Board; any costs paid under either of the decrees of the Courts below will be re-paid.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT No. 1485 OF 1919.

March 27, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mulla.

NATHA GULAB & Co.—PLAINTIFFS

versus

W. C. SHALLER AND G. I. P. RAILWAY COMPANY—DEFENDANTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 123—Retiring gratuity, nature of—Gift, when complete—Sending amount to Bankers, whether constitutes delivery—Imperfect gift—Construction.

A retiring gratuity is in the nature of a gift and must be completed either by a registered document or by actual payment as required by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 312, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, a Railway Company sanctions a gratuity to any one of their employees on his retirement, the mere fact of sending the amount to their Bankers is not equivalent to delivery, even though it is coupled with a request to remit it to their office at London where actual payment is to be made. [ibid.]

Janki Das v. East Indian Railway Company, 6 A. 634; A. W. N. (1884) 210; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 247, followed.

A transfer intended to operate as a gift, but invalid as such, will not constitute the donor a trustee of the property for the intended donee; in other words, an imperfect gift will not be construed as a declaration of trust. [p. 313, col. 1.]

FACTS.—The defendant was in the employ of the G. I. P. Railway Company and retired from service in June 1922. The Board of Directors, in their discretion sanctioned a gratuity to the defendant in recognition of his efficient and faithful service and the Secretary to the Agent requested the Acting Chief Auditor and Accountant of the Company by letter dated July 11, 1922, to arrange to pay the defendant's Company to his account with Messrs. Thomas Cook & Sons, Bombay. On July 13th the Acting Chief Auditor wrote to the defendant that a gratuity of Rs. 7,700 had been sanctioned to him and could be paid on hearing from him, and on October 17, 1922, that officer requested the Mercantile Bank of India to arrange to send Rs. 7,700 by cable to the Secretary of the Company in London; and on a receipt of a cable from the defendant demanding payment, a cheque for the amount was sent to the Mercantile Bank, Bombay on the 18th October. On the same day a warrant of attachment was served on the Company and the intended remittance of Rs. 7,700 was stopped. The question arose whether this sum was liable to attachment in execution of a decree. The Company contended inter alia that although it was the intention of the Railway Company to pay to the defendant the sum of Rs. 7,700 no payment had actually been made to him at the time of the service of the warrant. Further the contemplated gift was and still is incomplete, it being entirely at the discretion of the Railway Company to complete or not to complete it. Again the Railway Company did not and does not hold the said sum in trust for the defendant. It was never carried to the credit of any account of the defendant. Even had the intended remittance been made there would have been no obligation upon the Railway Company in London to make any payment to the defendant. The said sum was and is not the property of the defendant nor had he nor has he any disposing power over the same.

Mr. B. J. Desai, for the Plaintiffs.

Sir Thomas Strangman, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—[After stating the facts of the case His Lordship proceeded:—]

It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that there was either a completed gift, or if there was no completed gift there was at least a trust created for the defendant in respect of the said sum of Rs. 7,700.

As regards a retiring gratuity there does not seem to be any doubt that it is in the nature of the gift. There is no obligation whatever upon the Board to grant any such gratuity. The gratuity being in the nature of a gift, it must be completed either by a registered document or by actual payment as required by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The delivery of the cheque by the Railway Company to the Mercantile Bank though coupled with the request to send the amount to their London Office was not equivalent to delivery to the defendant. The London Office was not the defendant's agent, but the agent of the Railway Company. Until payment to the defendant the Railway Company could have countermanded the order for payment. The result is that the contemplated gift to the defendant was not completed on the date of attachment. I hold, therefore, that there was no completed gift of Rs. 7,700 or any part thereof to the defendant on the date of the attachment and that the said sum could not be attached as property belonging to the defendant. In this respect the present case is on all fours with Janki Das v. East Indian Railway Company (1).

As regards the contention that the moneys were held by the Railway Company on trust for the defendant I do not think that there is any substance in it. It is now well-established that a transfer intended to operate as a gift, but invalid as such, will not constitute the donor a trustee of the property for the intended donee, in other words, an imperfect gift will not be construed as a declaration of trust. For an intention to create a trust is essential to the creation of one, and when a man purports to make a gift, he cannot reasonably be supposed to have intended to declare himself a trustee—a character which assumes that he retains the property: Milroy v. Lord (2) and Richards v. Delbridge (3). The principle of these decisions was followed by the High Court of Bombay in Sir Jamsetji Jijibhai v. Sonabai (4) and Ashabai v. Haji Tyeb Haji (5). In Ashabai's case (5) Sir Charles Sargent said:—

"Now the principle to be drawn from the authorities—at any rate the more recent authorities—is that, in order that the owner of a fund may constitute himself a trustee of it, he must either expressly declare himself to be a trustee, or must use language which, taken in connection with his acts, shows a clear intention on his part to divest himself of all beneficial interest in it, and to exercise dominion and control over it, exclusively in the character of a trustee."

It was not suggested in the present case that the Railway Company expressly declared itself to be a trustee. But it was said that the language used in the correspondence was such that taken in connection with its acts, namely, the sending of the cheque to the Mercantile Bank with instructions to the Bank to remit the amount to the Railway Company's London Office, showed an intention on the part of the Railway Company to divest itself of all beneficial interest in it, and to exercise dominion and control over it exclusively in the character of a trustee. I do not think any such intention can be gathered from the correspondence and from the acts of the Company. The directions that were given by the Company to the Bank were as an intending donor, and not as a trustee. The Company did not at any time prior to the attachment assume the position of a trustee. It certainly meant to make a gift, but the gift was not completed when the fund was attached. It is unthinkable that the Company had an intention to create a trust. All that it intended to do was to make a gift. The gift was incomplete when the attachment was levied. The notice, therefore, is discharged with costs. Counsel certified.

THE DAKORE TEMPLE COMMITTEE AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Jurisdiction—Consent, whether can confer jurisdiction—Religious endowment—Scheme framed by Privy Council—Temple Committee, appointment of—Power to make rules—Power conferred upon High Court to modify rules—Appeal, whether lies—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47.

A scheme for the management of a Hindu temple was sanctioned by His Majesty in Council and it provided amongst other things for the appointment of a Temple Committee which was empowered to take the temple property into their custody and to make rules for the guidance of their business and for the management of the temple and for other purposes. It was further provided that the rules when sanctioned by the District Court should have the same force as if they were part of the scheme. One of the clauses of the scheme was as follows :—" The provisions of this scheme may be altered, modified or added to by an application to His Majesty's High Court of Judicature at Bombay." The Temple Committee having been duly appointed framed a body of rules which were, with certain alterations, sanctioned by the District Court. Certain persons who were interested in the management of the temple made an application to the High Court for modification of the rules sanctioned by the District Court under the clause which empowered the High Court to modify the rules. An appeal was also preferred to the High Court against the rules on the ground that the order of the District Court sanctioning the rules fell within the purview of s. 47 of the C. P. C. The High Court did not pass any orders on the application made under the clause of the scheme above referred to, but considered the appeal and passed orders thereon holding that the appeal was competent as no objection was taken thereto. On appeal to His Majesty in Council:

Held, (1) that the High Court had a power conferred upon it by the scheme, upon an application made to it with that object, to alter, modify or add to the rules sanctioned by the District Judge but that it had no other power in the matter; [p. 315, col. 1.]

(2) that the High Court not having purported to act in the exercise of its power under the scheme and there being no jurisdiction in it to entertain an appeal from the order of the District Court, the appeal should have been rejected; [ibid.]

(3) that there was no right of appeal to His Majesty in Council except on the ground that the judgment of the High Court was incompetent and should be set aside; [ibid.]

(4) that the power given to the High Court under the scheme could, however, still be exercised by it upon an application properly made to it. [ibid.]

Parties cannot by acquiescence or consent confer upon a Court a jurisdiction which it does not possess. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Sir John Edge.—This case has come before their Lordships in the form of an appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order of the High Court of Bombay. On the 31st March 1920, the High Court certified that the appeal involved a substantial question of law and was otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council, and on the 26th July, 1920, the High Court admitted the appeal and ordered notice to be given to the respondents. The question which their Lordships have to consider is whether the appeal lay. For that purpose it is necessary to refer as briefly as possible to the history of the case to see if any appeal in this case to His Majesty in Council arose or was admissible.

The case relates to the management of a public Hindu temple at the village of Dakore which is within the jurisdiction of the Court of the District Judge of Ahmedabad. In the temple is installed the idol of Shri Ranchhod Raiji, which is much revered by Hindus. Disputes arose as to the management of the temple and at least two suits were brought in respect of the management, one of which came on appeal to His Majesty in Council as to a scheme for the management which had been sanctioned by the High Court of Bombay. On the 14th May, 1912, the Board, having made some alterations in the scheme and having advised that the scheme, as altered should be affirmed, His Majesty with the advice of his Privy Council, confirmed the scheme, as altered by the Board, and made an order in Council accordingly.

The Dakore Temple scheme so confirmed by His Majesty's order in Council of the 14th May, 1912, provided, amongst other things, for the appointment of the Dakore Temple Committee to consist of five members who should be Hindus professing faith in Shri Ranchhod Raiji, and empowered the Committee to take the temple property into their custody and to make rules for the guidance of their business and for the management of the temple and for other purposes. The purposes for which such rules might be made were specified in cl. 12 of the scheme, and it was provided that the rules, when sanctioned by the District Court of Ahmedabad, should have the same force as if they were part of the scheme.

Clause 20 of the scheme, as confirmed by His Majesty's order in Council, is as follows:—

"20. The provisions of this scheme may be altered, modified or added to by an application to His Majesty's High Court at Judicature at Bombay."

The Temple Committee, having been duly appointed, framed a body of rules, as the Committee was empowered to do, and those rules came before Mr. B. C. Kennedy, as the District Judge of Ahmedabad, for the sanction of his Court, and he, on the 5th December, 1914, made certain alterations in the rules, and, as altered by him sanctioned the rules. On the 23rd March, 1915, certain members of the Trawadi Mewada Brahmin caste, who had exercised certain rights in the temple or were otherwise interested in the management of the temple, presented to the High Court of Judicature at Bombay an "Application under cl. 20 of the scheme for modification of the rules sanctioned by the District Judge." To that application the managing member of the Temple Committee and another were made respondents. The sanction given by the District Judge to the rules was apparently considered in the High Court, although erroneously, to be an order made under s. 47 of the C.P.

C., 1908, and appeals from it were presented to the High Court at Bombay. The appeals, and the application, came before a learned Judge of the High Court for disposal, and he, obviously doubting that the appeals lay, said in his judgment of the 22nd September, 1919, as follows:—

"These appeals and applications relate to the rules which have been framed under cl. 12 of this scheme and sanctioned in 1914 by Mr. Kennedy, the District Judge of Ahmedabad. The appeals have been filed as appeals from orders in execution passed under cl. 12 (7) of the scheme by the District Judge of Ahmedabad. We think we ought to deal with them as such as no objection has been taken. No orders need, therefore, be passed on the applications filed ex majore cautela as applications under cl. 20 of the scheme reserving general power of interference to the High Court."

Thereupon the learned Judge wrote and delivered a judgment in which he expressed his views as to the rules which had been sanctioned by the District Judge. The appeals to the High Court did not lie and should have been rejected.

The learned Judge should have remembered that parties cannot by acquiescence or consent confer upon a Court a jurisdiction which it has not got. The High Court at Bombay had power conferred upon it by cl. 20 of the scheme confirmed by His Majesty's order in Council upon an application made to it with that object to alter, modify or add to the rules sanctioned by the District Judge, but it had no other power, and that power it did not exercise; it may, however, still be exercised upon application properly made to it.

There was no right of appeal to His Majesty in Council from the judgments of the High Court of the 11th April, 1919, and 22nd September, 1919, or from any decrees which were drawn up, except on the sole ground that the judgments or decrees were incompetent. The term "judgment" in the Letters Patent of the High Court means in civil cases a decree and not a judgment in the ordinary sense. This appeal to His Majesty in Council should not have been admitted.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed and the judgments or decrees be set aside, as these judgments appealed from were incompetent. There will be no costs of this appeal.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 6, 8—Suit for possession—Minor entitled to sue, death of—Representative of minor, suit by—Period of limitation available—Hindu Law—Widow, alienation by—Legal necessity—Consent of reversioner, effect of—Appeal, second—Finding of fact.

The effect of ss. 6 and 8 of the Limitation Act is that in the case of a suit for possession, where a minor dies before attaining majority, his representative would have either the total period of twelve years from the date of the accrual of the cause of action or three years from the date of the minor's death, whichever is the longer period. He is not entitled to claim the same period of limitation to which the minor would have been entitled if he had lived. Where, however, the representative is, at the date of the death of the minor, himself affected by any disability the rules contained in sub-ss. (1) and (2) of s. 6 must apply. [p. 316, col. 2; p. 317, col. 1.]

Where a finding of lower Appellate Court with regard to the existence of legal necessity for an alienation made by a Hindu widow is based on a consideration of the evidence, coupled with the fact that the alienation was assented to by one of the reversioners, the finding cannot be challenged in second appeal. JUDGMENT.—To understand the points raised in this appeal it will be necessary to examine the pedigree to be found at page 11 of the printed paper-book. The Court of first instance found that the brothers Jageswar and Mohar were joint and Ganesh, the son of Jageshwar, was the last surviving male member of the family consisting of the two brothers and a son and nephew Ganesh. It appears that three sale-deeds were executed by two ladies. Musammat Bhagirathi, widow of Mohar, executed sale-deed No 1 on the 4th of January 1909 for a sum of Rs. 399. On the 20th of September 1910, Musammat Upman, the widow of Jageshwar, and Musammat Bhagirathi executed the second sale-deed for the sum of Rs. 1,250 and on the 17th of June 1918 the same two ladies executed the third sale-deed for the sum of Rs. 299.

The first four plaintiffs are the sons respectively of Jagat and Sahdeo. Ganesh died in February 1910 and his mother Musammat Upman died about two years before the institution of the suit. The plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 have transferred a portion of their interest in the property to the plaintiffs Nos. 5 and 6. Thus all the six plaintiffs instituted the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, for recovery of possession of the property sold under the three deeds of sale. Their case, so far as Musammat Bhagirathi's sale-deed was concerned, was that Musammat Bhagirathi executed the sale-deed without any title.

The defence was that so far as the sale-deed by Musammat Bhagirathi was concerned the suit was time-barred. The defendants further pleaded that the sales were supported by legal necessity and the plaintiffs were also estopped from maintaining the suit.

The Court of first instance decreed the suit on condition of payment of those portions of the sale considerations which it found to have been supported by legal necessity. In appeal the learned District Judge dismissed the suit with respect to the second sale-deed, he having held that it was supported by legal necessity.

The defendants have appealed with respect to the first and third sale-deeds while the plaintiffs have filed a cross-objection with respect to the second sale-deed.

The first point that has been urged is the question of limitation and relates to the sale-deed executed by Musammat Bhagirathi.

It will be noticed that the suit was filed on the 21st of April 1921, that is to say, more than 12 years after the execution of the sale-deed by Musammat Bhagirathi, it being the finding of the Court of first instance a finding which was not challenged in the Court of first appeal—that the brothers Jageshwar and Mohar were joint and Mohar predeceased Ganesh. It is clear that Musammat Bhagirathi had no title whatsoever to the property. On the execution of the sale-deed by her the transferees obtained possession over the property sold. The transferees, therefore, had already been in possession of the property sold by Musammat Bhagirathi for more than 12 years at the date of the institution of the suit. The defendants' contention in this Court is, as it was in the Courts below, that they had completed a title for themselves by 12 years' adverse possession and the suit ought to have been dismissed.

The lower Appellate Court has not discussed the question of limitation, but the Court of first instance has. It got over the plea of limitation by coming to the conclusion that the plaintiffs could bring their suit within the same period of limitation as would have been allowed to Ganesh if he had been alive.

The correctness of this conclusion has been challenged in this Court.

It appears to us, that the correct conclusion has to be arrived at on a correct reading of ss. 6 and 8 of the Limitation Act. Section 6 (1) allows, in the case of a minor an extended period of limitation, and lays down that the same period of limitation as would ordinarily be allowed to an adult would be allowed to a minor from the date on which he ceases to be a minor. By s. 8 it is, however, laid down that in no case the extended period would be more than three years. Clause (3) of s. 6 deals with the case like the one before us. It lays down that where a person afflicted with a disability dies, his representative will have the same period of limitation as is allowed for ordinary suits from the date of death of the person suffering from disability. Again s. 8 comes in and limits the extended period to three years. By reading the two sections together the conclusion is that in a suit for possession, where a minor dies before attaining majority his representative would have either the total period of 12 years from the date of accrual of the cause of action or three years from the date of the minor's death whichever is greater. The point is clearly illustrated in illustration (c) under s. 8 of the Limitation Act. The illustration runs thus:—

"A right to sue as landlord to recover possession from a tenant accrues to A, who is an idiot. A dies three years after the accruer, his idiocy continuing up to the date of his death. A's representative-in-interest has, under the ordinary law, nine years from the date of A's death within which to bring a suit. Section 6 read with this section does not extend that time except where the respresentative is himself under disability when the representation devolves upon him."

It will be noticed that in this illustration A is an idiot. He dies three years after the accrual of the cause of action. After his death nine years remained to his legal representative to file the suit. The latter must bring his suit within those nine years and he does not get any extension because, in any case, he could not get more than three years' time under s. 8, after the death of his predecessor-in-title, A. He has got 9 years and this is deemed to be sufficient.

Applying this rule of law, therefore, to the case before us Ganesh died in 1910. The cause of action accrued on the 4th of January 1909 and 12 years' period from this date expired on the 4th of January 1921. This period between 1910 and 4th January 1921 being more than three years, the legal representative would not have a day beyond the 4th of January 1921.

It is clear, therefore, that in the case of every one of the plaintiffs reversioners who was more than 21 at the date of the suit, the suit must be regarded as time-barred.

It is, however, pointed out that the plaintiff Lalji was 12 at the date of the institution of the suit. He was, therefore, a minor when Ganesh died. Under sub-s. 4, s. 6 of the Limitation Act where a representative is at the date of the death affected by disability the rules contained in subss. (1) and (2) shall apply. Such being the case Lalji's suit must be regarded as within time.

The result is that as regards 1/4th share in the property dealt with by the sale-deed No. 1 the suit of Lalji alone is within time and the rest of the suit is barred by limitation.

Now we come to the third sale-deed. We think that the finding of the Court below is conclusive on the point. The learned Judge has discussed the evidence and has shown that the sale-deed is supported to the extent of the sum of Rs. 144-9-6 only by legal necessity.

Coming to the question of estoppel, we do not think that any case has been made out. It appears that the plaintiffs obtained a lease from the vendees of a portion of the property sold. The lease has ceased to exist and possession has been recovered from the vendees by the plaintiffs. In respect of the third sale-deed the appeal must be dismissed.

Coming to the question of the second sale-deed—the learned Counsel for the respondents has relied on the Privy Council case of Hari Kishen Bhagat v. Kashi Parshad Singh (1). It appears that the learned District Judge has taken into consideration the fact that the second sale-deed executed by the two ladies was attested by Sahdeo, the next reversioner living at the time. Taking this fact into consideration and taking all the evidence on the point the learned Judge came to the conclusion that he was entitled to draw from the fact that Sahdeo had attested the sale-deed that the sale-deed itself was supported by legal necessity. The Privy Council lays down simply this that mere attestation of a sale-deed by a reversioner is not by itself conclusive of the fact that he was aware of the nature of the transaction or that he was a consenting party to it. Their Lordships say:—

"Such consent should not be inferred from ambiguous acts or be supported by dubious oral testimony, such as appears to have been relied in this case."

In our opinion the learned District Judge was entitled to consider the fact that two ladies of the house were entering into a transaction and their close and very close relation Sahdeo was present at the transaction. Coupled with this circumstance the learned Judge was entitled to examine the remaining evidence and to draw his own inference. We are not prepared to say that his inference under the circumstances was wrongly drawn.

The cross-objection, therefore, must fail.

We allow the appeal in part and dismiss the claim of all the plaintiffs except Lalji Tiwari with respect to 3/4th of the property transferred by the sale-deed dated the 4th of January 1909. The rest of the appeal is dismissed. The cross-objection is also Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Lease—Representation by lessor that lease conferred permanent rights upon lessee—Erection of buildings by lessee—Ejectment—Estoppel.

Plaintiff granted a lease to the defendant which contained the following clause:—"Whereas land is required by R. for the purpose of erecting buildings, putting up presses, etc., for trading, I agree to give a lease of 4 bighas of land to the aforesaid R. for the above purpose from year to year at an annual rental of Rs. 45 per bigha or total annual rental of Rs. 180." Some years afterwards defendant wanted to erect a substantial building on the land leased to him. He approached the plaintiff for the latter's express permission to put up the building. After certain negotiations the plaintiff informed the defendant that the lease granted to the latter was a permanent lease and gave him the right to erect buildings but that it did not entitle him to hold at a fixed rate and that the rent was liable to enhancement after proper legal notice. The defendant paid a nazarana for the permission to raise the structure and thereupon the plaintiff issued a "parwangi" to the defendant giving his sanction for the erection of the building. This document was in hindi, a language which the defendant did not understand, and contained a recital that the rights which were possessed under the lease would remain intact and that no other right would be created under the permit. The defendant put up the structure and the plaintiff subsequently sought to evict the defendant from the land leased on the allegation that the lease was only a lease from year to year:

Held, that the statement contained in the plaintiff's letter to the defendant, that the lease was a permanent one and gave the defendant the right to erect buildings, was a statement of fact and not merely an expression of opinion, and that the plaintiff was consequently estopped from seeking to evict the defendant from his holding, inasmuch as the defendant had been induced by the plaintiff's representation and conduct to believe that he had a fixity of tenure, although not of rent, in the land that had been leased to him. [p. 321, col. 2.]

If a man under a verbal agreement with a landlord for a certain interest in land, or under an expectation created or encouraged by the landlord that he shall have a certain interest, takes possession of such land with the consent of the landlord, and upon the faith of such promise or expectation, with the knowledge of the landlord, and without objection by him, lays out money upon the land, a Court of Equity will compel the landlord to give effect to such a promise or expectation. JUDGMENT.

Mr. Ameer Ali.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant in the Court of the Munsif at Araria in the District of Purnea to evict the defendants from certain lands he had leased to them in the year 1894.

The suit was dismissed by the Munsif, as will be more particularly mentioned later in the course of this judgment. The Munsif's order was affirmed by the District Judge. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the High Court, which was heard by a Single Judge, Mr. Justice Ross, who reversed the judgment of the District Judge, and decreed the plaintiff's claim. On the defendants' appeal under the Letters Patent, a Division Bench, consisting of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Mullick, reversed the decision of Mr. Justice Ross, and agreeing with the District Judge, dismissed the suit of the plaintiff. He now appeals to His Majesty in Council on the grounds that the High Court misconstrued the terms of the lease under which the defendants were let into possession, and have wrongly applied, under the circumstances of the case, the doctrine of estoppel in respect of his claim.

A brief narration of the facts which have led to this unfortunate litigation will explain the position of the parties.

Mr. Forbes, the plaintiff, owns considerable landed property in the District of Purnea. The defendants are Greek merchants trading largely in country produce in India under the name and designation of Ralli Brothers. On the 22nd June, 1894, the defendants' agent, one Acatos, obtained from the plaintiff a lease of four bighas of land "for the purpose of erecting buildings, putting up presses, etc., for trading." The lease (Ex. 5) is in English. Acatos executed a kabuliyat which is identical in terms with the lease. As the question for determination turns, in a great measure, on the words of this lease, their Lordships think it desirable to give, so far as is necessary, the actual language of Ex. 5. It is as follows:—

"That whereas land is required by Mr. C. Acatos, Agent of Messrs. Ralli Brothers. Merchants, of Calcutta, for the purpose of erecting buildings, putting up presses, etc., for trading, I. A. T. Ricketts, Manager for A. H. Forbes, Executor to the Estate of the late A. J. Forbes, agree to give a lease of 4 bighas of land to the aforesaid Mr. C. Acatos for the above purpose from year to year at an annual rental of Rs. 45 per bigha or total annual rental of Rs. 180."

Admittedly the defendants took possession of the leased lands for the purposes stated in Ex. 5. In 1903 a gentleman of the name of Carras took the place of Mr. Acatos as the local agent of Ralli Brothers at Purnea. So far as appears from the record, he resided at a place called Forbesganj, which had been established by the plaintiff or his father as the centre of his estate. A railway station had been opened close by, and Forbesganj acquired a certain importance.

About this time circumstances appear to have arisen which necessitated the erection of a pucca or masonry building for the residence of Mr. Carras. As the lease, to use the language of the District Judge, was somewhat vaguely phrased, the defendants, Ralli Brothers, considered it expedient to obtain the plaintiff's express permission for the purpose of erecting the structure they proposed for their agent. At this time a Mr. Duff was acting as Mr. Forbes' manager or agent.

After going carefully through the evidence, their Lordships have no doubt that both the Munsif and the District Judge have correctly held that at the interview which took place in consequence of the defendants' applications for permission to raise the structure they proposed, and at which the terms of the lease of 1894 were discussed, Mr. Forbes was personally present. In his evidence in the Munsif's Court the plaintiff states that he does not remember whether he was present or not. Mr. Carras positively swears that he was present and, in fact, took part in the discussion. Mr. Duff, for some reason or other, has not been examined on behalf of the plaintiff. If, as it is said, he was ill at the time and unable to attend, he could have been examined, as the lower Courts point out, on commission.

Their Lordships are thus left face to face with two statements, one by Mr. Forbes saying that he does not remember, the other by Mr. Carras, who positively swears that Mr. Forbes was present.

In their Lordships' opinion, the Courts which were by law vested with the jurisdiction to deal with the facts have properly come to the conclusion that Carras' statement should be accepted. The letter of the 31st December, 1903 (Ex. A), which Duff wrote to Carras, is clear and precise on this point. Mr. Duff, writing as manager of the Sultanpur Estate, namely, the plaintiff's estate, says as follows:—

"My dear Carras.

"Referring to your conversation of this morning with Mr. Forbes and myself, I write (?) at your request to say that the lease executed by Mr. C. Acatos, dated the 22nd June, 1894, is a permanent lease and gives you the right to erect buildings, but it does not entitle you to hold at fixed rate, and the rent is liable to enhancement after proper legal notice. If your firm desires to have a permanent lease at a fixed rate of (torn) will be glad to see the proposed draft of lease and to show it to Mr. Forbes. In the meantime, you can commence the house if you like to do so."

With reference to this letter the plaintiff has raised a number of objections which appear to their Lordships to be feeble and untenable In the first place, he says that it was a private letter. The District Judge held as their Lordships think rightly, that it is an official letter written by Duff in his capacity as manager. It is precise in its language and tells the defendants that the lease of June, 1894, is "a permanent lease and gives you the right to erect buildings, but it does not entitle you to hold at fixed rate and the rent is liable to enhancement."

The defendants appear to have paid a bonus or nazarana for the permission to raise the structure they proposed, and on the 10th January, 1904, a "parwangi" was issued from the plaintiff's zemindari cutchary in the hindi language, the vernacular of the Province, giving the sanction for the erection of the building. The parwangi, as it is called, requires some attention. Its translation is as follows:—

"To the Manager.

"Permission granted to Messrs. Ralli Brothers, Goledar of Gola at station Forbesganj, Pargana Sultanpur.

"Whereas you prayed through the agent of the said Gola for permission to erect a pucca house in your bandobasti (settled) Gola. As on enquiry and measurement you wish to erect a house on 2 C. 15 Dhurkis of land on payment of Rs. 21 as nazarana per mensem, and the said sum has under a chalan been deposited through your agent in the estate. Therefore, permission is granted to you to erect a masonry house on 2 C. 15 Dhurkis of land in your bandobasti (settled) Gola. A nazarana (bonus) of rupees twenty per cottah will be taken in case more land is occupied in constructing the pucca house. All rights which you possess in your bandobasti (settled) Gola land under the patta and kabuliyat will remain intact. No other right will be created under this permit. This parwangi (sanction) or permission is intended for the said house only. Dated the 10th January 1904 Sultanpur."

Considerable stress was laid by plaintiff's Counsel on the words which appear towards the end of this document—"No other right will be created under this permit;" and it was urged that the intention of the plaintiff was to restrict the rights of the lessee within the limits imposed by the original lease of 1894. Mr. Carras deposes that he does not know the hindi language and did not, therefore, know of the terms of this document until some time after, and that he took it to be an acknowledgment of the bonus that he had paid. This statement has been accepted by both the Munsif and the District Judge. In their Lordships' opinion, in whatever way this document may be understood, it does not affect in any degree the effect of what took place at the interview with Mr. Forbes and Mr. Duff, the result of which is embodied in (Ex. A) the letter of the 31st December, 1903.

Acting on the suggestion contained in the letter of Mr. Duff of the 31st December 1903 (Ex. A), viz., that if the defendants desired to have a permanent lease at a fixed rate (of rent), he would be glad to see a proposed draft of lease and to show it to Mr. Forbes, the defendants appear to have instructed their Solicitors, Messrs. Sanderson and Co., to prepare the necessary draft.

From the document, to which reference will be made presently, it appears that Sandersons' applied to Mr. Forbes for the production of a number of papers which they wished to inspect before preparing the draft.

The defendants have put in the reply of Mr. Duff to this application of Messrs. Sanderson and Co., but not the letter Sanderson and Co., wrote to Mr. Forbes.

The plaintiff's advisers appear to have produced in the Munsif's Court a certain paper which, for purposes of identification, appears to have been marked "X." It was alleged that that was the communication in question, but they failed to prove the signature and naturally it was not admitted in evidence.

Another effort was made in the First Court to introduce the paper in question among the exhibits. They again failed to prove it. No question regarding the non-admission of this paper was raised before the District Judge or in the High Court. Although in the appeal to the High Court twenty-three grounds were taken, not one relates to it; nor is there any reference to this rejected letter in the grounds for leave to appeal to His Majesty's Council in the case lodged by the plaintiff before the Registrar.

Their Lordships are of opinion that there is no substance in the present contention relative to what is called "X."

Coming to the letter addressed by Duff to Messrs. Sanderson (Ex. A1), it bears date the 23rd January, 1904, and is in these terms:—

"Sirs,

"With reference to your No. 392 of 13th instant to the address of Mr. A. H. Forbes, I am desired by him to inform you that matters of greater importance than the lease of a few bighas of land are constantly transacted in this estate without the production of such papers as you wish to inspect. There are no special title-deeds for the plot of land which Messrs. Ralli Brothers have held for the last nine years, and if Mr. Forbes had no title, it follows that Messrs. Ralli Brothers have also had no title for the past. Mr. Forbes, therefore, declines to produce such valuable papers as he holds, and considers that the existing lease, with the addition of the sanction recently given to erect the building, is sufficient for all requirements."

This being the position of the parties, the point for determination resolves itself into a simple question of fact. There can be no question that upon the letter (Ex. A) of the 31st December, 1903, the defendants commenced the building for the residence of their agent and completed it at considerable expense. Mr. Forbes knew of it and frequently visited the place. No question was raised until 1916. In that year the plaintiff's zemindari cutchary (estate office) was burnt down. He demanded contributions from his tenants to re-build the cutchary. They all agreed to pay except the defendants, who stood on their rights. It was then that the question of their eviction was first mooted. His evidence, long and involved as it seems to their Lordships, appears thoroughly consistent with the view taken by the District Judge.

Both the Munsif and the District Judge, in view of the purpose for which the lease was granted and the surrounding circumstances to which they refer in their judgments, were of opinion that the demise in its inception was of a permanent character, save and except as to the rate of rent; and that the words "from year to year" did not affect the permanent character of the lease, but only gave expression to the provision that the rent was variable from year to year upon proper notice. They also held that the plaintiff was estopped by his acts and representations from questioning the permanency of the tenure.

In the view their Lordships take of the case, they do not think it necessary to determine whether in its inception the lease created a permanent tenure, for they fully agree with the Courts in India that the plaintiff is estopped from interfering with the defendants' right to hold the land.

The doctrine of estoppel which the Courts in India, save and except Mr. Justice Ross, have applied to the claim of the plaintiff is embodied in s. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act of 1872. It is as follows :—

"When one person has by his declaration, act or omission intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing."

The Munsif and District Judge have rightly held, in their Lordships' opinion, that the statement in Ex. A is a statement of fact and not an expression of opinion, as is contended by the plaintiff. The plaintiff distinctly represented to the defendants' agent, Carras, that the lease granted in 1894 was a permanent lease, and that under it he was entitled to erect buildings, as the lease distinctly stated; but that there was no fixity of rent. It has been urged on behalf of the plaintiff that it was a yearly tenancy, and to hold that the plaintiff was estopped by his conduct as evinced by the letter of the 31st December, 1903, from enforcing eviction, would be tantamount to creating a new contract. It is said also that the contract of 1894 was a registered document, and no variation or alteration or change can be made in it except by a registered contract. The defendants did not contend that it was a new contract or ask for a new contract; nor have the Courts in India held that estoppel creates a new contract. Estoppel prevents the plaintiff from evicting from their holding the defendants, whom he, the plaintiff, induced by his representation and conduct to believe that they had a fixity of tenure, although not of rent, in the lands that had been leased to them. It gives effect to the representation that induced them to act as they did.

In the case of Ramsden v. Dyson (1), the principle which governs this class of cases is stated by Lord Kingsdown in the following terms :—

"The rule of law applicable to the case appears to me to be this : If a man, under a verbal agreement with a landlord for a certain interest in land, or what amounts to the same thing, under an expectation, created or encouraged by the landlord, that he shall have a certain interest, takes possession of such land, with the consent of the landlord, and upon the faith of such promise or expectation, with the knowledge of the landlord, and without objection by him, lays out money upon the land, a Court of Equity will compel the landlord to give effect to such promise or expectation This was the principle of the decision in Gregory v. Mighell (2) and, as I conceive, is open to no doubt."

(1) (1866) 1 H. L. 129; 12 Jur. (N. S.) 506; 14 W. R. 926.

This principle has been accepted by this Board in the case of Ahmad Yar Khan v. Secretary of State for India (3).

The exposition by Lord Shand in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (4) of the rule of equitable estoppel embodied in s. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act has been quoted in extenso in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in the present case, and does not need repetition. Their Lordships desire to record their full concurrence with the principle there laid down.

They do not consider it necessary to refer to all the authorities that have been cited on both sides, as they think that the views expressed by Lord Kingsdown and Lord Shand completely answer the contentions of the appellant. Upon a review of the facts as well as of the authorities, their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the judgment of the High Court is right and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs, and their Lordships will humbly recommend His Majesty accordingly.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

EXECUTION FIRST APPEAL NO. 153 OF 1922.

February 6, 1925.

Present :—Mr. Justice Lindsay and Mr. Justice Kanhaiya Lal.

Babu RUDRA PRATAB SINGH AND OTHERS—OBJECTORS—APPELLANTS

Raja SARDA MAHESH PRASAD SINGH—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 12, O. XXII, r. 4—Decree for possession and mesne profits—Death of judgment-debtor—Substitution of legal representatives—Order declaring liability of legal representatives for mesne profits—Appeal, whether lies.

Respondent obtained a decree for possession of certain property which also directed that an account should be taken of the dealings of the judgment-debtor with the disputed property and of the rents and profits arising therefrom and that the judgment-debtor must pay to the decree-holder what may be found due to him on the taking of accounts. The judgment-debtor died and his legal representatives were substituted on the record in his place. The latter objected that they were not liable for mesne profits. The Court went into the matter and made an order declaring that they were liable to render accounts of the mesne profits which the deceased had appropriated and then proceeded to direct the method in which the accounts should be taken. On appeal:

Held, that the preliminary decree which directed the taking of accounts was not capable of execution and the question which had been actually determined by the lower Court was merely a question relating to the substitution of the names of the appellants in the place of the deceased judgment-debtor and their liability to render the accounts directed by the decree as such legal representatives, and that no question relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree had been decided and that s. 47 of the C. P. C. had, therefore, no application to the case and the order of the lower Court was not appealable. [p. 323, col. 2.]

An order by which the Court determines the principle whereupon mesne profits are to be assessed and directs their ascertainment by a Commissioner is an interlocutory order in a pending suit and is not appealable as a decree. [p. 324, col. 1.]

Dalgliesh v. Nandan Misser, 13 Ind. Cas. 186, followed.

The effect of the change introduced by O. XX, r. 12 of the C. P. C. is that the Court which hears the suit is the Court which is eventually to ascertain the mesne profits and pass a final decree for such profits and that till such final decree is passed there is no decree for mesne profits capable of execution. [ibid.]

Mohammed Ishaq Khan v. Mohammed Rustum Ali Khan, 44 Ind. Cas. 88; 16 A. L. J. 182; 40 A. 292, relied on.

Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mirzapur, dated the 17th February 1922.

Dr. Sir T. B. Sapru, Mr. H. R. Mukerji and Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Gulzari Lal, Iqbal Ahmed, Harnandan Prasad and Kashi Narain Malaviya, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Mirzapur directing the method in which an account of the mesne profits was to be taken as against the present appellants who were impleaded as the legal representatives of Baij Nath Prasad Singh deceased.

On the 3rd of March 1915 a decree was passed for possession of certain property, which among other things, directed that an account shall be taken of the dealings of Baij Nath Prasad Singh with the disputed property and of the rents and profits arising therefrom, and that Baijnath Prasad Singh will pay to the plaintiff what may be found due to him on the taking of the said account. That decree was upheld by this Court, except as regards certain moveable property, on the 30th of May 1916. There was a further appeal to His Majesty in Council which was dismissed on the 7th of February 1921. Before the decision of that appeal by the Privy Council Baij Nath Prasad Singh died. It is stated that he died after the hearing had taken place before their Lordships and his legal representatives could not, therefore, have been brought on the record before that appeal was decided. An application for the settlement of accounts in pursuance of that decree was made on the 28th February 1921, which among other things, asked that Rudra Pratab Singh, Jang Bahadur Singh, and Upendra Bahadur Singh, sons of Baijnath Prasad Singh, might be substituted on the record in the place of the deceased. As a matter of fact, Jang Bahadur Singh and Upendra Bahadur Singh, two of the younger sons of Baijnath Prasad Singh, were already on the record of the suit which went up in appeal to the Privy Council. The only new person who was proposed to be added or substituted in the place of Baijnath Prasad Singh was Rudra Pratab Singh, his eldest son. All the same the object of the application was to make Rudra Pratab Singh, Jang Bahadur Singh and Upendra Bahadur Singh liable for the mesne profits claimed by the plaintiff as the legal representatives of Baijnath Prasad Singh deceased.

Various objections were taken by the three sons of Baijnath Prasad Singh to the said application but the main objection with which the Court below first proceeded to deal was to the effect that the sons were not liable for the mesne profits, if any, appropriated by Baijnath Prasad Singh, because he was in possession as a trespasser and the liability for the accounts could not, therefore, be enforced against his sons. The Court below held that the possession of Baijnath Prasad Singh, though illegal, could not be called wrongful and that the sons of Baijnath Prasad Singh could, therefore, be made liable to render the accounts of the mesne profits which their father had appropriated. The Court below then proceeded to direct the method in which the accounts were to be determined. From that order the present appeal has been filed and the preliminary question for consideration is whether such an appeal is maintainable.

The learned Counsel who appears for the appellants contends that the effect of the order of the Court below was to determine the liability of the appellants and that the appeal was consequently maintainable under s. 47 of the C. P. C. It is not contended that the appellants are not the legal representatives of the deceased Baijnath Prasad Singh The decree directed that an account of the mesne profits shall be taken as against Baijnath Prasad Singh. It was in fact a decree passed in terms of O. XX, r. 12 of the C. P. C., cl. (c) of which enables the Court to direct an enquiry to be made as to the rents and mesne profits to which the plaintiff may be entitled. Such an enquiry is made in the course of a proceeding which is virtually a proceeding in continuation of the original suit, and under s. 12, cl. (2), a final decree has to be prepared in respect of the mesne profits which may be awarded in accordance with the result of such an enquiry. From such a final decree an appeal is maintainable. The order of the Court below merely directs that the appellants are liable to render accounts as the legal representatives of Baijnath Prasad Singh deceased; and the amount for which they are liable has not yet been determined. In fact no final decree has yet been prepared. Really there is no execution proceeding going on. The preliminary decree which directed the taking of accounts is not capable of execution and the question which has been actually determined by the Court below is merely a question relating to the substitution of the names of the appellants in the place of Baijnath Prasad Singh deceased and their liability to render the accounts directed by the decree as his legal representatives. It is not a question relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of a decree; and s. 47, therefore, has no application. It is at best an interlocutory order and no appeal is maintainable. The preliminary objection must, therefore, prevail. It will be open to the appellants to raise the question of their liability in any appeal that may be filed from the final decree which may be passed in the proceeding.

Under s. 244 of the old C. P. C. an enquiry into mesne profits could have been, it may be noted, made in an execution proceeding, but as pointed out in Mohammed Ishaq Khan v. Mohammed Rustum Ali Khan (1), the effect of the change introduced by O. XX, r. 12 of the C. P. C. is that the Court which hears the suit is the Court which eventually is to ascertain the mesne profits and pass a final decree for such profits, and that till such final decree is passed, there is no decree for mesne profits capable of execution. In Dalgliesh v. Nandan Missar (2) it was held that an order by which a Court determines the principle whereupon mesne profits are to be assessed and directs their ascertainment by a Commissioner was an interlocutory order in a pending suit and not appealable as a decree. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

VENKATADRI APPA RAO BAHADUR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus.

PARTHASARATHI APPA RAO BAHADUR VARU AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 123—"Deliverable," "payable," meaning of—Will, construction of—Legacy, suit to recover—Limitation, commencement of.

A share in the property of an intestate does not become "deliverable" within the meaning of Art. 123 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act until the administrator, to whom Letters of Administration have been granted, has in his hands the share to be delivered, and similarly, a legacy or a share in a legacy does not become "payable," within the meaning of the Article, until the executor or other person liable to pay it has in his hands money with which it can be paid. [p. 329, cols. 1 & 2.]

The intention of a testator, when not expressly and unambiguously stated in his Will, may be inferred by a Court from other facts stated or referred to in the Will, that legacies bequeathed by the Will should not be paid until the conclusion of a litigation in which the testator was engaged when he made his Will. [p. 330, col. 2.]

A Hindu lady who had brought a suit contesting a certain adoption and who would be entitled to certain moveable property in the custody of the Court if her suit were successful, made a Will stating that she had spent the greater part of her jewellery and valuables in fighting the suit and directing that certain legacies should be paid out of the property which was in the custody of the Court and to which she was entitled:

Held, that the testatrix intended that the legacies should be payable and be paid after the final determination of the suit which she had brought contesting the adoption and that, therefore, under Art. 123 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, limitation did not begin to run against the legatees till the final determination of that suit in favour of the testatrix. [p. 330, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Madras, High Court, (Sir Walter Schwabe, KT., C. Cas. 689.

JUDGMENT.

Sir John Edge.—These are consolidated appeals from three decrees, dated the 4th April 1922, of the High Court at Madras, which had reversed three decrees, dated the 22nd April, 1921, of a Division Bench of that Court, by which three decrees, dated the 29th November, 1917, of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada dismissing original suits numbered 30, 87 and 88 of 1916 had been affirmed. The suits had been instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada on the following dates: No. 30 of 1916 on the 26th April, 1916; No. 87 of 1916 on the 6th December, 1916; and No. 88 of 1916 on the 9th December, 1916. It was agreed at the hearing of these appeals that in drawing up the decree of the High Court in Original Suit No. 30 of 1916, Letters Patent Appeal No. 20 of 1921, that the words "mesne profits" in para, 3 of the decree should have been "income", and their Lordships amended that decree by substituting in it for the words "mesne profits" the word "income". There was no question of mesne profits in the case.

In Suit No. 30 of 1916 Sri Rajah Parthasarathi Appa Rao Bahadur was the plaintiff and Sri Rajah Venkatadri Appa Rao Bahadur, Sri Rajah Venkataramayya Appa Rao Bahadur and Sri Rajah Sobhanadri Appa Rao Bahadur and the Court of Wards were defendants. By an order of the Court of the 6th December, 1916, the Court of Wards was discharged from being a defendant, and the second defendant was appointed guardian of the third defendant, who was a minor. The suit was to recover a legacy of Rs. 80,000 bequeathed by Venkayyamma, a widow, by her Will of the 30th January 1899, to her sister-in-law, Inuganti Kasturammah, a legacy of Rs. 40,000 bequeathed by the same Will to another sister-in-law, Inuganti Venkataramanayyamma, and shares of the residue of the testatrix's property which she had bequeathed to her brothers, Chinna Rao and Buchi Thammayya. The plaintiff was the assignee of all the above mentioned legacies, and he claimed them as such assignee. He also claimed interest on those legacies, and other relief.

In Suit No. 87 of 1916, Sri Damera Venkata Rajagopala Seet Rayyamma Rao was the plaintiff, and Sri Rajah Meka Venkatadri Appa Rao Bahadur Garu, Sri Rajah Meka Venkataramayya Appa Rao Garu, and Sri Rajah Sobhanadri Appa Rao Bahadur Garu, by his brother and guardian the second defendant, were the defendants. The plaintiff claimed to recover a legacy Rs. 40,000 bequeathed to him by the same Venkayyamma by her Will, with interest thereon, and other relief.

In Suit No. 88 of 1916, Lakkaraju Bapayya was the plaintiff, and the defendants were the persons who were the defendants in Suit No. 30 of 1916 and in Suit No. 87 of 1916. The plaint in the suit was filed under s. 26 of the C. P. C., 1908, and under O. I, r. 8, and O. VII, r. 1, of that Code. The plaintiff claimed to recover Rs. 2,000 bequeathed to him by Venkayyamma by her Will and interest thereon and a decree and that for such purposes necessary accounts should be taken and that the property of the testatrix should be administered by the Court, and prayed for other relief.

When it may be necessary later in the judgment to refer to any of the parties to this litigation, they will be referred to by their names without any descriptive addition.

Except the Court of Wards, all the original defendants, and the representatives of those, who died, who have been brought on the record, were nearly related to each other and to Venkataramayya Appa Rao, of whom Venkayyamma was the widow.

To understand how these suits arose and the positions of the parties to them, it is necessary to refer briefly to a litigation which began on the 21st October, 1895, and to some other facts.

The suits in which these consolidated appeals have arisen were instituted in 1916 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada to obtain payment of legacies which Venkayyamma, a Hindu widow, had bequeathed by her Will of the 30th January 1899. She died on the 9th March, 1899. The due execution of the Will is admitted, but the suits have been contested by the defendants on several grounds, of which those which are now in the least material are that the testatrix left no property out of which the legacies could be paid; that the Will has been incorrectly construed by the High Court at Madras; that the suits, or one of them, is barred by a previous suit which was brought in 1902; and that the suits were not brought within time. In order to understand those contentions it is necessary to refer at some length to a somewhat complicated history.

Venkayyamma, the testatrix, was the widow of Venkata Ramayya Appa Rao, who had died before 1890. They had one child, a son, Narayya Appa Rao, who died on the 4th August, 1895, while he was a minor. He died unmarried and had not made a Will. When he died he was the last male owner of the Medur estate. The Court of Wards had taken charge of the Medur estate during his minority and continued to be in charge of it until December, 1895, when a Receiver, appointed by a Civil Court having jurisdiction, took possession of it. The estate of Medur continued to be in charge of Receivers, duly appointed, until after 1902. The Receivers acted as officers of the Civil Court, and it was their duty to bring, and to defend, suits affecting the estate, to collect the rents and profits of the estate, to render accounts to the Civil Courts, to invest balances of money which might be in their hands and to pay monies received by them into a local branch of the Bank of Madras after deducting necessary and legal expenses. The monies paid into the Bank by the Receivers and the Government promissory-notes and other securities in which monies derived from the Medur estate were invested were under the control of the Civil Court for the benefit of those who might be entitled to them.

The Medur estate and the Nidadavole estate—with the latter these suits are not concerned—had formed parts of a large zemindari in the Province of Madras, and the families respectively in which they were vested were nearly related. In December, 1890, Rani Papamma Rao, who was childless widow of the last male owner of the Nidadavole estate, went through a ceremony of adopting Narayya Appa Rao as a son to her late husband. As will later be seen, it was held by the Board in 1913 that she had not power to make the adoption and that it was invalid. Until that decision of the Board in 1913 it seems to have been generally considered that the adoption was valid. Shortly after Narayya Appa Rao died in August, 1895, disputes arose between Rani Papamma Rao and Venkayyamma as to the right to the possession of the Medur estate. The former claimed a right to the possession as the mother by adoption of Narayya Appa Rao; the latter, alleging that the adoption was invalid, claimed a right to the possession as his natural mother. The Court of Wards in September or October, 1895, passed a resolution to hand over to Rani Papamma Rao, the possession of the Madur estate unless restrained by an injunction of a competent Court before the 1st December, 1895, and, thereupon, Venkayyamma instituted on the 21st October, 1895, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore, a suit against Rani Papamma Rao and the Collector of the Kistna District, who was the local agent of the Court of Wards, in which she claimed a declaration that the adoption of Narayya Appa Rao by Rani Papamma Rao was invalid, and also claimed to be placed in possession of the Medur estate with all the savings, appurtenances, etc., of the estate. That suit was Suit No. 35 of 1895 in the Register of the Court at Ellore.

When Venkayyamma died on the 9th March, 1899, her Suit No. 35 of 1895, was still pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and on the 1st May, 1899, on the application of Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao, he and his brother Rangayya Appa Rao were brought on the record of Suit No. 35 of 1895 as plaintiffs, as being the two surviving uncles of Narayya Appa Rao and the legal nearest reversioners to the Medur estate. The Subordinate Judge of Ellore on the 2nd December, 1899, made a decree dismissing the suit, and Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao and Rangayya Appa Rao separately appealed from that decree to the High Court at Madras. To those appeals, Parthasarathi Appa Rao, who was a cousin of Narayya Appa Rao's natural father, and had claimed a third share in the Medur estate, was made a party. He had claimed that third share in a suit, No. 44 of 1899, in the Court of the District Judge of Godavari, in which his claim to a third share in the Medur estate was dismissed by a decree of that District Judge on the 12th December, 1903. From that decree of the District Judge of Godavari, dismissing his claim to a third share, Parthasarathi Appa Rao appealed to the High Court at Madras. The three appeals above mentioned were heard together by the HighCourt at Madras, and on the 20th November 1905, the High Court by a decree dismissed the appeals of Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao and Rangayya Appa Rao, and allowed the claim of Parthasarathi Appa Rao to a third share in the Medur estate. From that decree of the 20th November, 1905, of the High Court at Madras, Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao and Rangayya Appa Rao appealed to His Majesty in Council. Before the appeal came on for consideration by the Board, Rangayya Appa Rao and Venkata-Narasimha Appa Rao had died, and Venkatadri Appa Rao, son of Rangayya Appa Rao, and Venkataramayya Appa Rao and Sobhanadri Appa Rao, sons of Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao, were brought on the record as the appellants.

On the 10th December, 1913, the Board reported to His Majesty, so far as is now material, that it ought to be declared that the adoption of Narayya Appa Rao by Rani Papamma Rao was invalid, and that on the death of Venkayyamma Rangayya Appa Rao and Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao became entitled as reversionary heirs to the Medur estate and the lands with mesne profits and moveable properties appertaining thereto, and that the said estate with mesne profits and the moveable properties appertaining thereto ought to be divided into moieties between the appellants Venkatadri Appa Rao as to one such moiety, and Venkataramayya Appa Rao and Sobhanadri Appa Rao, minors, as to the other moiety. His Majesty on the 12th December, 1913, having taken that report into consideration, was pleased, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, to approve thereof and ordered that the same be punctually observed, obeyed and carried into execution.

It will be observed that the claim to a third share in the Medur estate which Parthasarathi Appa Rao had made was not allowed, and that the right of Rangayya Appa

Rao and Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao to the possession of the Medur estate as reversionary heirs did not arise until Venkayyamma had died on the 9th March, 1899.

The result of the appeal to his Majesty in Council established the fact that Venkayyamma had a right to the income received from the Medur estate from the death of her son Narayya Appa Rao on the 4th August, 1895, until she died on 9th March, 1899, less the expenses of collecting it and less such expenses as were necessarily incurred in maintaining the Medur estate. That income included any interest which was paid or payable upon any Government promissory-notes which the Court of Wards may have held in respect of monies received from the Medur estate before the 4th August, 1895, and any interest paid or payable by Banks in respect of such part or parts of her income which during her life the Bank or Banks had received on deposit or otherwise at interest. If Venkayyamma had actually received that income, she might have added it to the Medur estate as an accretion, but she did not, and it remained at her absolute disposal by Will or otherwise, and on her death it was part of her estate which was applicable for the payment of such legacies as she might bequeath by her Will.

Owing to the disputes which have been referred to, and to the necessary action taken by the Civil Court to protect the Medur estate for the benefit of whoever might be entitled to the possession of it, Venkayyamma never obtained actual possession of the income to which she was entitled, but her estate, which would be available for the payment of legacies bequeathed by her, consisted to a great extent of that income to which she had been entitled, and no one who was not her executor or an administrator of her estate appointed by a Court or a legatee under her Will was entitled to receive what represented that estate or any part of it. After the death of Venkayyamma her estate consisted of the income to which at the time of her death she was entitled and to what represented that income which had been invested or deposited in the Government Treasury, or in a Bank or Banks, and of any interest which might become payable in respect of such investment as long as it remained under the control and custody of the Court. If the Court should hand over to any person, not entitled to receive that estate, it or any part of it, such person would be liable to re-pay it to the person entitled to receive it with such interest in respect of it as it had made, or at least as it might have made if it had been deposited at interest with the Bank of Madras or any other similar Indian Bank of position.

On the 30th January, 1899, Venkayyamma made her will which, so far as is material, was as follows:—

"Will executed on the 30th day of January 1899 by Sri Rajah Venkata Rajagopala Venkayyamma Rao Bahadur Garu, widow of late Sri Rajah Venkataramayya Appa Rao Bahadur zemindar Varu.

I have been ill for about four months past and now there is much swelling and hard breathing and, therefore, being afraid that I will not survive, I, while in a sound state of consciousness and understanding, make the following arrangements:—

1. Out of the jewels and other valuables belonging to me, I have already sold a major portion and spent that amount as well as the amount borrowed from my brother, Sri Rajah Inuganti Venkata Rajagopala Buchi Thammayya Bahadur Garu and from my younger brother, Chiranjivi Sri Rajah Inuganti Rajagopala Venkatarama Chinna Rao, for the expenses of the Medur estate suit and for our maintenance and other expenses.

2. Out of the minor jewels that are remaining with me at present, the jewels set with diamonds and pearls shall be divided into three shares, and out of those shares, one share shall be given to my elder brother Sri Rajah Inuganti Buchi Thammayya Garu and two shares to my younger brother Sri Rajah Chinna Rao.

3. Further, the remaining gold and silver jewels, utensils, etc., and also cattle, shall be given to my two brothers as specified in para. 2.

4. The two silver maces of chobdars and orderlies, which belong to us shall be given to my junior brother-in-law Sri Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao Bahadur Garu.

5, The Government promissory-notes and cash relating to the Medur estate which have been in the custody of Court till this day, as well as the interest accruing thereon till payment of the amount, shall be divided into four shares, and out of them, one share shall be given to my elder brother Buchi Thammayya Garu, and three shares to my younger brother Chinna Rao.

6. Out of the Government promissory-notes and cash of the Medur estate which are remaining in deposit in Court and the jewels, etc., the amount specified hereunder shall be first expended and only out of the remaining amount, one share shall, as stated in para. 5, be paid to my elder brother and three shares to my younger brother."

[Here followed the amounts of the various legacies.]

Nine persons signed an attestation clause in which they stated that the Will was signed by the testatrix as her Will in their presence, who at the same time at her request, in her presence and in the presence of each other signed their names as witnesses. The Will having been executed was enclosed in a sealed cover which bore the following endorsement:—

"Will executed on the 30th January 1899 by Sri Rajah Venkata Rajagopala Venkayyamma Rao Bahadur Zamindarini Garu of Sanivarapeta Garu, to be given effect to after her death."

The Will was presented for deposit on the 2nd February, 1899, at the office of the Registrar of Godavari by the agent whom the testatrix had appointed to deposit it at the Registry. After the testatrix had died the Registrar of Godavari, having satisfied himself that she had died, opened the sealed cover and registered the Will. The sole executor appointed by the Will did not take upon himself the duties of an executor and died shortly after the testatrix.

It was the Will of a Hindu of the Province but not of the town of Madras, and had not been made by her within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature of Madras, and did not relate to immoveable property situate within the local limits of that original civil jurisdiction.

After the death of Venkayyamma, a Sub-Magistrate of Ellore, took possession of certain jewellery and other things which had belonged to her as her stridhanam. He handed over the things to the Police, who gave them into the possession of Rangayya Appa Rao and Venkatanarasimha Appa Rao, who had no title to them as reversioners or otherwise, and they took possession of them and claimed them as reversioners. Thereupon the two brothers of Venkayyamma, who are mentioned in the first and second clauses of her Will, brought a suit on the 2nd March, 1902, in the District Court of Gadvari, against Rangayya Appa Rao and Venkatarasimha Appa Rao for possession of that property. The first plaintiff in that suit having died, his son and heir was made a plaintiff. Finally a decree for possession of the property claimed was made in favour of the plaintiffs. It is necessary to refer to that suit as one of the contentions of the appellants in this appeal has been that the suit of 1902 having been brought, these suits were not maintainable. That contention was founded on misconception. The causes of action were not the same. The suit of 1902 was for the wrongful conversion (trover, it used to be called in England) of goods. The present suits are to obtain payment of legacies, and there is no claim in respect of any of the goods to which the Suit of 1902 related.

The other contentions of the appellants in this appeal were that (a) Venkayyamma had no disposing power to bequeath the legacies; (b) that cls. 5 and 6 of the Will had been wrongly construed by the High Court; and (c) that the suit was barred by the law of limitation.

As to the objection that Venkayyamma had no disposing power to bequeath the legacies, that question is involved in the contention that cls. 5 and 6 of the Will have been wrongly construed by the High Court. Their Lordships will consider these two contentions together. On the death of her son, Narayya Appa Rao, on 4th August, 1895, she became entitled to the Medur estate and its income, to hold for her own life, and that income included the interest on investments of all monies received in respect of the Medur estate collected before the death of her son on the 4th August, 1895. To that income she remained entitled until her death on the 9th March, 1899. That income or any part of it she could, while she remained entitled to it, have added as an accretion to the Medur estate if she had wished to do so. There is no evidence to suggest that she had ever added any part of that income as an accretion to the Medur estate. She was consequently entitled to dispose of it by Will or otherwise.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellants that the High Court in the decree of the 4th April, 1922, in Parthasarathi Appa Rao's Letters Patent Appeal must have misconstrued cls. 5 and 6 of Venkayyamma's Will as to those promissory notes in those clauses mentioned which represented monies received by the Court of Wards before the 4th August, 1895, in Narayya Appa Rao's lifetime and included them in the income of the Medur estate mentioned in the 3rd para. as amended by their Lordships, of that decree. There was no misconstruction of cls. 5 and 6 of the Will. Venkayyamma was, after the death of her son on the 4th August, 1895, entitled to hold during her life, as part of the Medur estate, those promissory-notes or other investments which represented monies received by the Court of Wards in respect of the Medur estate, so that she might receive for her own use, and as part of her income, such interest as might be payable under them; but by her Will she did not bequeath these promissory notes which represented monies, which had been received by the Court of Wards before the 4th August, 1895, she only dealt with the promissory-notes to which she was absolutely entitled as representing monies which had been received after her son's death by the Court of Wards as the Receivers. That is the only reasonable construction of her Will and the High Court in the decree of the 4th April, 1922, passed in Letters Patant Appeal No. 20 of 1921, was under no misconception of Venkayyamma's position or of her rights.

There remains to be considered the question of limitation. The Article of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, which applies to the suit in which these consolidated appeals have arisen, is Art. 123, which allows twelve years, calculated from the time "when the legacy or share becomes payable or deliverable," for bringing a suit "For a legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator, or for a distributive share of the property of an intestate." The question as to what the word "payable" means is not without difficulty. It has been contended on the part of the appellants that the legacies sued for became payable at latest twelve months after the death of Venkayyamma, in which case the suits would be barred by limitation. Looking at Art. 123 as one of general application to such suits, it appears to their Lordships that a similar interpretation must be given to the words "payable" and "deliverable" as used in the Article, and that a share in the property of an intestate would not be "deliverable" until the administrator, to whom Letters of Administration had been granted, had in his hands the share to be delivered, and similarly, a legacy or share in a legacy does not become "payable" until the executor or other person liable to pay it has in his hands money with which it could be paid.

In the present case no one could have had in his possession or control any fund representing the income of the Medur estate, which Venkayyamma had had a right to enjoy for her own use but had not received, until it had been finally decided by the Board in 1913 that the adoption of Narayya Appa Rao by Rani Papamma Rao was invalid, and there was no other fund. It was suggested on behalf of the appellants that the plaintiffs in these suits might have brought suits for these legacies as soon as Venkayyamma had died, or within twelve months after her death against her heir, whoever he might then have been, and might have obtained decrees against him for the payment of the legacies when he might be in possession of assets with which the legacies might have been payable. Without expressing any opinion as to whether such a suit could or could not have been maintained against a Hindu heir who had received no property belonging to Venkayyamma, their Lordships may quote a passage from the judgment of the Board in Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (1) as to the effect of Art. 97 of Act XV of 1877. The passage is as follows:—

"Barumal might have sued for his debt, but the utmost benefit that could have come to him from such a suit would have been to have it suspended or retained in Court till after decision of the appeal in the specific performance suit. Dhum Singh's defence would have been that the debt was paid by virtue of the contract, and that defence must have prevailed if the suit were heard while the decree of 1881 still stood unreversed. It would be an inconvenient state of the law if it were found necessary for a man to institute a perfectly vain litigation under peril of losing his property if he does not. And it would be a lamentable state of the law if it were found that a debtor, who for years has been insisting that his creditor shall take payment in a particular mode, can, when it is decided that he cannot enforce that mode, turn round and say that the lapse of time had relieved him from paying at all."

In this case no difficulty of applying Art. 123 of the First Sch. of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, arises when the Will of Venkayyamma is considered. It was a carefully drawn Will bequeathing legacies of, in the aggregate, a large sum of money. Venkayyamma had already, when she made her Will, commenced her suit which would determine whether she was entitled to any fund out of which any legacies which she might bequeath could be paid. If the adoption of Narayya Appa Rao by Rani Papamma Rao should be finally held to have been valid, Venkayyamma and her advisers must have known that there was and would be no fund out of which the legacies could be paid. They could not be paid unless it should be finally decided that the adoption was invalid. She stated in her Will that she had been very ill for four months and was afraid that she would not survive, and that she had sold the major part of her jewels and other valuables and had spent the amount (obtained by the sale of them) as well as the amount of money which she had borrowed from her two brothers, mentioned in her Will, "for the expenses of the Medur estate suit and for our maintenance and other expenses," and in cl. 5 directed that "the Government promissory-notes and cash relating to the Medur estate which have been in the custody of Court till this day, as well as the interest accruing thereon till payment of the amount, shall be divided" in the manner which she directed. And in cl. 6 she directed that "Out of the Government promissory notes and cash of the Medur estate which are remaining in deposit in Court and the jewels, etc., the amounts specified hereunder shall be first expended and only out of the remaining amount, one share, shall, as stated in para. No. 5, be paid to my elder brother and three shares to my younger brother." And then she set out as expenses to be incurred a full and complete list of the legacies to be paid. The only conclusion which on these facts, their Lordships can arrive at is that the testatrix intended that the legacies should be payable and be paid after the final determination of the suit which she had brought for a declaration that the adoption of Narayya Appa Rao by Rani Papamma Rao was invalid and to establish her right to the income of the Medur estate. That litigation was not finally determined until the judgment of the Board was delivered in 1913, and these suits were instituted in 1916 and were within the time allowed by Art. 123 of the First Sch. to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908.

If any authority were necessary to show that the intention of a testatrix, when not expressly and unambiguously stated in her Will, may be inferred by a Court from other facts stated or referred to in her Will, that legacies bequeathed by the Will should not be paid until the conclusion of litigation in which she was engaged when she made her Will, it may be deduced from the judgment of Lord Justice Turner, L. J., in Lord v. Lord (2).

In Roddy v. Fitzgerald (3) Lord Wensleydale, in referring to the rules for the construction of Wills, said:

"These rules are perfectly plain and clear. The first duty of the Court expounding the Will is to ascertain what is the meaning of the words used by the testator. It is very often said that the intention of the testator is to be the guide, but that expression is capable of being misunderstood, and may lead to a speculation as to what the testator may be supposed to have intended to write, whereas the only and proper inquiry is, what is the meaning of that which he has actually written. That which he has written is to be construed by every part being taken into consideration according to its grammatical construction and the ordinary acceptation of the words used, with the assistance of such parol evidence of the surrounding circumstances as is admissible, to place the Court in the position of the testator."

And then Lord Wensleydale referred to other rules to be followed by Court in construing Wills.

In Gordon v. Gordon (4) Lord Cairns, as to the construction of Wills, said:

"I take the law on this subject to have been expressed with much accuracy and felicity by Lord Cranworth, than whom no Judge more consistently adhered to sound and strict principles of construction in the interpretation of Wills. In the case of Abbott v. Middleton (5) before this House, Lord Cranworth speaks thus: 'Where by acting on one interpretation of the words used we are driven to the conclusion that the person using them is acting capriciously, without any intelligible motive, contrary to the ordinary mode in which men in general act in similar cases, then, if the language admits of two constructions, we may reasonably and properly adopt that which avoids these anomalies, even though the construction adopted is not the most obvious, or the most grammatically accurate. But if the words used are unambiguous, they cannot be departed from merely because they lead to consequences which we consider capricious, or even harsh and unreasonable.' "

The case of Lord v. Lord (2) was referred to by Sir W. S. Schwabe, C. J., and by Coutts-Trotter and by Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ., in their learned judgments in the Letters Patent Appeals.

It appears from the judgments of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada of the 29th November, 1917, and from the judgment of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., of the 4th April, 1922, that at different dates between 1903 and 1908 Rangayya Appa Rao, Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao and Parthasarathi Appa Rao each obtained on his own application to the High Court one-third of the amount standing to the credit of Suit No. 35 of 1895. They each gave some security. It also appears that after the order of His Majesty in Council of the 19th December, 1913, had been made, Venkatadri Appa Rao, Venkataramayya Appa Rao and Sobhanadri Appa Rao obtained from Parthasarathi Appa Rao the one-third which he had received. For the amounts received by Rangayya Appa Rao and by Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao their sons, as their heirs and legal representatives, are responsible.

The decrees of the High Court from which these consolidated appeals have been brought, having been amended as to one of them by substituting "income" for the words "mesne profits" were the right decrees to make in the appeals under the Letters Patent, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these consolidated appeals should be dismissed with costs.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL No. 5 OF 1924.

October 14, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ramesam and Mr. Justice Odgers.

M. K. SHEIK DAWOOD SAHIB—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

MOIDEEN BATCHA SAHIB AND OTHERS—DEFENANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—"Delivery" and "possession", meaning of—Adverse possession—Usufructuary mortgage—Oral sale of equity of redemption—Possession for 12 years thereafter—Prescriptive title, acquisition of.

A usufructuary mortgagee to whom the mortgaged property is sold without a registered instrument and who holds possession of the property for over 12 years from the date of sale acquires a title to the property by adverse possession, even if the sale is held to be infructuous. [p. 332, cols. 1 & 2.]

The principle that possession can be adverse only to a person competent to sue does not apply where the change in the character of the possession is by mutual consent. [p. 332, col. 2.]

A direction by a mortgagor to the mortgagee to keep the property as absolute owner amounts to "delivery" within the meaning of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. [ibid.]

The word "delivery" in s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act means only such delivery as the thing to be delivered is capable of. [ibid.]

The word "possession" in s. 54, Transfer of Property Act, cannot be taken to be synonymous with occupation. [ibid.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Krishnan, in S. A. No. 1711 of 1923, dated the 7th January 1924, presented to the High Court against the decree of the Court of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, in A. S. No. 20 of 1922, preferred against the decree of the District Munsif, Erode, in O. S. No. 1227 of 1920.

Messrs, T. M. Krishnaswamy Iyer and M. Balasubramania Mudaliar, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants' father obtained by Ex. A (dated 1st August 1888) an usufructuary mortgage of the suit property as well as a simple mortgage of another property not the subject of the suit. It is now found by the Subordinate Judge—a finding which we must accept—that four or five years after Ex. A, the mortgagor told the mortgagee to take the suit property in lieu of the whole debt of Rs. 75 and, therefore, he enclosed it by a wall.

If there was no delivery within the meaning of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, the case is on all fours with Usman Khan v. Nagalla Dasanna (1), Musigadu v. Maneam Gopalu Reddy (2) and Karnam Kandasami Pillay v. Chinnappa (3). The defendants having been in possession for more than 12 years, the present suit in 1920 by the plaintiff claiming title from the original mortgagor to redeem is barred. But Mr. Krisnaswami Iyer argues that there can be no adverse possession, for he argues that part performance of an agreement to sell, by way of delivery of possession, cannot make the possession adverse and he refers to the Full Bench decisions in Vizagapatam Sugar Development Co., Ltd., v. Muthuramaridni (4). This argument of his involves the anomaly that there was no delivery for the purpose of s. 54 but there was some kind of delivery which amounts to part performance.

Apart from this anomaly the facts of this case are different from Vizagapatam Sugar Development Co., Ltd. v. Muthuramareddi (4) where the delivery was in part performance of an agreement to sell. Here there was an attempt at a sale and the change in the character of possession was in pursuance of such an attempt. Even if there was no difference between the two cases, we do not see any reason why the possession obtained in part performance of an agreement to sell or the possession in its changed character which was the result of an attempted but infructuous sale should not be adverse to the vendor. The principle that possession can be adverse only to a person competent to sue [see Palaniandi Malaavrayan v. Vadamalai Odayan (5), Manikkam Pillai v. Thanikachalam Pillai (6) and Dewasikamani Nataraja v. Govinda Rao (7)] does not apply where the change in the character of the possession was by mutual consent [see Usman Khan v. Nagalla Dasanna (1), Buswell on Limitations s. 260]. It follows that the defendants perfected a title by prescription. So far we have assumed there is no valid delivery.

But it seems to us that the delivery in this case satisfies the requirement of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. A direction by the vendor to keep the property as absolute owner amounts to delivery. We agree with the decision in Muthukaruppan Samban v. Muthu Samban (8). There is no reason to think that the word "delivery" in s. 54 is used in a peculiar sense or that the words "places the buyer in possession of the property" in the 4th clause are intended to alter the legal conception of "possession" or of "delivery". Delivery usually means such delivery as the thing to be delivered is capable of. Possession cannot be taken to be synonymous with "occupation" as has been done in Sibendrapada Banerjee v. Secretay of State for India (9) with which decision we cannot agree. We observe that though the decision has been referred to in Bhaskar Gopal v. Padman Hira Chowdari (10) the two learned Judges referred to it very guardedly and did not expressly approve of it.

We are of opinion (1) that there has been a valid delivery and (2) if there was no valid delivery the defendants acquired a title by prescription. In either case s. 48 of the Registration Act cannot

A judgment-debtor made an application under s 152 of the C. P. C. for amendment of the decree passed against him, by excluding from the amount of the costs allowed to the opposite party, a certain sum which represented expenses incurred in summoning witnesses by the decree-holder, on the ground that none of the witnesses had appeared on behalf of the decree-holder. The Trial Court refused to consider the application on its merits for the reason that the decree as prepared had been signed by the judgment-debtor's Pleader On revision:

Held, that the Trial Court in refusing to consider the application on its merits had failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it by law and that its order must be set aside and the case remanded to it for disposal according to law.

Application against an order of the Munsif, Ramsanehighat (at Bara Banki), dated the 1st October 1924.

Mr. Rameshwari Dayal, for the Applicant.

Mr. L. S. Misra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under s. 115 of the C. P. C. against the order of the Munsif of Ramsanehighat, dated the 1st October 1924. The application has arisen in the following circumstances:—

On the 27th August 1924 a decree was passed by the Munsif in favour of the opposite party against the applicant for a sum of Rs. 276-8-0 with costs. On the 23rd September 1924 the applicant judgment-debtor applied to the Munsif that the sum of Rs. 38-8-0, expenses incurred in summoning witnesses, was wrongly included in the decree, because none of the witnesses appeard on behalf of the plaintiff decree-holder. The application purports to have been made under s. 152, C. P. C. The Munsif refused to consider the application on its merits for the reason that the decree as prepared had been signed by the judgment debtor's Pleader.

I am of opinion that the Munsif in passing the order, which he did, has failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him by law. His order is, therefore, set aside and the case is remanded to him with directions that the application of the judgment-debtor, dated the 23rd September 1924, be disposed of according to law. No order as to costs.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara family—Presumption of jointness—Separation—Agreement between co-parceners—Ascertainment of shares—Separation, whether can be inferred—Revision—Construction of document—Inference as to intention of parties.

A Mitakshara family is presumed in law to be a joint family until it is proved that the members have separated. [p. 335, col. 1.]

The co-parceners in a joint family can by agreement amongst themselves separate and cease to be a joint family, and on separation are entitled to partition the joint family property amongst themselves. [ibid.]

But the mere fact that the shares of the co-parceners have been ascertained does not by itself necessarily lead to an inference that the family had separated. [ibid.]

A member of such a joint family can separate himself from the other members of the joint family and is on separation entitled to have his share in the property of the joint family ascertained and partitioned off for him, and the remaining co-parceners, without any special agreement amongst themselves, may continue to be co-parceners and to enjoy as members of a joint family what remained after such a partition of the family property. [ibid.]

If a joint Hindu family separates the family or any members of it may agree to re-unite as a joint Hindu family, but such a re-uniting is for obvious reasons, which would apply in many cases under the law of the Mitakshara, of very rare occurrence, and when it happens it must be strictly proved as any other disputed fact is proved. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Sir John Edge.—This is an appeal by Palani Ammal, a Hindu lady, who is one of several defendants, from a decree, dated the 29th August 1917, of the High Court at Madras, which affirmed a decree for partition of the Vadimitta Estate, dated the 23rd April 1909, of the District Judge of Madura.

The estate in question, which appears to be a large zemindari, was purchased by Peraiyar Muthukumaraswami, who died in 1834. He was a Hindu Sudra, who and his descendants were governed by the law of the Mitakshara. His descendants, unless they separated, constituted a Mitakshara joint family, the property of which was in law joint property unless the contrary was proved. For the sake of brevity he will hereafter be referred to as the propositus. The propositus had two wives; by the senior wife he had six sons most of whom married and left male issue, by his junior wife he had one son, who left male issue. It is stated in the judgment of Sastri, J., in this case, and doubtless correctly, that "the property admittedly continued to be in the possession and enjoyment of the descendants of the first son of the propositus." As the family was not an ancient family, the property, which was acquired in quite modern times, was in the possession of the senior son and his descendants as managers of the joint family and not as the senior male member of a joint family.

There are two questions in this suit and in this appeal, upon which there are concurrent findings of the District Judge and the High Court. Those questions are whether the principal parties to the suit are bound by an award which was made by some arbitrators, who have been made defendants to the suit, and if they are not bound by the award, then the question arises, whether the joint family which descended from the propositus ever separated.

The question relating to the award may be disposed of at once. The District Judge and the High Court found, for reasons which their Lordships consider to have fully justified their findings, that the award was not binding upon any of the parties. No argument has been adressed to their Lordships in this appeal in support of the award, and they accept the concurrent findings, that it is not binding, as correct. The sole appellant, Palani Ammal, claimed that some of the estate sought to be partitioned had vested under the award in her. Her claim under the award fails, but as she appears, when suit for partition was brought, to have been in possession of part of the estate, the right of the plaintiffs to a decree for partition must be established, and it is necessary to consider whether the joint family had ever separated.

It is beyond question that the estate, which the propositus had purchased, vested on his death, in 1834, if not on the purchase, in the joint family, and was held jointly by the male members of the joint family as co-parceners. Their Lordships do not know whether the estate was purchased with joint family money or with self-acquired funds of the propositus, but for the purposes of this judgment they will assume that the estate did not vest in the joint family until the death of the propositus.

In coming to a conclusion, that the members of a Mitakshara joint family have or have not separated, there are some principles of law which should be borne in mind when the fact of a separation is denied. A Mitakshara family is presumed in law to be a joint family until it is proved that the members have separated. That the coparceners in a joint family can by agreement amongst themselves separate and cease to be a joint family, and on separation are entitled to partition the joint family property amongst themselves, is now well-established law. An authority for that proposition is the judgment of the Board in Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyan (1), which applies to joint families such as the joint family which descended from the propositus. But the mere fact that the shares of the coparceners have been ascertained does not by itself necessarily lead to an inference that the family had separated. There may be reasons other than a contemplated immediate separation for ascertaining what the shares of the co-parceners on a separation would be. It is also now beyond doubt that a member of such a joint family can separate himself from the other members of the joint family and is on separation entitled to have his share in the property of the joint family ascertained and partitioned off for him, and that the remaining co-parceners, without any special agreement amongst themselves, may continue to be co-parceners and to enjoy as members of a joint family what remained after such a partition of the family property. That the remaining members continued to be joint may, if disputed, be inferred from the way in which their family business was carried on after their previous coparcener had separated from them. It is also quite clear that if a joint Hindu family separates, the family or any members of it may agree to re-unite as a joint Hindu family, but such a re-uniting is for obvious reasons, which would apply in many cases under the law of the Mitakshara, of very rare occurrence, and when it happens, it must be strictly proved as any other disputed fact is proved. The leading authority for that last proposition is Balabux Ladhuram v. Rukhmabai (2).

The fact that any member of a joint family has separated himself from his co-parceners may be proved by his suing for a partition of the joint family property, and if the suit is decreed the date of his severance from the joint family will, if nothing else is proved, be treated as the date when the suit was instituted. In Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh (3) a member of a joint Hindu family had filed a plaint claiming a partition but afterwards had withdrawn it, and the Board held that no severance of the joint status resulted. Their Lordships see no reason to depart from that view, although such a plaint, even if withdrawn, would, unless explained, afford evidence that an intention to separate had been entertained [see Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (4) and Kawal Nain v. Budh Singh (5).] In a suit for partition which proceeds to a decree which was made, the decree for a partition is the evidence to show whether the separation was only a separation of the plaintiff from his co-parceners or was a separation of all the members of the joint family from each other. It appears to be obvious to their Lordships that in a suit for partition no effective decree can be made for a partition unless all the co-parceners whose addresses are known, are parties to the suit, and that it is the decree alone which can be evidence of what was decreed.

With the observations which their Lordships have already made, they will proceed to consider whether the joint family which descended from the propositus, ever separated. It will be necessary for their Lordships in referring to evidence to refer only to such evidence as they consider is material. In this present case there were concurrent judgments of the District Judge and the High Court that the family descended from the propositus never separated, and that the property sought to be partitioned is partible. The onus of proving that there had been an effective separation was upon the defendants. The Courts below were, as their Lordships are, obliged to construe documents according to their legal effect, but the Courts below were, and their Lordships are, entitled to draw all legitimate inferences as to the intentions of the parties to them, and the inferences so drawn are findings of facts.

As was pointed out by Sastri, J, in his judgment in this case, that so far as division or non-division of the estate is concerned, "there has been no formal partition deed between the various members of the family, and it is not alleged that the estate was at any time divided by metes and bounds." The defendants, whose case is that the estate, of which partition is claimed, is not now partible rely upon certain decrees and documents as showing that the estate was divided and partitioned between descendants of the propositus and that the joint family had ceased to remain joint.

In 1842, a suit was filed in the District Court of Tinnevelly by some of the sons of the propositus against his eldest son claiming that the estate should be divided according to his Will. The District Judge in 1846 found rightly that the division made by the propositus was invalid in law, but he made an equally invalid decree declaring that the sons of the first wife were entitled to one half of the estate and the son of the second wife to the other half of the estate. On the 23rd July, 1849, the Suddar Adalat Court in appeal held that all the sons were entitled to equal shares, but held that the Court was not called upon to sub-divide the estate in accordance with the law of inheritance, no such question being before the Court, and decided—"37. It is, therefore, left for the heirs, or for such of them as may be dissatisfied with the management of the joint estate by the head of the family, to adopt such a course of proceeding as they may see fit to obtain the surrender to them of their respective portion or portions of the estate." A razinama had been filed in that suit on the 1st June, 1846, by the great-grandfather of the plaintiffs in this suit stating that he no longer wished to press the eldest son for a partition of the family estate.

After the decree of the Suddar Adalat of 1849 a son of the fifth son of the propositus brought a suit in the Zilla Court of Tinnevelly in 1849 against the eldest son of the propositus for a fifth share in the estate, and the defendant in that suit pleaded that the then plaintiff's father had in a previous suit admitted that the estate ought to be held according to the law of primogeniture and had renounced all claim to a division of the estate. The Zilla Court on 22nd January, 1852, holding that the Suddar Adalat in 1849 had held that the estate was divisible, gave the then plaintiff a decree for a one-fifth share in the estate. On the 31st October, 1870, the widow of the plaintiff of the suit in the Zilla Court sold her deceased husband's interest in the estate to the son of the first son of the propositus, who was the father of Ponnusami Moniager, who was the brother, deceased without issue, of the appellant, Palani Ammal.

Their Lordships have in considering the facts in this appeal had the great advantage of the very careful and elaborate judgments which were delivered in the appeal to the High Court by Sir John Wallis, C. J., and Sastri, J., and they agree with their conclusions as to the facts. Their Lordships have no doubt that this joint family never did separate.

Their Lordships think that so far from the members of that joint family intending to separate, their object probably was to establish themselves, if possible, as a joint family with an impartible estate descending according to a rule of lineal primogeniture with rights of maintenance and other privileges for the junior members. Such a joint family could not be established in modern times.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Ordinarily one tenant-in-common cannot maintain an ejectment against another tenant-in-common, because the possession of one tenant-in-common is the possession of another and to enable the party complaining to maintain an ejectment, there must be an ouster of the party complaining. But where the claimant tenant-in-common has not been in participation of the rents and profits for a considerable length of time and other circumstances concur, it may be presumed that there has been an ouster. JUDGMENT.

IN A. No. 1257 OF 1922.

Suhrawardy, J.—The only question that arises for consideration in this case is whether the plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation, or in other words whether the defendants have acquired exclusive title to the land in suit by virtue of adverse possession. The predecessors of the parties were joint co-owners in respect of several properties consisting of hashil land, patit lands, jungles and tanks. Bisu, the predecessor of the appellants in the other appeal (S. A. No. 1256 of 1922) brought in 1906 a suit for partition of the mouza which belonged to the joint family. The heirs of the other brothers, including Balai (the father of the appellants in this appeal), filed a written statement in that suit in which they alleged that hashil, patit and other lands were partitioned amongst the co-sharers long ago and some of the tanks and jungles were left unpartitioned. Thereupon Bisu withdrew the suit in 1908. In 1908 the defendants' lessee brought a criminal case against the plaintiffs for catching fish from the tank in suit and the plaintiffs were fined on the 9th June 1908. The present suit was instituted on the 1st June 1920. Both the Courts have found that the plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation.

It has been argued before us that the case being one between co-parceners of a joint family, the law has been wrongly applied by the lower Courts to the facts of the present case. It is contended that in order to make the Statute of Limitation run against a co-owner in a suit, in respect of property which was at one time held jointly by all the co-owners, there must be a finding as to actual ouster by the plaintiffs' co-owners; and it is further contended that this ouster must be express and it will give sufficient notice to the dispossessed co-owner of the commencement of the act of dispossession by his co-owner. It is not correct to say that in order to make limitation run against a co-parcener by adverse possession of a co-owner, there must be ouster from possession of the other co-owners. It is not necessary to cite authorities in support of this proposition as it is firmly settled by several decisions of the Privy Council as well as of this Court. But the real question that has always come up for consideration is as to what amounts to ouster from possession. The findings in the present case are that the suit was brought by one of the co-owners for partition of properties alleged to be joint in 1906, in which the plaintiffs' predecessors and other co-sharers alleged that some of the properties had long been partitioned, and one of such properties was the disputed tank. In support of the written statement, it is found, the defendants without suit produced a certain pottah and a kabuliyat, dated the 17th Ashar 1299, which were exchanged between defendants Nos. 1 to 7 and their lessee, Tara Chand Kewat in respect of the disputed tank. It is not apparent whether these documents were actually filed; but a list of the documents filed by the defendants in that case has been produced. From these facts the Court of Appeal below has found that there was a partition of the mouza between the four original brothers long before the memory of the existing generation. After partition defendants Nos. 1 to 7 or their predecessors were found to be in exclusive possession of the tank in suit and the plaintiffs and their predecessors not only never asserted any claim to this tank thereafter, but their predecessors admitted that there was a previous partition of a portion of the joint property including the disputed tank. It is further found that the defendants in the suit of 1906 did give notice to their co-sharers of the fact that the tank was claimed exclusively by the predecessors of defendants Nos. 1 to 7 and that they were setting up adverse possession of it against the other co-sharers. The Court below has further accepted the story of defendants Nos. 1 to 7 that they were possessing the tank from a very long time by letting it out to the kewats or fishermen. From these circumstances the Court of Appeal below has drawn the following conclusion. "In such circumstances I agree with the learned Trial Court and find that the plaintiffs were not in possession within 12 years before suit, I prefer the evidence of possession on the defendants' side and hold that they hold adverse and exclusive possession of the tank since the partition of the mouza between the four original co-sharers which took place long before the memory of the living generation." The learned Judge further proceeds to observe thus:—"Even if it be held that the tank was ijmali property but by some arrangement between the co-sharers the defendants Nos. 1 to 7 are holding exclusive possession of it, these suits must fail because such exclusive possession cannot be disturbed unless by a partition suit." It is contended by the learned Advocate for the appellants that these findings are not sufficient to constitute ouster in law and reference has been made in this connection to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (1) and it is maintained that in order to constitute ouster there must be an express exclusion of the other co-sharers from the property in suit. It is difficult to lay down any definite rule of law as to what constitutes an ouster; but every case must depend upon its own facts and the Court of fact is entitled to find whether certain set of facts presented before it does or does not amount to ouster. The decisions of the Judicial Committee which are based on fact and law are not sure guides in such questions which arise in second appeals. But we are unable to hold that the facts found in the present case do not in law amount to ouster. The latest case on this point, in which all the previous decisions on this question were cited and considered, is the case of Varadu Pillai v. Jevarathnammal (2). Viscount Cave in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee has quoted with approval the doctrine to be found in the case of Culley v. Doe d. Taylerson (3) which is as follows: "Generally speaking, one tenant-in-common cannot maintain an ejectment against another tenant-in-common, because the possession of one tenant-in-common is the possession of the other, and to enable the party complaining to maintain an ejectment, there must be an ouster of the party complaining. But, where the claimant, tenant-in-common, has not been in the participation of the rents and profits for a considerable length of time, and other circumstances concur, the Judge will ask the Jury to presume that there has been an ouster". We are of opinion that the elements found in this case would in law, in the view of their Lordships in the case last mentioned, amount to an ouster. In this view of the matter it is not necessary to refer to the cases which have all proceeded upon the particular facts found in them.

The learned Subordinate Judge has also held the suit barred by limitation under Art. 142, Limitation Act. The plaintiffs came to Court on the allegation that they were in possession and were dispossessed by the defendants, practically by the findings of the Criminal Court on the 9th June, 1908. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that they were not in possession on that date and as they came to Court on the allegation of possession and dispossession he was of opinion that Art. 142 applied and that the suit was barred by limitation. It is contended by the appellants that this Article is not applicable to the case of co-owners. It is unnecessary in view of our findings on the first point to express any opinion upon this point.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

IN S. A. No. 1256 OF 1922.

The sole appellant is the purchaser of the shares of the sons of Bisu, who are the grandsons of Bansi, one of the four brothers constituting the joint family. The learned Vakil appearing for him has adopted the arguments advanced by the learned Advocate in S. A. No. 1257 of 1922 and has further argued that his client being a mortgagee and purchaser in execution of the mortgage decree, time against him ought to run from July 1914—the date of his purchase and in support of this contention has relied upon the case of Aimadar Mondal v. Makhan Lal Dey (4). The facts found in that case, however, are that the plaintiffs, mortgagors, were in possession at the time of mortgage and, therefore, the principle established thereon that adverse possession against the mortgagor is not really against the mortgagee does not apply in the present case.

We think that the view taken by the Court below is correct and this appeal is dismissed with costs to the respondents represented by Babu Bejoy Kumar Bhattacharjee.

Public Demands Recovery Act (I B. C. of 1895), s. 7—Bengal Drainage Act (VI of 1880), s. 37—Notice under s. 37, absence of—Certificate proceedings, validity of.

The failure to serve a notice in accordance with the provisions of s. 37 of the Bengal Drainage Act vitiates certificate proceedings under the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Howrah, in Hooghly, dated the 19th November 1924, reversing that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Howrah, dated the 28th August 1919.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Roy and Ramani Mohan Chatterji, for the Appellants.

Babus Surendra Nath Guha and Nuruddin Ahmed, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against a decision of the Additional District Judge of Hooghly, at Howrah, reversing a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Howrah.

The suit out of which the appeal arises was brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration that a certificate issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, to recover certain drainage costs under the Bengal Drainage Act, 1880, was invalid and that the substitution of the plaintiffs' names in place of the original obligee of the instalment bond, given under the provisions of the Bengal Drainage Act, was ultra vires.

The Subordinate Judge held that the certificate was issued without jurisdiction and that the substitution was ultra vires. The Additional District Judge has reversed this decision and hence this appeal. The facts are as follows: A certain drainage scheme, known as the Rajapur Drainage Scheme, was carried out in the year 1895 and under the provisions of the Bengal Drainage Act part of the costs were charged against Mouza Khasmara appertaining to patni Wadipur. The plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-interest were the zemindars at the date of the scheme and the patnidars were Pran Krishna Ghosh and Panchkari Ghosh, each having an 8-annas share.

Pran Krishna sold his share to Asutosh Ghosh and Arunodoy Ghose, and Panchkari's 8-annas share was let out in darpatni to four persons.

The darpatnidars were held liable for a portion of the drainage costs under s. 30 of the Act and they executed an instalment bond for the costs. In June 1900 the patni was sold under Regulation of 1819 and purchased by Asutosh Ghosh.

The liability under the instalment bond being undischarged an attempt was made to make the purchaser of the patni liable. This failed as did subsequent attempts.

In May 1915 the present appellants purchased the patni under Regulation VIII of 1819 and in March 1916 the Collector issued a notice on the plaintiffs under s. 7 of the Public Demands Recovery Act to recover the sums due under the instalment bond and ultimately directed the substitution of their names and a certificate was issued.

Various points were raised and argued before us on behalf of the appellants but we do not think that it is necessary to refer to them as the appeal we think must succeed on the ground that no notice was served upon the appellants in accordance with the provisions of s. 37 of the Bengal Drainage Act. The First Court has so found and the lower Appellate Court has not reversed this finding but thinks that the service of notice is optional.

We think that this is not so and that the failure to serve the notice on the appellants vitiates the certificate proceedings and that the appeal must succeed for this reason.

We accordingly allow the appeal and reverse the decision of the Additional District Judge and restore the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge. The appellants will be entitled to their costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court against the 1st respondent.

Custom—Pre-emption—Mahal becoming property of single proprietor—Pre-emption, right of, whether can be enforced.

The "dastur dehi" of a village prepared at a certain settlement provided that if any co-sharer desired to transfer his property he must offer it first to co-sharers who were near relations and then to co-sharers in the patti, mahal or village, and that if none of these persons were desirous of acquiring the property he was at liberty to transfer to a stranger. At the time when the Settlement took place and for some years afterwards one of the mahals of the village was the exclusive property of a single proprietor, but subsequently it became divided among several proprietors. One of these proprietors made a sale in favour of a stranger and some of the other proprietors in the mahal brought a suit to pre-empt the sale:

Held, that the mere fact, that at one time the mahal was the property of a single owner, did not indicate the disappearance of the entire village community and that under the terms of the "dastur dehi" the plaintiffs were entitled to pre-empt the sale. [p. 341, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the First Additional Judge, Aligarh, at Bulandshahr, dated the 20th April 1923.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Both these appeals have arisen out of two suits for pre-emption and they may be disposed of by one judgment. The cases have been up in appeal here before and were sent back for re-disposal to the Court of the learned District Judge of Bulandshahr.

The question before us is whether a custom of pre-emption, admittedly obtaining in the village of Mouza Ganaura Shaikh, applies is respect of the particular property now sought to be pre-empted.

It is to be mentioned here that the property in question is situated in a mahal known as mahal Alladad.

The plaintiffs are co-sharers with the vendor in mahal Alladad. The vendee is admittedly a stranger.

The plaintiffs relied upon what was set out in the document known as the "dastur dehi" prepared in the year 1296 Fasli at the Settlement of Mr. Stoker. The dastur dehi must certainly be taken to be a record of custom, and there can be no doubt that the custom of pre-emption is recorded. The language of the document is as follows:

"In joint zemindari mahals and in pattidaris, if any co-sharer desires to transfer his property he must offer it first to co-sharers who are near relations descended from the same common ancestor. After them he must offer it to co-sharers in the patti mahal or village (gaon). If none of these persons desire to acquire the property the vendor is at liberty to transfer to a stranger."

It was said in the Court below, and it was not disputed there, that at the time when the Settlement took place, mahal Alladad Khan was the exclusive property of one person, namely, Alladed himself. There is no evidence on the record to the contrary.

On the basis of this fact it has been argued before us by the vendee that, although a custom of pre-emption is recorded in the dastur dehi; nevertheless the plaintiffs are not entitled to take advantage of it because the custom could not apply to any property situated in mahal Alladad. The argument is that because the mahal in question was at the time of the Settlement, and it seems for some years afterwards, the sole property of Alladad, the custom would not apply. There is evidence on the record to show that the mahal continued in the possession of Alladad Khan up till the year 1897. He then sold it to another single proprietor who subsequently sold it to a number of persons who are related to the present vendor and pre-emptors.

We are, however, unable to accept the argument that the plaintiffs are not entitled to exercise a right of pre-emption under this custom. Mr. Dube relied on the case which is reported as Kamrunnissa v. Sughra Bibi (1). There, dealing with a mauza or village which in the year 1881 had become the property of a single owner, the Pre-emption Bench of this Court held that the custom of pre-emption which had undoubtedly existed prior to that time had become dead. The learned Judges differed from the Judge of the Court below who was of opinion, that in the circumstances, the custom was not dead but only in abeyance; in other words, the learned District Judge seemed to think that after the village ceased to be the property of a single owner and came into the possession of several co-owners, the custom would revive. It was laid down distinctly, however, that the custom was dead and that a new custom would have to grow up before any one could assert a right of pre-emption.

It is to be noticed that in this case the Bench was dealing with a mahal which was co-extensive with the mouza, and at page 481* of the report they say in support of their judgment that custom means a practice prevailing amongst a certain community. If that community has been reduced to a single individual it is impossible that the practice can any longer exist.

That argument, however, cannot be applied to a case like the one now before us. All that is made to appear is that a particular portion of this village of Ganaura Shaikh had at some time or other become a mahal in possession of a single owner. That fact, however, would not indicate the disappearance of the village community, and it seems to us perfectly clear that the reasoning which was applied in Kamrunnissa v. Sughra Bibi (1) cannot hold good in a case like the present. We are satisfied, therefore, that the vendees cannot maintain in this case that the plaintiffs are not entitled to pre-empt the property under the custom recorded in the dastur dehi of 1296 Fasli. The judgments of the Courts below are correct; both the appeals fail and are dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 21, 38, 39—Territorial jurisdiction, transfer of—Case decided without objection by either party—Waiver—Appellate Court, whether will entertain objection.

On an application for the appointment of a Receiver in a pending suit before a Judge, arguments were heard and the petition was adjourned for orders to a particular day, and meanwhile the Local Government acting under ss. 10 and 11 of the Civil Courts Act, by notification, transferred the territorial jurisdiction of the area in which the suit properties were situate to another Court. The Judge, however, heard the petition without objection by any party and pronounced his order appointing a Receiver. On an appeal against the order objection was raised that the territorial jurisdiction having been transferred, the order was without jurisdiction:

Held, that s. 21 of the C. P. C. was applicable to all cases of want of territorial jurisdiction, and the appellant not having objected to the Judge passing the order and no failure of justice having been caused, the appellant must be held to have waived all objections on the ground of want of jurisdiction and the order was a good and valid one. Mr. K. S. Sankara Iyer for Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and S. Ramaswamy Dikshit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Odgers, J.—In this case the suit was on a usufructuary mortgage bond executed by the 1st and 2nd defendants to the plaintiff; the 1st defendant being the father of defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. The last two are the appellants before us. The 3rd and 4th defendants, who are undivided members of a joint Hindu family, which owns apparently large properties, have brought the suit to set aside the suit mortgage, alleging inter alia that the document was only intended to operate if, on taking the accounts between the defendants and the plaintiff, any amount was found due from the latter to the former. The matter before us arises directly out of the petition for the appointment of a Receiver in the Mayavaram Sub-Court in which the suit had been instituted. The suit was numbered 98 of 1922. Argument was heard; on the 19th September, 1923, the petition was adjourned for orders to the 21st September. For various reasons the order was not pronounced till the 2nd October, 1923, when the plaintiff was appointed Receiver. The difficulty arises from the fact that on the 1st October 1923, a notification of Government took effect by which the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Mayavaram, Sub-Court were changed and the Nannilam Munsif, in which the lands in question are situate, was transferred to the Tiruvalur Sub-Court. The first question raised before us in appeal from the order appointing the plaintiff Receiver is that on the 2nd October the learned Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram had no jurisdiction to pronounce the order which is, therefore, void. The notification unfortunately does not say "pending suits," and we had a long argument chiefly based on Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1) and Seeni Nadan v. Muthuswamy Pillai (2) on a question whether the Court to which the jurisdiction has been transferred is the only Court which can execute a decree passed by the Court from which the jurisdiction has been transferred. In my opinion, it is quite unnecessary to examine the cases on this subject, for the learned Vakil for the petitioner at a late stage of his argument propounded other authorities to show that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction. It may be premised that authority on this question is scanty. We have, however, a Full Bench decision of this Court, the Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v. Chidambaram Chetty (3), which lays down that s. 21, C. P. C. applies to objections with regard to want of territorial jurisdiction. Further, Wallis, C. J., then said. . . . . .

"Section 21 forbids any Appellate or Revisional Court to allow any objection as to the place of suing unless it was taken in the Original Court and even then unless there was a consequent failure of justice. The effect of the section, in my opinion, is that objections which the Appellate or Revisional Court is thereby precluded from allowing must be considered cured for all purposes unless taken before the passing of the decree in the original Court."

Section 21 is inapplicable in terms to the present case because issues have been settled in the mortgage-suit, and the section provides that any objection should be taken at or before such settlement and that no objection shall be allowed unless there has been consequent failure of justice. It is quite obvious that the objection could not in this case have been taken before or at the settlement of issues, at which date the Mayavaram Sub-Court had full territorial jurisdiction over the subject-matter in dispute. It is objected that, the transfer having been made on the 1st October, when something in the nature of an application in arrest of judgment should have been put in by the appellant on the 1st or 2nd October, before the learned Subordinate Judge delivered his order, and he not having done so, the appellant must be debarred from raising any objection now to the validity of the judgment. With this contention I agree. It has been held in the Full Bench referred to that if no objection to jurisdiction is raised on the passing of a preliminary decree on a mortgage, it cannot be raised afterwards in execution. There the reasons are based on the wording of s. 47, C. P. C., but it seems to me that the principle is that objection should be taken under s. 21 at the earliest possible opportunity, and if it is not then taken, the objector is barred from raising it afterwards. The objection further will be disallowed unless there has been a failure of justice.

The cases of Jyoti Prokash Chatterjee v. Bagala Kanta Choudhury (4) and Vajechand Ramaji v. Nandram Daluram (5) and R. v. Denton (6) were all cases of jurisdiction over subject-matter and, therefore, do not apply to the present case. As pointed out by Mookerjee, J., in the first of these cases, the distinction between territorial jurisdiction and that as to the subject-matter is fundamental.

Moreover, it was held by Phillips and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ., in the Chokkalinga Pillai v. Ramasami Pillai (7) that the principle underlying s. 21, C. P. C., is that objection to territorial jurisdiction may be waived. So here it may be said that the appellant not having taken objection to the passing of the Sub Judge's order must be held to have waived his objection to his doing so on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

As to this question, the Full Bench thought it unnecessary to deal with it, or whether the words "place of suing" were not wide enough to include objections to the place of prosecuting as well as of instituting suits. Wallis, C. J., however, with whose judgment the other members of the Court agreed, appears to me to have been inclined to the opinion that they were. This really concludes the point under discussion.

I am, therefore, of opinion that this objection ought to have been taken before the judgment was pronounced, and that no objection having been taken, the appellant must be taken to have waived all objections to the pronouncement, by the Subordinate Judge, of this order. In any case, the question is entirely technical as regards the circumstances of the present appeal and I am, for the reasons given, of opinion that the objection to the appeal under s. 21, C. P. C., must be upheld.

Moreover, I am of opinion that no failure of justice has taken place. It is, therefore, necessary to shortly consider the merits which have been argued before us at great length. The appellant argued that there was no case made out for a Receiver. I am not prepared, on a consideration of the whole of the documents filed, to come to a conclusion against that of the Subordinate Judge in this matter. The plaintiff and defendants, or at least the 1st defendant's father, have been close friends for a number of years and the friendship was apparently only broken when the question of settlement of accounts occurred between them. The defendants are rich men. The plaintiff was in management of the properties, it is said, by the defendants' consent. The plaintiff is also said to have been trusted by the 1st defendant as a man of business to look after the properties as his agent. For a number of years, the plaintiff appears to have occupied a position of trust with regard to the 1st defendant, but it is said by the latter that at the end of 1921 the plaintiff was removed from his position. If that is so, it is rather significant that the plaintiff in January 1922, appears to have paid the kist on the plaint land. The allegation for the plaintiff is, of course, that he was never a manager but that he was in possession in his own right. The plaintiff is not in possession of the mortgage bond on which he sues, but that is apparently in the possession of defendants' agent who was also the Kariasthan. The Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff ought to remain in possession until the decision of the suit. I am not prepared to say that he has exercised his discretion wrongly. I refuse to interfere with his appointment of the plaintiff as Receiver and dismiss the Civil Miscellaneous Appeal with costs.

Wallace, J.—There is no need to restate the facts of this case. The first point for decision is whether any want of jurisdiction exists. This depends on the answer to the question whether, when a particular local jurisdiction of one Court is transferred to another by notification under s. 10 or s. 11 of the Madras Civil Courts Act, such transfer carries with it automatically all pending suits and proceedings of any and every sort arising out of that local jurisdiction, so that the Court in which they were originally filed loses jurisdiction and the Court to which the local jurisdiction is transferred assumes it. This seems to be a point not free from difficulty and I can find no direct authority on it. If a Court having a particular local jurisdiction is abolished and another Court takes over that jurisdiction, it seems to me that the latter takes over all pending proceedings in the former. The principle is that only the Court, in whose local jurisdiction the suit arises, can deal with all proceedings of a civil nature in that jurisdiction, whether previously pending in other Courts or not, so if any fresh application had to be put in in a suit arising in a local jurisdiction, since transferred to another Court, the applicant would have to be guided as to the forum for his application by considering not whether the suit had been instituted in a particular Court but which Court has local jurisdiction within the local limits from which his application arises. It is difficult to see why a Court having local jurisdiction should not have jurisdiction to receive such an application, and, if it has such jurisdiction, the other Court cannot have that jurisdiction also.

As regards the cases cited before us, that of Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1) is at least authority for the proposition that when, after an order for sale in execution was passed by one Court, the local limits of the jurisdiction of that Court were so altered that the property fell within the local limits of another Court's jurisdiction, the former Court loses its control over the execution proceedings which pass automatically to the latter Court. The case of Subbayya v. Rachayya (8) also favours the view that the Original Court, in which a suit on contract was first instituted, ceased to have jurisdiction when the place, where the contract was made, was taken away from its limits. I do not find that the Full Bench case in Seeni Nadan v. Muthuswami Pillai (2) in any way overrules this general proposition. It proceeded on the general bearing of ss. 37 and 38 of the C. P. C., which allow a decree-holder to apply for execution to the Court which passed the decree as well as to the Court having local jurisdiction, if that is a different Court. There is in that report no expression of any doubt as to the proposition that, generally and apart from the provisions of ss. 37 and 38 of the C. P. C., when the local jurisdiction has been transferred from one Court to another, pending civil proceedings in the former Court are automatically transferred to the latter; and Sadasiva Aiyar, J., held to his former view in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1), see his remarks in Seeni Nadan v. Muthuswamy Pillai (2):

"The fact that at a particular time the Court was competent to pass a decree for sale cannot mean that its jurisdiction to proceed further could be retained for ever."

The cases in Srinivasa Rao v. Hanumantha Rao (9) and Mouna Guruswami Naicker v. Sheik Mahommadhu Rowther (10) also support the general proposition advanced above; and also all the cases in which the power of a Court, which passed the decree, to execute it after its local jurisdiction has been transferred have been considered, for example, Manavikraman v. Ananthanarayana Aiyar (11), all of which cases assume that with the transfer of local jurisdiction the power to execute follows automatically. See also Rajana Venkoba Rao v. Sastha Aiyar (12). It is difficult; therefore, to say that the view, that a Court must have territorial jurisdiction all through the trial of a suit before it, is an unsound one, and I am inclined, as at present advised, to the view that the transfer of local jurisdiction does automatically effect the transfer of all pending suits and proceedings arising originally from that local jurisdiction. In the present case, then, the Sub-Court, Mayavaram, lost jurisdiction over this suit and all proceedings therein on the 1st of October and had, therefore, no jurisdiction to deliver the order under revision.

The next question is whether the petitioner is estopped by force of s. 21 of the C. P. C., from raising in this Court the plea of want of jurisdiction in the Mayavaram Sub-Court. He is met by the other side by the argument that, as he did not, on the 2nd October on which date the Sub-Court passed the order in this case, object to the Sub-Court so pronouncing its order, he is precluded by s. 21 of the C. P. C., from now raising that contention. Again there is some lack of authority to guide us on this point. The nearest case on the point which I am able to trace in the Full Bench case is Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v. Chidambaram Chetty (3), where it was held, first, that s. 21 governs all cases of lack of territorial jurisdiction, secondly that it applies to execution proceedings, that is, to proceedings after the decree in a suit, and thirdly that a party cannot plead in execution that the decree under execution was passed without jurisdiction. The third point is not applicable to the present case. The answer to the second does not appear to be of much help in deciding as to the validity of applying s. 21 to proceedings in suits after issues have been framed and before decree is passed. The answer of the Full Bench was given on the narrow ground that the want of jurisdiction to pass a decree is ordinarily not open as a ground of attack on appeal or revision, and that s. 21 forbids such attack unless it was made in the Original Court and unless the want of jurisdiction led to a failure of justice. The reasoning set out at page 686 * seems to suggest that s. 21 forbids any objection as to want of territorial jurisdiction being raised on appeal or revision unless it was raised in the Original Court, that again being based on an interpretation of the phrase 'objection as to the place of suing' in the section, which was held to mean objection to the institution of the suit on the ground that the Court in which it was instituted had no jurisdiction over the property which was the subject-matter of the suit. I am not sure that the Court further held that the phrase 'institution of the suit' covered all proceedings in the suit after the institution. That the Court felt this difficulty is plain from the passage in page 687 *—

"it is unnecessary to consider whether those particular words may not be read as applying only to cases where it is possible to take the objection at or before the settlement of issues, and whether the words 'place of suing' are not wide enough to include objections to the place of prosecuting as well as of instituting suits," and the case was finally decided on the assumption that, even if s. 21 did not apply, the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree could not be questioned in execution, for which proposition there was direct authority. So, I find no clear guidance in this ruling as to whether s. 21 applies when, during the pendency of a suit and after the framing of issues, the local jurisdiction from which the suit arose has been transferred to another Court, and whether all proceedings in that suit after the transfer, if taken in the Original Court, would be void.

On this point I find myself most in agreement with the referring judgment of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., who points out that to hold that the phrase 'place of suing' is synonymous with territorial jurisdiction is to hold that jurisdiction may be conferred by consent or at least by silence and by refraining from objecting to it.

I consider, however, that I must follow the Full Bench ruling in so far as it lays down that s. 21 governs all cases of want of territorial jurisdiction. In that case, this plea of want of jurisdiction shall, under the section, not be entertained, unless, inter alia, there has been a consequent failure of justice. On the merits, I agree with my learned brother, for the reasons given by him, that the petitioner has not made out any case of failure of justice consequent on this want of jurisdiction, and I, therefore, agree that the Civil Miscellaneous Appeal must fail and be dismissed with costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 35 (a) (ii)—Suit to recover value of property misappropria d by defendant—Small Cause Court, jurisdiction of. te

Plaintiff alleged that he gave a certain quantity of silver to the defendant to be made into bangles and that when the bangles were delivered to him he found that base metal had been substituted for silver. On the basis of this allegation he sued the defendant to recover a certain sum from him as the amount of which he had been defrauded by the defendant:

Held, that the allegations in the plaint amounted to an offence of criminal breach of trust and that the suit fell within the purview of Art. 35 (a) (ii) of Sch. II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and was, consequently, excluded from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court.

Application against the judgment and decree of the Sub-Judge, Rai Bareli, dated the 29th November 1924.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Applicant.

Mr. B. N. Khanna, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—This revision is based on a ground which does not seem to have occurred to anybody when the case was before the Small Cause Court and which is that the allegations in the plaint amount to an offence of criminal breach of trust under Ch. XVII of the Indian Penal Code and, therefore, the jurisdiction of Small Cause Court is ousted by Art. 35 (a) (ii) of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. This provision was inserted in the Act by the Legislature in 1914, and is constant source of difficulty to the Courts, as it is often most difficult to say whether the allegations in the plaint do amount to a criminal offence or not. In the present case, however, the matter is clear. The plaintiff says that he gave silver to the weight of Rs. 70 to the defendant to make some bangles. When the bangles were delivered it was found that base metal had been substituted for silver, and the plaintiff in para. 6 of his plaint claims Rs. 50 as damages as the amount of which he has been defrauded by the defendant. On these allegations I must hold that the case comes within Art. 35 (a) (ii). I, therefore, set aside the decree of the Court below and direct the learned Judge of the Court below to return the plaint under O. VII, r. 10 for presentation on the regular side. As the objection is taken at a very late stage I make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 129, O. XLI, r. 10—Madras High Court Original Side Rules, rule 354—Original Side appeal—Security for costs.

The effect of s. 129 of the C. P. C. is that if the Rules of the High Court on the Original Side and the rules contained in the Code are inconsistent, the Rules of the High Court prevail.

Order XL, r. 10 of the C. P. C. may be read along with r. 354 of the Rules of the Madras High Court, Original Side. The effect of the two rules is that the manner of applying on the Original Side must be by notice of motion and to that extent the Original Side Rules modify the provisions in the Code. As to what the Court should do on such application, the Original Side Rules are silent.

The proviso to O. XLI, r. 10 of the C. P. C. applies to Original Side appeals.

Behram Jung v. Haji Sultanali Shustry, 17 Ind. Cas. 739; 37 B. 572; 14 Bom. L. R. 1106 and Ratanchand v. Damji, 73 Ind. Cas. 474; 25 Bom. L. R. 468; (1923) A. I. R. (B.) 399, distinguished.

Petition praying that, in the circumstances stated therein and in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to direct the appellant (respondent herein) to furnish security for costs of the petitioner herein in the sum of Rs. 3,500 being the approximate amount of costs already incurred in O. S. No. 431 of 1919 and also to be incurred hereafter in O. S. A. No. 18 of 1924, preferred against the judgment of Mr. Justice Phillips, passed in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, in C. S. No. 431 of 1919.

Mr. V. Radhakrishnayya, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—Section 117 of the C. P. C., provides that the provisions of the Code apply to the Original Side except when expressly excluded. Order XLI, r. 10 was not excluded in O. XLIX, r. 3. Section 129 of the Code gives the High Court the power to make rules regulating the procedure of the Original Side and nothing in the Code will affect such rules. The effect is that if the Rules of the High Court, Original Side, and the Code are inconsistent, the Rules prevail. Now O. XLI, r. 10 can be read along with r. 354 of the Rules of the High Court, Original Side. The manner of applying is by notice of motion and to that extent it may modify the provision in the Code, that it shall be by petition. As to what the Court should do, the Original Side Rule is silent.

We do not think that the decisions in Behram Jung v. Haji Sultanali Shustry (1) and Ratanchand v. Damji (2) help us. In Bombay there is a special rule providing for a deposit of Rs. 500 along with the appeal and it was held that the rule was inconsistent with the Code. The second decision holds that an additional security in appeal may be demanded. This can be only under the Code.

We are of opinion that the proviso to O. XLI, r. 10 applies to Original Side appeals. The amount demanded, i.e., Rs. 3,500 is reasonable.

The appellant will give security for that amount within two months from this date, to the satisfaction of the Deputy Registrar, Original Side.

Costs of this petition will be costs in the cause.

Pre-emption—Sale or lease—Nature of transaction—Fraud.

Where in a suit for pre-emption the question arises as to the nature of the transaction sought to be pre-empted, the true nature of which has been mis-described, the question must be decided on the particular circumstances of the case. [p. 348, col. 1.]

A transaction is determined by the right which it confers on the transferee and not by the name with which it is labelled by the parties for a fraudulent object. [ibid.]

Fraud would be presumed where on the face of the document it appears that a transfer was miscalled a lease when it in reality was a sale of under-proprietary rights. [ibid.]

A transfer was described as a perpetual lease and the consideration for the transfer was described as nazrana. The transferee was, however, given the power of transfer, and indulgence was granted to him so far that he was to have his name entered in the list of under-proprietors in the village record. In a suit for pre-emption:

Held, that the transaction was really a sale of under-proprietary rights and not a lease and was consequently liable to pre-emption. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 30th July 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, Amethi, District Sultanpur, dated the 29th March 1923.

Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. Radha Krishna, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's suit for pre-emption was decreed by the Trial Court, but on appeal by the defendant it was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has decided the appeal on a preliminary ground that the transaction on which the plaintiff's right is claimed is not one of sale but of a perpetual lease. Though no reference is made to any case-law it appears that the lower Court has proceeded on the reasoning of the case of Saheb Bakhsh Singh v. Thakur Din Singh (1). A Bench of this Court has subsequently set the difference of opinion at rest by the decision in the case of Sant Bakhsh Singh v. Bhawani Prasad (2). The trend of certain rulings of Single Judges of this Court had led another Single Judge to hold finally that wherever a rent was reserved over and above the proportionate Government revenue, the transaction could not be one of the transfer of under-proprietary rights. This proposition was dissented from in the Bench ruling quoted above. An under-proprietor is defined in s. 3 (8) as a person possessing a heritable and transferable right of property in land for which he is liable to pay rent. Obviously then an under-proprietor may pay rent over and above the proportionate revenue payable for the property transferred to him.

(1) 68 Ind. Cas. 906; 9 O. L. J. 334; 4 U. P. L. R. (O.) 85; (1922) A. I. R. (O.) 229.

Each case in a suit for pre-emption, where the true transaction is in the nature of things misdescribed, must be decided on its own circumstances. In the present case a perusal of the document leaves no doubt that an under-proprietary right is carved by a proprietor out of his full title. The transferee is given power of transfer, and the indulgence is granted to him so far that he is directed to have his name entered in the list of under-proprietors—Ch. III of the village record. The transferee is directed to pay his share of the revenue and Re. 1 malikana to the transferor. The learned Counsel for the respondent was not able to point to any condition discriminating this transaction from one of sale of under-proprietary right. Obviously the transfer is described as that of perpetual lease, and the price, Rs. 1,200, paid for the transfer is described as nazrana zar-e-peshgi, to avoid a suit for pre-emption. A transaction is known by the rights it confers on the transferee and not by the name with which it is labelled by the parties for a fraudulent object.

The respondents' learned Counsel inquired where the evidence was of fraud. In a case like the present, where pre-emption was possible, fraud would be presumed when on the face of the document it appears that the transfer was miscalled a lease when in reality it was a sale of under-proprietary rights.

I hold that the transfer in question was one of sale of the under-proprietary rights and the plaintiff was entitled to bring a suit for pre-emption. I set aside the decree of the lower Court and remand the suit to it for trial on the merits under O. XLI, r. 23. Costs here and heretofore shall abide the result.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 39, 44—Composition, whether binding on creditor not entered in schedule—Cancellation of adjudication, whether amounts to discharge.

Section 39 of the Provincial Insolvency Act makes a composition binding on creditors entered in the schedule. A creditor who is not entered in the schedule and who has not consented to the composition is not bound by the composition.

Firm of Menghraj-Nevandram v. Firm of Virbhandas-Sirumal, 76 Ind. Cas. 250; (1924) A. I. R. (S.) 122; 17 S. L. R. 300, Amthalal v. Cursetji, 9 Bom. L. R. 466 and Ashrafuddin v. Bepin Behari Mullick, 30 C. 407, referred to.

An order cancelling an adjudication does not amount to a discharge within the meaning of s. 44 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Application against an order of the District Judge, Dehli, dated the 29th April 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Sardha Ram, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The respondents were adjudged insolvents, but the adjudication was cancelled under s. 39 of the Provincial Insolvency Act on account of their having made a composition, which was approved by the Court, with certain creditors. Afterwards the appellant, who had not consented to the composition, obtained a decree against the respondents and he applied for its execution. He was not one of the scheduled creditors, and in fact a schedule has not yet been prepared, though an order has been passed for its preparation. The Courts below have, however, held that the appellant is bound by the composition and is not entitled to execute his decree. He has filed a second appeal in this Court.

The decision of the Courts below must be reversed. Section 39 of the Provincial Insolvency Act makes the composition binding on creditors entered in the schedule, but there is no provision that it will be binding on unscheduled creditors, and in the absence of such a provision the appellant is entitled to execute his decree. See on this point Firm of Menghraj-Nevandram v. Firm of Virbhandas-Sirumal (1), (1) 76 Ind. Cas. 250; (1924) A. I. R. (S.) 122; 17 S. L. R. 300.

Amthalal v. Curseti (2) and Ashrafuddin v. Bepin Behari Mullick (3).

Counsel for the respondents relies on sub-s. (2) of s. 44 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, by which, save as otherwise provided by sub-s. (1), an order of discharge releases the insolvents from all debts provable under the Act. But in this case no order of discharge has been passed. The order cancelling the adjudication is quite distinct from an order of discharge, so that s. 44 (2) does not apply.

Holding, therefore, that the appellant is entitled to execute his decree, I accept the appeal, set aside the orders of the Courts below and direct the Subordinate Judge to dispose of the application for execution according to law. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court.

MULAY—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

BAL GOBIND AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Execution of decree—Dismissal of proceedings for default, erroneous—Revival of proceedings—Sale—Private sale by judgment-debtor—Priority.

Certain property belonging to a judgment-debtor was attached in execution of a simple money decree. A sale proclamation was issued but before the sale could take place the execution proceedings were dismissed on the ground that the decree-holder had failed to pay the cost of the proclamation. But the order distinctly stated that the attachment would continue. Four days later the decree-holder again applied for execution and the Court, holding that its previous order dismissing the execution proceeding for default of the decree-holder was wrong, proceeded with the execution from the stage at which matters stood on the date of its previous order, and the property was sold in due course, being purchased by the decree-holder himself. In the meantime, that is to say, after the order passed on the second application of the decree-holder, but before the sale could be held, the defendant purchased the property from the judgment-debtor. In a suit by the decree-holder purchaser to recover possession of the property from the defendant:

Held, that the decree-holder had obtained a complete title to the property and that the defendant having purchased the property in the teeth of the orders of the Execution Court, stating that the attachment still subsisted and that the execution could proceed from the stage at which it had arrived on the date on which the proceedings were erroneously dismissed for default, had obtained no title to the property at all and that, therefore, the plaintiff's suit must succeed. [p. 350, col. 1.]

Where an execution case is dismissed for default of the decree-holder an order directing the attachment to subsist is an improper order, but it is not a nullity and is binding on the parties to it. [ibid.]

Muhammad Mubarak Husain v. Sahu Bimal Prasad, 65 Ind. Cas. 91; 20 A. L. J. 113; 44 A. 274; (1922) A. I. R. (A.) 62, followed.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 15th of March 1923.

Mr. M. L. Sandal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. N. Sen and Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is by the defendant and arises under the following circumstances. Respondent Bal Gobind held a simple money decree against one Kanak Singh, who has since died, and in execution of the decree Kanak Singh's property, which is now in dispute, was attached. Sale proclamation was issued but no sale was effected. On the 11th of September 1920 the Executing Court passed a certain order, the effect of which has to be considered in this appeal. The order was somewhat in the following language:

"Since the decree-holder has failed to pay the cost of munadi (proclamation of sale by beat of drums) the execution case be struck off as infructuous. The attachment will stand. The execution costs will be paid by the judgment-debtor."

Four days later, the decree-holder again applied for execution. The Court held that the order dismissing the execution application for default was really a wrong order because nothing whatever was to be done by the decree-holder towards the sale being effected. It, accordingly, proceeded with the execution at the stage it stood on the 11th of September 1920. While the second stage of the proceeding was being held, on the 4th of November 1920, the defendant purchased the property. The attachment effected at the instance of the decree-holder was duly followed by a sale in execution and the property was purchased by the decree-holder. The defendant in pursuance of his private purchase obtained an order for mutation of names in his favour and, therefore, the decree-holder purchaser could not obtain a mutation order in the Revenue Court. He, thereupon instituted the suit for recovery of possession and mesne profits against the purchaser from the judgment-debtor.

Two points have been urged in this Court. One is that in spite of the order of learned Munsif, dated the 11th of September 1920, that the attachment should stand, it did not stand and secondly, in any case, the appellant should be allowed to retain the property by paying off the decretal amount due to the auction-purchaser as the decree-holder.

In my opinion none of the points is tenable.

Taking the second point first. It is clear that the respondent Bal Gobind obtained a complete title to the property if the attachment subsisted. In the circumstances there is no reason why he should lose the property on receiving the decretal amount.

Coming to the first point. It is not even the case that the appellant is purchaser between the two dates, viz., the date of dismissal of the execution proceeding and the date of its revival. I need not express any opinion as to what would have happened if the purchase had been made between those two dates. It has been held in this Court, vide Muhammad Mubarak Husain v. Sahu Bimal Prasad (1), that an order directing the attachment to subsist in the case of a default on the part of the decree-holder would be an improper order, but it would not be a nullity and would be binding on the parties to it. This is the latest case in this Court and the learned Judge who decided it distinguished an earlier case of Dildar Husain v. Sheo Narain (2). The appellant in this case claims under one of the parties to the order, viz., the judgment-debtor, and is bound not only by the order of the 11th of September 1920 but also by the order passed on the application dated the 15th of September 1920. On the same date as this application was made, that is to say on the 15th of September 1920, the Court ordered that a sale proclamation should issue. The Court evidently held that the attachment subsisted. In the teeth of these two orders it was not open to the judgment-debtor to transfer the property so as to give a person claiming under him a title, better than his own.

The result is that there is no force in this appeal and it must fail.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 47, 72—Rules framed under s. 47—Goods consigned for carriage—Delivery of goods, proof of—Evidence other than Railway receipt and signature in Railway books, whether admissible.

Neither s. 72 of the Railways Act nor the rules framed under s. 47 of that Act lay down any rules of evidence with regard to the proof of delivery of goods by a Railway.

The facts that a consignor is in possession of the Railway receipt in respect of goods consigned to a Railway Company for carriage and that his signature as to the receipt of those goods does not appear in the Railway books, are not conclusive evidence that the goods have not been delivered to him, inasmuch as these facts are not the only evidence which is admissible to prove delivery of the goods.

Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Gonda, dated the 28th September 1923, setting aside that of the Munsif, Utraula (at Gonda), dated the 9th October 1922.

Mr. S. N. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge of Gonda, dated the 28th September 1923. The plaintiff's case was that on the 27th May 1921 he booked four parcels, three of them containing ready-made caps, with the defendant Company at the Balrampur Railway Station for being carried to Bahraich, where a fair was being held in those days. The plaintiff himself went to Bahraich by the same train which carried the parcels. On reaching Bahraich he asked for the delivery of his parcels, the receipt of which the Railway Company had granted him at Balrampur, but no delivery of his goods was ever made. He, therefore, brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, for the recovery of damages for the loss of his goods. The chief plea in defence, with which I am concerned, was that the goods were delivered to the plaintiff.

The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiff, holding that the plea in defence was not established.

The lower Appellate Court has come to a contrary conclusion and found on consideration of the evidence produced by the Railway Company that the Company delivered the goods to the plaintiff. This is a pure finding of fact and I see no defect in it which would justify the Court of second appeal to go behind it.

At the hearing of this appeal it was argued by the learned Counsel for the appellant that his client being in possession of the Railway receipt, and the signature as to the receipt of the goods not appearing in the Railway books, no other evidence than the receipt and such signature was admissible to prove the delivery. No law in support of the contention has been cited and I am not aware of any. Reference was made to the provisions of s. 72 of the Railways Act as well as of certain rules framed under s. 47 of the same Act. Neither s. 72 nor the rules lay down any rules of evidence in the matter of cases of the present nature or indeed with regard to any other matter.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Baba MANGAL DAS—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revenue Court, order of—Revision—High Court, power of.

The High Court has no power to interfere in revision under s. 115 of the C. P. C. or otherwise, with any order that has been passed originally, or in appeal, by a Revenue Court, or by a District Judge, in reference to questions decided under the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act, even where a question is raised as to the jurisdiction of the District Judge to pass the order complained of.

Gaj Kumar Chander v. Salamat Ali, 52 Ind. Cas. 756; 42 A. 83; 17 A. L. J. 1057; 1 U. P. L. R. (A.) 142, followed.

Civil revision against an order of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 29th April 1924.

Dr. Sir T. B. Sapru, Messrs. P. N. Sapru and J. N. Chak, for the Applicant.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The main question raised in these two applications in revision was whether in the particular circumstances of the revenue suit the District Judge had jurisdiction to hear the appeals. But, as a preliminary, it is necessary to decide in the first place: Has this Court any right to interfere with his order in revision?

There have been several decisions in this Court upon the latter point. The only Bench decision which has been placed before me is the decision in Gaj Kumar Chander v. Salamat Ali (1). I was a member of the Bench which passed that decision. That decision laid down that this Court has no power to interfere in revision under s. 115 of the C. P. C., or otherwise, with any order that has been passed originally or in appeal by a Revenue Court or by a District Judge in reference to questions decided under the provisions of the Tenancy Act, Local Act No. II of 1901.

Ordinarily this would conclude the matter, but it has been argued by the learned Counsel for the applicant that this decision would not affect a case in which the District Judge had patently no jurisdiction at all. It would not be proper for me to decide one way or another as to the District Judge's jurisdiction in this matter; it is enough to say that, in my opinion, the Bench ruling which I have quoted precludes me from entering into the matter.

I must, therefore, dismiss this application with costs on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XIII, rr. 1, 2—Madras Civil Rules of Practice, r. 64—Petition to admit documents—Delay—Dismissal—Revision.

Rule 64 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice requires that the Court should call upon the parties to produce the documents relied upon by them on or before a fixed date.

Where after the settlement of issues but at an early stage of the trial of a suit, the defendant applied to the Court to receive certain documents produced by him in evidence, and alleged in his affidavit in support of the petition that he was unable to find the documents earlier, and there was no counter-affidavit by the plaintiff, and the Judge summarily rejected the application on the ground that the "reasons given for non-production earlier could not be accepted:"

Held, that the order was improper and was liable to be set aside in revision by the High Court.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, dated the 29th January 1924, in I. A. No. 27 of 1924, in O. S. No. 29 of 1923.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in Original Suit No. 29 of 1923 on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court, Mayavaram is the petitioner before me. The petition is to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge dismissing his application for receiving certain documents produced by him which documents should have been produced either at the first hearing of the suit, namely, at the settlement of issues, or on or before such date thereafter as might be fixed by the Court. There are no materials before me on which I could possibly say what the practice was in this particular Court or of the particular Subordinate Judge. I am aware that the practice with regard to this matter generally varies from Court to Court and from Judge to Judge. It is possible that the Pleader who appeared for the defendant thought that some date would be fixed for the production of the documents in the possession or power of his client. It is admitted before me that the documents were not called for at the settlement of issues, nor was any date fixed on or before which the parties were required to produce the documents in their respective possession or power. Mr. Seshagiri Sastri the learned Vakil for the respondent, contends that, under O. XIII, r. (1), C. P. C., the provision in the previous Code for the Court calling for the documents has been deliberately omitted. It is, however, noteworthy that r. 64 of the Civil Rules of Practice made by this Court indicates that the documents should be called for on some date fixed by the Court for such documents being produced and left in the Court. However that may be, an affidavit was filed before the learned Judge setting out that the defendant was unable to find the documents earlier and that it was after searching the old record he was able to find the documents then produced and that, therefore, those documents should be received, the delay being excused. There was no counter-affidavit filed and all that the learned Subordinate Judge says in his order is that the reasons given for the documents not having been produced in time cannot at all be accepted. It does not appear from this order that the learned Subordinate Judge paid any attention to the nature of the documents or that his order proceeded on any consideration of the nature of the documents included in the list. I take the order to mean that the reasons set out in the affidavit, though true, are not such reasons as would amount to sufficient reason within the meaning of r. 2 of O. XIII, C. P. C. If, on the other hand, the learned Subordinate Judge meant by his order that the reasons given were not true, it seems to me there was, on the state of the evidence before him, no ground for his rejecting summarily the sworn statement made in the affidavit of the defendant. Further, the stage at which this application was made was a comparatively early stage in the suit and no prejudice whatever could possibly have been done to the other party by the documents being received. It seems to me that the learned Subordinate Judge did not pay sufficient attention to the seriousness, so far as the party was concerned, of the order he was making in rejecting so summarily the application for documents being received. As from the order it is not clear to me what the learned Subordinate Judge meant and as, in any view, I am satisfied that he ought not to have rejected the documents in the summary manner he did, I set aside the order and direct that the petition be re-heard, and, if necessary, after an opportunity being afforded to the plaintiff-respondent to show any cause having regard to the nature of the documents why the same should not be received now. There will be no costs of this petition because the petition is really due to the negligence on the part of the defendant. Each party will pay and bear his own costs here.

KISSUMAL PAHLUMAL—DEFENDANT —RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Excise licensee—Partnership contract, legality of.

Where a licensee for sale of intoxicating drugs takes another person as partner in the business, without obtaining the approval of the Collector, as required by the terms of the license, the partnership contract cannot be recognised by a Civil Court, as the object of the contract is illegal, being a violation of the ordinary law under which no person is allowed to sell intoxicating drugs without permission of Government.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Joint Judge, Sukkur, dated the 21st April 1923.

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, the Collector of Sukkur gave to one Dewandas Kimatmal a license empowering him to sell intoxicating drugs and make majun. Dewandas Kimatmal entered into an agreement with Keshomal Pahlajmal to conduct that business for selling intoxicating drugs and the manufacture of majun as his partner. A dispute arose between the partners and the plaintiff, that is to say, the licensee brought an action in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sukkur for settling partnership accounts. It appears that one of the terms of the partnership agreement which is not before us was that the plaintiff should employ the brother of the defendant as a servant. The plaintiff failed to do so and consequently trouble arose between the partners. The learned Subordinate Judge of Sukkur passed a preliminary decree winding up the partnership and directed a taking of the accounts but on appeal being made to the District Court of Sukkur, the learned Joint Judge of Sukkur found that the partnership agreement between the parties was illegal and, therefore, no rights accruing under that agreement could be recognised by a Civil Court and, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff comes here in appeal but the matter seems to us very clear. It would seem that this partnership contemplated the commission of a series of acts which were not only contrary to the license but also contrary to the law. If you were to rest upon para. 17 of the license alone, it is possible it might be argued that although an infringement of that clause might lead to a penalty being inflicted by the Collector on an erring licensee, yet that infringement would not render an agreement of that kind illegal between the plaintiff and the defendant. But the matter goes further than that because under the ordinary law of the country no person is allowed to sell drugs except with the permission of the Collector. And it is clear that a person who enters into a partnership with the licensee in disregard of the terms of para. 17, is, as a matter of fact, entering into an agreement which makes him a person who undertakes himself to sell intoxicating drugs without the permission of the Collector. What was in contemplation between the parties was not so much the infringement of the license as a commission of an act which in consequence of the infringement of para. 17 became ipso facto illegal. Now, it is not the case that an infringement of an Abkari Act is an infringement of a mere fiscal or administrative regulation but it certainly verges on the commission of an act which is malum in se. To sell majun or intoxicating drugs is a matter which calls for the control of Government, and Government has very wisely laid down in its Act and rules thereunder, the classes of persons who are entrusted with the right to manufacture and sell intoxicating drugs. And it would seem improper that a Regulation which is rightly framed by Government under these powers should be allowed to be set aside and to be rendered nugatory by private and secret agreements between the authentic licensee and some third person. It is for this reason that the clause in the license requires that a licensee if he takes a partner should submit his name for approval to the Collector and until that is done the taking up of a partner is an illegal arrangement and he who enters into such an agreement must bear all consequences of violation of the substantive law.

We agree, therefore, with the lower Court that the object of the contract of partnership was illegal and the Court cannot recognise a contract illegally arrived at between the parties. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

GUNTI YESU RATNAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 28—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 43, 187—Suit by heir to recover share in intestate's property—Small Cause Court, jurisdiction of—Will, whether can be set up in defence—Succession—Husband's share in deceased wife's property.

Plaintiff, as the heir of his wife, brought a suit to recover a certain amount of money from the defendant. The defendant put forward a Will alleged to have been executed by the plaintiff's wife the effect of which was to defeat the plaintiff's claim to the property:

Held, that the suit fell within the purview of Art. 28 of Sch. II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and was not, therefore, a suit of a nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court.

Section 187 of the Succession Act does not stand in the way of a defendant putting forward the existence of a Will in answer to a plaintiff's claim to a share in the intestate's property.

Under s. 43 of the Succession Act, a husband can only succeed to half of his wife's property in case the wife dies intestate leaving no lineal descendant. In the absence of the next-of-kin, however, the husband would be entitled to the whole of the property as his wife's heir.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in A. S. No. 45 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Bezwada, in O. S. No. 272 of 1919.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Suryanaryana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection was taken by the respondent to this appeal. His contention is that the suit is one cognizable by a Small Cause Court, and Art. 28 of the Act does not apply to a case like this; and the amount in dispute being less than Rs. 500, the second appeal is incompetent. The plaintiff sues as the heir of his wife; and Art. 28 exempts a suit for a share of an intestate's property from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court. The contention of the respondent's Vakil is that the defendant also must claim the property of the intestate in his right as legatee or as an executor in order to bring the case under Art. 28 and relied upon Chhedi v. Gulabo (1) and Tika Shahu v. Chirkat Shahu (2). In this case the defendant does set up a Will and the Will has been found to be genuine. But the respondent's Vakil says that should not be considered, but only the plaint should be considered and that the second appeal should be held to be incompetent. I am unable to accept this contention. On the pleadings it is quite clear that the defendant did put forward the Will and it has been found to be genuine and he relies upon the Will for defeating the plaintiff's claim to the property. That being so, this is not a case which is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. Therefore, a second appeal lies.

Mr. Somasundaram for the appellant contends that the defendant is not entitled to rely upon the Will as it has not been probated, and he relies upon s. 187 of the Indian Succession Act. Section 187 does not stand in the way of a defendant putting forward the existence of a Will in answer to the plaintiff's claim to a share in the intestate's property. Section 187 is in these terms:—"No right as executor or legatee can be established in any Court of Justice, unless a Court of competent jurisdiction (in British India) shall have granted Probate of the Will under which the right is claimed, or shall have granted Letters of Administration with the Will or with a copy of an authenticated copy of the Will annexed." What the defendant has done in this case is to contest the right of the plaintiff to a share in the intestate's property on the ground that the defendant has devised her property by a Will. The plaintiff can only succeed in case there is an intestacy, but the existence of a Will is an answer to the plaintiff's claim and, therefore, s. 187 is not a bar to the defendant putting forward the existence of a Will as an answer to the plaintiff's claim which is based upon its absence and I disallow this contention.

Both the plaintiff and his legal adviser have overlooked the fact that the husband can only claim half the deceased wife's property when she left no heir of her body. Section 43 is quite clear. No doubt in the absence of the next-of-kin, the husband would be entitled to the whole of it as her heir There is no evidence in this case that the testatrix did not leave any next-of-kin. Though this point was not raised, I am mentioning it for the purpose of drawing attention to the fact that under the Indian Succession Act the husband can only succeed to half of the wife's property in case his wife dies intestate leaving no lineal descendant.

In the result the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVI, r. 1—Application for summons made at late stage, refusal of—Duty of Court—Procedure.

The circumstance that an application for the issue of summonses on a party's witnesses is made at a late stage is no ground for refusing the application, though the Court may, when the case is heard, refuse to adjourn the hearing if the witnesses have not been served owing to the delay in making the application for summonses. Except in cases of manifest abuse of procedure, the Court has no discretion to refuse an application for summonses.

Kaji Ahmad v. Kaji Mahamad, 9 B. 308; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 205, and Abdool Kadir v. Shaikh Abin Mirdha, 24 W. R 290, relied on.

Rule against an order of the Court of the District Judge, Dacca.

Babus Suresh Chandra Talukdar and Kiran Mohan Sarkar, for the Petitioner.

Babu Bhupendra Chandra Guha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this Rule was the defendant in a suit for rent. After several adjournments the suit was fixed for hearing on the 29th June. On that date it was again adjourned on both parties' prayer to the 26th July, and an order was recorded, "issue process to the witnesses of defendant as prayed for." The record shows that this order was a mistake. The defendant never asked for process on his witnesses on that date. What he asked was for an adjournment in order to enable him to bring his witnesses who were ill. On the 8th July, however, the defendant did file a petition asking for issue of summons on his witnesses. That petition was rejected by the Munsif as untimely filed. On the 26th July the second prayer for issue of process by the defendant was again rejected, and on the defendant's Pleader stating that he had no other instruction the suit was heard and decreed ex parte. The appeal to the District Judge failed on the ground that the Munsif was specially empowered under s. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Judge, however, treated the appeal as an application for revision under that section and dismissed it.

We think that the Munsif acted without jurisdiction when on the 8th July 1921 he rejected the petitioner's application for summons on his witnesses. The provisions of the Code as to the issue of summons are to be found in O. XVI, C. P. C. Nowhere in that order is the Court given discretion to refuse an application which may be made by a party under r. 1 of that Order. It has been held that the circumstance that the application was made at a late stage is no ground for refusing it though the Court may, when the case is heard, refuse to adjourn the hearing. Kaji Ahmad v. Kaji Mahamad (1) and Abdool Kadir v. Shaikh Abin Mirdha (2). The question whether a Court should issue a summons or should adjourn are two entirely distinct matters. The Court has, except in cases of manifest abuse of procedure, no discretion to refuse an application for summons.

We hold, therefore, that this Rule must be made absolute, and as the order refusing summons was made without jurisdiction we must also set aside the order granting the ex parte decree. The Rule is accordingly made absolute and the ex parte decree set aside, and the suit will be re-heard according to law.

(1) 9 B. 308; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 205.
(2) 24 W. R. 290.

The petitioner will get his costs from the opposite party in this Rule. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Custom—Widow's estate—Succession, when opens—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint—Alternative case.

It cannot be laid down as a general proposition that the right of a widow of a life-estate without power of alienation must mean that the succession opened at the date of the husband's death and not at the date of the widow's death.

Where a plaintiff relies on a special custom, an amendment of the plaint setting up alternatively that he would be entitled to succeed even if the custom were not proved, should be allowed.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated 22nd September 1923.

Messrs. Niamat Ullah and Wasi Hasan, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff Mohammad Ghafoor Khan for possession of 1½ pies share in village Sundarwa The plaintiff claimed as a reversioner of one Ghulam Husain Khan. It was his case that the family was one of Mudarkya Chhatris, originally Hindu but converted long ago to Muhammadanism, and that succession in the family was governed by a custom which was neither a Hindu nor a Muhammadan custom. The custom set up in the plaint, paras. 4 and 6, was that on the death of a male the widow would succeed to a life-estate without any power of alienation and that on the widow's death the reversioners at the time of that widow's death would be entitled to succeed. The Subordinate Judge on the strength of a certain ruling of this Court, namely, Farzand Ali v. Karim Bakhsh (1), held that if the widow under the custom, as it described in the wajib-ul-arz relied upon, held a life-estate without power of alienation then it inevitably followed that upon the widow's death the estate would go not to the reversioners as they existed at the date of the widow's death but to the heirs of the husband (or their successors-in-interest) as they existed at the date of the husband's death. In appeal it is contended that the ruling referred to dealt with a wajib-ul-arz quite different in many respects from the wajib-ul-arz produced in this case, and that the ruling was no authority for the general proposition that the right of a widow of a life-estate without power of alienation must mean that the succession opened at the date of the husband's death and not at the date of the widow's death. Any such proposition does not seem tenable in view of the Privy Council ruling in the case of Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (2), in which it was held that, where a widow held an estate under s. 22, cl. (5), of the Oudh Estates Act succession did not open until her death (notwithstanding that under this provision of law the widow would not have any power of alienation).

We consider that the Subordinate Judge should have proceeded to take and consider all the evidence relevant to the existence and contents of the custom set up, and as he has decided the case upon the preliminary point that the custom set up could not exist we remand the case for disposal on its merits.

It has been urged also by the appellant's learned Counsel that the Subordinate Judge should have allowed his application for amendment of the plaint, a translation of which application is printed on page 129 of the record of proceedings, Part I of the Printed Book. This application asked in effect that the plaintiff should alternatively be allowed to set up the case that he was entitled to the property claimed even if the custom, as set up, were held not to exist, and it were held that succession opened at the date of the death of Ghulam Husain Khan and not at the date of the death of the widow, Musammat Armani Bibi. We are of the opinion that this application should have been granted or at any rate, as the case now stands, it should be granted.

(1) 61 Ind. Cas. 964; 8 O. L. J. 138.

(2) 71 Ind. Cas. 629; 26 O. C. 223; 9 O. L. J. 652; (1922) A. I. R. (P. C.) 403; 9 O & A. L. R. 270; 44 M. L. J. 489; 37 C. L. J. 346; 45 A. 179; 27 C. W. N. 949; 50 I. A. 69; 18 L. W. 383; 33 M. L. T. 216; 5 P. L. T. 281; 2 Pat. L. R. 237 (P. C.).

Accordingly we allow this appeal and send back the case with the above remarks for disposal by the lower Court. The costs of this appeal will abide the result of the case.

Hindu Law—Adoption of orphan, validity of—Agarwallas, views of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel—Religious status, whether can be established by estoppel—Privy Council appeal—Decree, whether can be objected to—Objection not taken in grounds of appeal.

Under the Hindu Law it is essential to the validity of an adoption that the adopted child should be "given" to the adopter by the father or, if he be dead, by the mother of the child. No other person has the right to give the child in adoption, nor can such right be delegated to anybody else. Therefore, a boy who has lost both his parents cannot be adopted. [p. 359, col. 1.]

Agarwallas generally adhere to Jainism and repudiate the Brahminical doctrines relating to obsequial ceremonies, the performance of shraddh and the offering of oblations for the salvation of the soul of the deceased, nor do they believe that a son, either by birth or by adoption, confers spiritual benefit on the father. An adoption among them is a mere temporal arrangement and has no particular spiritual object. Among them the qualifying age for adoption extends to the 32nd year; and the only ceremony consists in tying a turban round the head of the young man who is being adopted, in the presence of the principal men of the community and giving them a feast. [p. 361, col. 2; p. 362, col. 1.]

An Agarwalla Hindu purported to adopt an orphan and died shortly afterwards. His brother made representations to the effect that the adoption had taken place. Two years afterwards the brother also died. In a suit by the latter's daughter against the adopted son of her uncle to recover the property of her father, the defendant set up the plea that the plaintiff's father was estopped from challenging the defendant's adoption and that the plaintiff was consequently bound by the estoppel:

Held, that the representations of the plaintiff's father that the defendant had been adopted by his brother did not estop him or the plaintiff, who was his daughter, from challenging the validity of the adoption on the ground that the adoption being that of an orphan was invalid under the Hindu Law. [p. 358, col. 1.]

Quære:—Whether a status that rests on religious rules and religious sanctions and involves the performance of religious duties can be acquired by mere estoppel. [p. 361, col. 1.]

A litigant cannot be allowed to take exception to a decree before the Privy Council on a ground which he did not urge before the Court below and did not embody in his grounds of appeal. [p. 362, col. 2.]

Messrs. L. De Gruyther, K. C., and S. Hyam, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C., and B. Dube, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Mr. Ameer Ali.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff, Soni Bai, in the Court of the Additional District Judge of Amraoti, in East Berar, for a declaration that she was entitled by inheritance to the estate of her father, Ramdhan Marwari, who died at Amraoti on the 24th June, 1914. She was a minor at the time and brought the suit by her guardian, her father in-law, Narain Das, as next friend.

The facts of the litigation may be stated shortly for the purposes of this judgment. Ramdhan, the plaintiff's father, resided at a place called Khanapur, Taluk Morsi, in the District of Amraoti and carried on business there; whilst his brother one Joharmal, lived in the township of Chandur Bazar, in Taluk Ellichpur, where he had a shop. Both were Agarwallas by caste.

Joharmal died in September, 1912, and the defendant Dhanraj claims to have been adopted by him some years before his death. On the death of Ramdhan in 1914, Dhanraj took possession of his estate, claiming to be entitled to Ramdhan's property as the adopted son of his brother Joharmal. There appears to have been a proceeding under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. with regard to the possession of certain lands belonging to Ramdhan, and by an order of the District Magistrate made on the 17th September, 1914, the defendant was put in possession of that property also.

In order to establish his right to the succession to Ramdhan's estate, in opposition to the claim of Ramdhan's rightful heir, the defendant alleged that he had been adopted in accordance with the rules prescribed by the Hindu Law and that the essential rites were duly performed. He further alleged that Joharmal and Ramdhan were joint and undivided.

The plaintiff's case, on the other hand, is that in the year 1908, when the formal adoption of Dhanraj took place, he was an orphan and as such could not be validly adopted under the Hindu Law. She further controverted the defendant's allegation that Joharmal and Ramdhan were joint. She alleged that they were separate in estate and carried on separate businesses and that consequently Dhanraj, even if he had been validly adopted, which he was not, could not claim the estate of Ramdhan. As a contradiction to the allegation of the plaintiff that in 1908, both his parents being dead, he could not be validly adopted, the defendant averred that some years before, viz., in 1903, his mother, who was alive at the time, gave him in adoption to Joharmal, although the usual ceremonies and documents connected with the adoption were completed in 1908. He further contended that Ramdhan was estopped by his conduct from impugning the validity of the adoption and that, consequently, the plaintiff was affected by the same estoppel.

On these respective allegations of the parties a number of issues were framed by the Additional District Judge, three of which only need consideration, viz.:

(1) whether the defendant was validly adopted;

(2) whether Joharmal and Ramdhan were joint in estate; and

(3) whether the plaintiff is estopped from challenging the validity of the defendant's adoption.

It is contended on the plaintiff's behalf that, unless the defendant can establish that the "giving and taking" required by the Hindu Law took place in the lifetime of his mother in 1903, nothing which occurred in 1908 would constitute him a validly adopted son of Joharmal, or entitle him to the estate of Ramdhan even if Ramdhan and Joharmal were joint. A mass of evidence was adduced on both sides; the Additional District Judge was of opinion that the defendant had established the adoption, and accordingly dismissed the suit. On appeal, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, after a careful analysis of the evidence, came to a totally different conclusion. They have held that the defendant had failed to prove that there was "giving and taking" as required under the Hindu Law in 1903; nor were Ramdhan and the plaintiff "estopped" from impugning the validity of the defendant's adoption. In view of the minute examination of the facts by the learned Judicial Commissioners, their Lordships are relieved of the necessity of discussing them in detail; they, therefore, propose to confine their attention to the salient features of the case.

On the 25th May, 1908, two deeds were executed, one by Joharmal in favour of the defendant, whose parental name was Ghanasham, declaring that he was being adopted by Joharmal as a son and that thenceforth he would be called Dhanraj; the other was executed by the brothers of Dhanraj, the defendant, in favour of Joharmal, declaring that they had from that day forth given their younger brother Ghanasham to Joharmal in adoption. The deed of adoption executed by Joharmal is Ex. "D. 63", and the agreement by the two brothers of Dhanraj is Ex. "D. 62".

This document "D. 62" contains the passage, "Our mother gave him in adoption just in his childhood," on which the defendant's allegation of the "giving and taking" in 1903 mainly, if not entirely, rests. The plaintiff charges that this passage is an interpolation made after its execution for the purpose of corroborating the statements of witnesses as to the "giving and taking" in the lifetime of the mother. The reasoning of the Additional District Judge on this point appears to be open to criticism; he seems to think that as the evidence of the witnesses for the defendant was "consistent" and was corroborated by the passage in question in "D. 62," their statements being thus corroborated, he was of opinion that it could not be an interpolation. Relying practically on the statement in question contained in "D. 62," in conjunction with the oral testimony, he came to the conclusion, as already stated, that the defendant had been validly adopted by Joharmal, and that, as Joharmal and Ramdhan were joint in estate, Dhanraj was entitled to the latter's estate.

The Judicial Commissioners consider the passage on which the Additional District Judge rested his decision, as corroborating the story of the defendant's witnesses, was an interpolation.

They also held against the defendant on the plea of estoppel. In view of their decision on the question of fact relating to the adoption they did not consider it necessary to determine whether Joharmal and Ramdhan were separate or joint.

In the appeal to His Majesty in Council, exception is taken to the conclusions of the Judicial Commissioners on both points. Firstly, it is urged that the factum of a valid adoption in accordance with the rules of Hindu Law is conclusively established on the evidence; and, secondly, that Ramdhan was estopped by his conduct and representations from questioning the validity of the adoption, which equally affect the plaintiff.

Admittedly, under the Hindu Law, it is essential to the validity of an adoption that the child should be "given" to the adopter by the father or, if he be dead, by the mother. No other person has the rights, nor can such right be delegated to anybody else (Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 132). Consequently, a boy who has lost both his parents cannot be adopted.

In 1908 both the parents of the defendant were dead. In order to establish his adoption as valid under the Hindu Law, he has put forward two allegations: viz., that his mother before her death went actually through the formal ceremony of "giving," and that before she died she delegated the authority "to give" to his two elder brothers. If she had already given him in adoption, the subsequent delegation of authority would seem to be superfluous. Any such delegation would, however, be invalid. The defendant, therefore, had to establish that in 1903, when his mother was alive, she gave him in adoption to Joharmal, and that consequently he is vested with all the rights that appertain to an adopted son under the Hindu system.

The language of the deed of adoption, to which reference has already been made, requires careful attention. After reciting that he has no male issue and old age has approached, he goes on to say:—

I have this day taken you in adoption before the panchas and with the consent of your brothers. You are my kinsman and your father was my gotraj bandhu. Consequently, for religious purposes and with a view to perpetuate my lineage, I have taken you in adoption, performing the adoption ceremony, presenting you with the turban and giving a feast to all the panchas. Therefore, you have become the owner of my moveable and immoveable property from this day. You have acquired the same rights as my born son has from this day. None else than you is my heir. You have become the owner of my shop. From this day you will be named Dhanraj son of Joharmal Gargoti. May you live long! This is my sincere blessing. I have executed this deed of adoption with my free will and pleasure. It is binding against my estate and heirs. Dated the 25th May, 1908. By the pen of Bhagwant Balaji of Chandur Bazar.

It will be noticed that in this document there is no reference to the essential ceremony of "giving and taking" which, if performed, would naturally occupy the forefront of the deed. It expressly states in so many words that he (Joharmal) had taken the defendant in adoption "this day" (25th May, 1908) "before the panchas" (the principal members of the caste). No Brahmin or Jati (priest) is mentioned and the ceremony performed to effectuate the adoption, "presenting him with a turban and giving a feast to the panchas," has no connection with religious rites. The last part of the document is precise in its language and in effect :—

"You have acquired the same right as my born son from this day.....From this day you will be named Dhanraj."

The agreement executed by Kaluram and the other brother of the defendant is as follows :—

"We both and Ghanasham are three real brothers. You and we are kinsmen of the same caste. You having no male issue, we have with a view to perpetuate your line, given you in adoption our younger brother Ghanasham, 13 years of age, with our free will and pleasure this day, and having his adoption ceremony performed with our free will and consent have presented him with a turban, Ghanasham being regarded as your son has acquired the same rights as your born son would have had. He has become the owner of your moveable and immoveable property from this day. We both have ceased to have any interest whatsoever in that boy. And that boy has ceased to have any ownership to our property henceforward. The boy in question is given in adoption in the presence of you and us and the village panchas. Our mother gave (him) in adoption just in his childhood. From this day the boy in question is named Dhanraj, son of Joharmal, and will be so called in future also. May this family thrive.

"Our right of brotherhood to the said boy has been given up from this day. We have ceased to have any ownership whatsoever henceforward. If we set forth any right it will be null and void by virtue of this document. We have executed this agreement with our free will and consent. It is binding against our estate and heirs. Dated 25th May 1908. By the pen of Bhagwant Balaji of Chandur."

It will be noticed that it declares :—

"Ghanasham, being regarded as your son, has acquired the same rights as your born son would have had. He has become the owner of your moveable and immoveable property from this day. That boy has ceased to have any ownership in our property hence forward. The boy in question is given in adoption in the presence of you and us and the village panchas".

After the passage charged by the plaintiff as having been interpolated, comes the following :—

"From this day the boy in question is named Dhanraj, son of Joharmal, and will be so called in future also."

Then comes the following passage ;—

"Our right of brotherhood has been given up from this day. We have ceased to have any ownership whatsoever henceforward."

The reference in D. 62 to the giving of the boy by the mother, considering the importance of the ceremony under Hindu Law, strikes one as cursory and creates the impression that the casualness of the reference was due to its compression owing to the exigencies of space. It is in these words : "Our mother gave him in adoption just in his childhood." This solitary reference to a vitally important ceremony has been held by the Judicial Commissioners to be an interpolation. They point out that it was perfectly possible to insert this sentence immediately after the previous words. However that be, there is great force in their observation that the words alleged to be interpolated are quite inconsistent with the main purpose of, and the statement in, the documents "D. 63" and "D. 62". These two deeds in their Lordships' opinion, instead of supporting the evidence on behalf of the defendant, appear to contradict the allegation of a ceremony, and a real effective ceremony, in 1903.

Bhagwant, the writer of the two deeds, was cross-examined respecting the reason why he had omitted in "D. 63" all reference to the ceremony by the mother. His answer, in their Lordships' opinion, is most unsatisfactory. He said as follows :—

"There were two drafts. It did not strike me then that there was any difference between the actual facts and the recitals of the drafts. The recitals in the deeds were not inaccurate at the time of writing. (The recital about the name of Dhanraj starting that day is read out.) Strictly speaking there is a mistake. It is customary to write in this way that the name is changed from the date of writing, and so I did not object to it. I do not remember which of the two documents was written first. Though I knew that the boy had been actually adopted I did not insert that as it was not in the draft. I have been writing documents for the last 35 to 36 years."

Bhagwant professes to have been present at the ceremony said to have been performed in 1903. But neither Kaluram nor Chaturbai, the widow of Joharmal, who is supporting the defendant, mentions him. He is a professional "petition writer" and he gives no reason why, if he was present, no document was executed on that occasion. Another statement of his, to say the least, is extraordinary. He said, evidently in answer to a question why the ceremony of adoption was not completed in 1903 :—

"The boy was given in adoption on Dashera day in Sambat 1960, but no writing was made that day. His mother and his brothers had come there. His mother gave the boy in adoption to Joharmal. No document was written then as they wanted to wait for an auspicious year. Jowarmal executed Ex. D. 63 in my presence. Kaluram and Jowarmal (his brother) executed Ex. D. 62 in my presence."

According to him the auspicious year did not occur until 1908.

The boy's family lived at the village of Thugaon. The school register produced by the schoolmaster of that place shows that between 1903 and 1907 long after the alleged "giving and taking" he lived in his parental home in Thugaon. As the Appellate Court points out, this circumstance is wholly inconsistent with his having been adopted in 1903, when it is said he was actually made over to Joharmal. Had he been then given in adoption, he would have resided with his adopting parents, his name would have been changed, and he would have taken up his position as the adopted son of Joharmal. In the school register he is entered in his original name of Ghanasham. The question, why was he entered as Ghanasham if he had been adopted in 1903, is answered by the deeds executed on the 25th May, 1908.

The statement of Chaturbai, the widow of Joharmal, contradicts in material particulars those of Kaluram, the brother of Dhanraj. In their Lordships' opinion the oral evidence regarding an adoption in 1903 is wholly unworthy of credit.

Their Lordships agree with the Judicial Commissioners in holding that the defendant has failed to establish his allegation of the adoption in 1903.

But it has been strongly contended that Ramdhan and his heir are estopped by the provisions of s. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) from questioning the adoption.

That section runs as follows:—

"When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing."

What are the "declarations, acts or omissions" of Ramdhan which are said to constitute the estoppel? It is not necessary to decide in this case whether a status that rests on religious rules and religious sanctions and involves the performance of religious duties can be established by mere estoppel. Assuming, however, that such a status can be established by applying the doctrine of equitable estoppel embodied in s. 115, so as to affect the rights of persons other than the adopter, it is necessary to consider in the first place what actually happened in 1908, and what were the acts and representations of Ramdhan which created the estoppel. He is said to have brought the boy to Chandur Bazar from his native village to have become a witness to the deed of adoption; allowed him to perform the cremation ceremony of Joharmal; and at the time of his marriage represented him to be the adopted son of Joharmal.

The parties to this litigation belong to the caste or sect of Agarwallas. These Agarwallas, as has been pointed out in the case of Bhagwan Das Tejmal v. Rajmal (1), generally adhere to Jainism and repudiate the Brahminical doctrines relating to obsequial ceremonies, the performance of shraddh, the offering of oblations for the salvation of the soul of the deceased, nor do they believe that a son, either by birth or by adoption, confers spiritual benefit on the father.

The Agarwallas are said to be divided into a number of sub-castes or sects. In the case of Sheo Singh Rai v. Dakho (2) in the High Court of Allahabad, which afterwards came before the Judicial Committee, and the judgment of the learned Judges was affirmed by this Board, the parties belonged to the Saraogi sub-caste. In the present case it is not clear to what sub-sect Joharmal adhered, but the evidence shows that the defendant belongs to the Sekhavati sect. The majority of the defendant's witnesses appear to be Moheshris. Whatever difference there might be between these sub-sects in the ritual of worship, there does not appear to be any in the rules relating to adoption recognised by the caste as a whole. The learned Judges, who decided in the High Court of Allahabad the case of Musammat Dakho (2) state the difference between the Brahminical Hindus and the Jains in the following words:—

"They differ particularly from the Brahminical Hindus in their conduct towards the dead, omitting all obsequies after the corpse is burnt or buried. They also regard the birth of a son as having no effect on the future state of his progenitor, and consequently adoption is a merely temporal arrangement, and has no spiritual object."

Among the Agarwallas the qualifying age for adoption extends to the 32nd year; and the only ceremony consists in tying a turban round the head of the young man who is being adopted, in the presence of the principal men of the community (the panchas) and giving them a feast. According to the document D. 63, as well as the agreement D. 62, this was the only ceremony performed in 1908, and it is exactly the ceremony referred to in Musammat Dakho's case (2).

Their Lordships have no doubt on the evidence that the story about a regular Hindu or rather Brahminical adoption in 1903 was invented with the object of giving to an ordinary Agarwalla adoption, the rights of collateral succession, and with the same object the statement had been put forward that the defendant had been adopted by both brothers, Joharmal and Ramdhan, which is held to be illegal under the Hindu Law.

If the Brahminical fringe is taken off, the whole of the evidence in the present case points to a secular adoption in 1908, and so far as the representation and acts of Ramdhan are concerned, they only relate to that adoption.

This Board in the case of Gopee Lall v. Sree Chundraolee Buhoojee (3), on the question of estoppel, urged in similar circumstances, said as follows:

"It has been argued on the part of the appellant that the defendants in this case are estopped from setting up the true facts of the case, or even asserting the law in their favour, inasmuch they have represented in former suits and in various ways, by letters and by their actions, that Luchmunjee was the adopted son of Damodurjee adopted by Damodurjee's widow, his mother. But it appears to their Lordships that there is no estoppel in the case. There has been no misrepresentation on the part of Luchmunjee or the defendant on any matter of fact. They are alleged to have represented that Luchmunjee was adopted. The plaintiff's case is that Luchmunjee was in fact adopted. So far as the fact is concerned, there is no misrepresentation. It comes to no more than this that they have arrived at a conclusion that the adoption which is admitted in fact was valid in law, a conclusion which in their Lordships' judgment is erroneous; but that creates no estoppel whatever between the parties."

(3) 19 W. R. 12; 11 B. L. R. 391 I. A. Sup. Vol. 131; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 217 (P. C.).

A number of rulings of this Board and a decision of the Madras High Court have been referred to in support of the contention that the plaintiff is estopped. Closely examined, it will be seen that those cases relate to adoptions acquiesced in and recognised for a number of years by the person making the adoption, and the Courts considered in substance that a long course of recognition and acquiescence on the part of the person, who was best acquainted with the circumstances, gave rise to the inference that the conditions relating to the adoption were duly fulfilled. In Dharm Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (4) the estoppel was considered purely personal.

Their Lordships are in entire agreement with the ruling of the Board in Gopee Lal's case (3) and think that there is no substance whatever in the plea of estoppel raised by the defendant. On the whole they are of opinion that the judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner is sound and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs

The appellant has, however, taken some exception to the decree made by the Appellate Court. No such objections were either embodied in the grounds of appeal or brought to the notice of the learned Judges. It was only shortly before the hearing of the appeal here that notice was given to the respondent to the effect that objections would be urged against the decree on the hearing. Their Lordships think that to allow a litigant to bring forward at this stage exceptions to a decree, which have never been urged before, is open to very grave objection. The course adopted in the present case was reprehended by the Board in the case of Musammat Dakho (2) already referred to, and their Lordships propose to adhere to the principle laid down there. It seems, however, necessary that the decree as framed should be put into a more practical shape in order to avoid difficulties in the Execution Court.

The plaintiff attached six schedules to her plaint. Schedule "A" sets out the amount standing to the credit of the plaintiff's mother in the books of Ramdhan including her ornaments. Schedule "B" refers to immoveable property consisting of fields, etc. Schedule "C" includes money lent on mortgages, etc.

Schedule "D" relates to outstandings on current accounts decrees, etc. Schedule "E" gives the amounts due by the plaintiff to certain specified people, and schedule "F" relates to moveable property alleged by the plaintiff to have been taken by the defendant.

The appellant in his reply denied that he took forcible or unlawful possession of the property in dispute. He did not deny the fact that he did take possession of the property. In para. 6 of his reply he denied that the property mentioned in schedule "A" was the property of the plaintiff's mother. In para. 7 he stated that he had not removed any ornaments and cash from the safe of Ramdhan. In para. 8 he stated that the ornaments pledged by Ramdhan to Kaluram belonged to the joint estate of the defendant and Ramdhan and that he was entitled to them; in para. 11 he says that the property mentioned in schedules "B," "C," "D," "E," and "F" does not belong to the plaintiff but to the defendant. Practically he admits having taken possession of all the property which the plaintiff claimed to belong to the estate of Ramdhan. In these circumstances their Lordships think that the decree should run in the following terms: —

(1) that it should be declared that the plaintiff is entitled by right of succession to the estate of her father Ramdhan;

(2) that there should be a decree for possession of the immoveable properties claimed by the plaintiff;

(3) that there should be a decree for the delivery of the ornaments and other moveable property taken possession of by the defendant;

(4) that the defendant should deliver to the plaintiff all documents of title, securities for loans such as mortgages, decrees, etc., which came into his hands as appertaining to Ramdhan's estate;

(5) that if necessary there should be an enquiry as to what was the stridhan property of the plaintiff's mother; an account of what is due to Kaluram on the ornaments pledged to him, and

(6) an account of the debts of, and outstandings belonging to, Ramdhan's estate realised by the defendant with liberty to the parties to apply to the Court for directions.

In case any of the debts have been barred by the wilful neglect or default of the defendant, he would necessarily be liable for those debts. For the purpose of taking these accounts and giving effect to the decree generally a Receiver should be appointed.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs, and that the amendments they have indicated should be embodied in the decree.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION Nos. 169 AND 254 OF 1924.

September 26, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ramesam.

S. K. DEVASIGAMONY—PETITIONER IN C. R. P. No. 169 OF 1924 AND RESPONDENT IN C. R. P. No. 254 OF 1924

M. R. SETHURATNA IYER AND ANOTHER —RESPONDENTS IN C. R. P. No. 169 OF 1924 AND PETITIONERS IN C. R. P. No. 254 OF 1924.

Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920), ss. 8, 15, 56 cl. (4), 57—Taluk Board President—Absence for three months from meetings, effect of—Presidentship, whether vacated—Restoration to membership, whether operates as restoration to Presidentship—Effect on ex-officio *membership of District Board—Membership—*De facto member—Collateral attack in election petition——Election Rules—Invalid nomination—Fresh election.

Under the Madras Local Boards Act of 1920, a President of a Taluk Board who absents himself for 3 successive months from the meetings of the Taluk Board, not only ceases to be a member of the Taluk Board but vacates his office as President of the Board under s. 15 (1) of the Act. A restoration of him to his office as member of the Board under s. 56, cl. 4 of the Act does not operate to restore him to the office of President as well. [p. 364, cols. 1 & 2]

Symmers v. Regem, (1776) 2 Cowp. 489; 98 E. R. 1203, distinguished.

A President of a Taluk Board who is an ex officio member of a District Board under s. 8 of the Madras Local Boards Act and who subsequently ceases to be President of the Taluk Board also ceases to be a member of the District Board, and is not entitled to take part in the election of its Vice-President. [p. 366, col. 1.]

The Madras Local Boards Act does not recognise any de facto member as distinguished from a de jure member. When the Act speaks of a member, President or Vice-President, it refers to a member, President or Vice-President validly elected or appointed according to the provisions of the Act. [p. 365, col. 1.]

The effect of s. 57 of the Madras Local Boards Act and the rules framed under the Act is that, in the case of elected members, the validity of the election can be questioned by (1) an election petition under the rules or (2) by a petition under s. 57. In the latter case the petitioner is confined to certain grounds. The election cannot be questioned in any other way. In the case of a nominated member, the validity of his membership can be questioned by a petition under s. 57 on the grounds alleged in it. But there is nothing in the Act to prevent the fact of membership of a person claiming to be an ex officio member from being questioned collaterally in another election petition. [p. 367, col. 1.]

Where on an election petition, the nomination of one of the candidates is found to be invalid under r. 12 of the Election Rules under the Madras Local Boards Act, the Judge has a complete discretion to declare the only other candidate elected or to order a fresh election. [p. 368, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts are simple and are not in dispute. The office of the Vice-President, District Board, Trichinopoly, fell vacant and there was a fresh election on 6th October 1923. The 2nd respondent was proposed by Dewan Bahadur Pethachi Chettiar who also voted for the candidate proposed by him. An objection was taken that the proposer was not legally a member of the District Board, but was overruled. The 2nd respondent obtained 22 votes while the 1st respondent, the rival candidate, got 21 votes. The ground on which the membership of Mr. Pethachi Chettiar is questioned may be stated thus:—Originally he was President of the Taluk Board of Karur, and as such ex-officio member of the District Board (s. 8 of the Act). He absented himself for three successive months (June, July and August) from the meetings of the Karur Taluk Board and under s. 56 (1) (h) he ceased to hold his office. When he ceased to be a member of the Taluk Board, he vacated also his office as President of the Taluk Board under s. 15 (1). Under s. 56 (4) the Taluk Board of Karur on 8th September 1923, restored him to his office as member of the Taluk Board, but thereby he was not restored to the Presidentship of the Taluk Board of Karur. He could become President of the Taluk Board of Karur only by a fresh election (s. 17). There was no such election. If he was not President of the Taluk Board of Karur, he was not ex-officio member of the District Board. The argument was accepted by the Sub-Judge of Trichinopoly in O. P. No. 9 of 1923, and both sides have filed revision petitions.

Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar who appeared for the petitioner in C. R. P. No. 169 of 1924 urged three contentions:—

(1) The first point urged by Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar is that Mr. Pethachi Chettiar was restored to his office and the effect of this restoration by the meeting of the 8th September was as if he never lost it. He relies on Symmers v. Regem (1). (See also Grant on Corporations 248). In that case the defendant's election depended on whether the votes of ten of the voters should be received. These ten voters were burgesses and for ten years acted as burgesses. There was an order of disfranchisement against them by the Common Council which proceeded on the footing that they were burgesses. But the order of disfranchisement was set aside and they were restored in pursuance of peremptory writs of mandamus. On these facts Lord Mansfield said: "But on looking into it, this is no disfranchisement, nor is there a pretence for calling it so; but it is doing that which the Common Council had not the semblance of a right to do; taking upon themselves to judge of the validity of an election ten years before, and to declare it null and void for want of a qualification at that time .....But the fact is, it is no disfranchisement at all.....But upon consideration, I think, that let the restoration come when it will, it relates to original right. It would be so in the case of a probable ground of disfranchisement. But here, there is not a probable ground: there is no colour for a removal; the act of Common Council was a mere nullity, and the restoration makes them in from the beginning." In that case, it is clear from the above extracts that the act by which the ten burgesses were said to have been disfranchised was an act of the Common Council which was a nullity. It was set aside. In such a case it was rightly held that the restoration makes them in from the beginning. It is obvious that such a case can have no application to the facts before me. If, in any case of restoration, under s. 56 (4), the effect is the same as if there was no cessation and the restoration relates to the original right and restores the holder as from the beginning the words "cease to hold his office" in s. 56 become nugatory. If the object of the Legislature is to wipe out the intermediate cessation altogether, on condonation by the Board, the scheme would have been entirely different. The act would then, instead of providing for cessation of the office on the expiry of three months, would have provided for the fact being reported as in cl. (4) and then, if it is not condoned, for the cessation of the office. The scheme of the Act, as it is, provides for the cessation as the result of failure to attend. The cessation is the result of the Statute. There is no question of its being void or of its being set aside. It cannot be set aside. The Board can restore him only from the date of the order excusing his absence. An example of the opposite scheme is afforded by s. 52 of the Municipal Corporation Act (5 and 6 William IV, Ch. 76). [See Hardwick v. Brown (2)] by s. 36, sub-s. 2, of the Municipal Corporation Act, 1882 (until the Council declares the office vacant), there is no vacancy, see Peace v. Lowden (3) and Reg. v. Welchpool Corporation (4) and by s. 46, sub-ss. (6) and (7) of the Local Government Act, 1894 (Vide Lumley on Public Health, Vol. I, page 1031). There was, therefore, a vacancy in the office of the membership between 1st and 9th September. Mr. Pethachi Chettiar ceased also to be President of the Taluk Board on 1st September and was never re-elected President.

(1) (1776) 2 Cowp. 489; 98 E. R. 1203.

Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar's second contention under s. 35 of the Act is that the proposal and the voting of Mr. Pethachi Chettiar should be deemed to be valid. In the first place there is nothing in the section or any part of the Act about de facto or de jure members. When the Act speaks of a member, President or Vice-President, it refers to a member, President or Vice-President validly elected or appointed according to the provisions of the Act (ss. 7 to 19, 54 to 56). It will lead to absurd and anomalous results if it is held that, if a person who was not a member, President or Vice-President acts as a member, President or Vice-President, the acts are valid, nor does the section say so. All that the section says is that the acts of a person who is a member, President or Vice-President, shall not be questioned on certain grounds. One of the grounds is not that the person voting is not a member, President or Vice-President. In the present case, the membership of Mr. Pethachi is not questioned on the ground of any defect in the establishment of the Local Board or on the ground that he was disqualified for membership. As a matter of fact, Mr. Pethachi Chettiar was not under any disqualification (ss. 53, 55 and 56). He was perfectly qualified for the office of membership of the District Board. His acts are questioned on the ground that he was not a member of the District Board. The last cl. of s. 35 has nothing to do with the matter. That provides for the validity of the acts of Local Boards, Committees, Presidents or Vice-Presidents or Members in cases when the Board is incomplete, i. e., when the Presidentship or Vice-Presidentship or a membership has fallen vacant and has not been filled up. For example, when a Board has no President, the acts of the Board, of the Vice-President or of the members are valid. Similarly, when there is no Vice-President, the acts of the Board, President or of the members are valid; also when one or more memberships are vacant the acts of the Board, the President, the Vice-President and other members are all valid. The section does not lend colour to such paradoxical propositions, as the act of the President, when there is no President, is valid or the act of a Vice-President, when there is no Vice-President, is valid; or the act of a member when he is not a member, is valid. Of course, the act of a member, when there is a vacancy in some memberships, is perfectly valid.

The present case affords an example of the application of the last clause of s. 35. On 8th September 1923, there was a meeting of the Taluk Board of Karur. It had then no President, Mr. Pethachi Chettiar, having by his absence for three months, ceased to be a member [s. 56 (1) (h) and ceased to be the President (s. 15 (1)]. The Board (which had no President) met. The Vice-President reported the fact that Mr. Pethachi Chettiar vacated his office as member and President. The Board restored him to his membership, (4) (1877) 35 L. T. 594.

Section 35 provides that this act of the Board was not invalid merely because the Board has no President.

I am, therefore, of opinion that s. 35 does not help the petitioner.

Section 42 of the Municipal Corporation Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vic. Ch. 50) resembles s. 35 and with reference to it, a similar view has been taken by Mathew and Cave, JJ., in Nell v. Longbottom (5) and in Bland v. Buchanan (6). They are cases of disqualified voters. In the present case, the voter was not a member of the Board and in my opinion this is a stronger case.

The last point urged by Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar is that the validity of the membership of Mr. Pethachi Chettiar cannot be questioned collaterally in another election petition. He first argues that proceedings ought to have been taken against Mr. Pethachi Chettiar himself under s. 57 (1) but that section cannot apply to ex officio members of the Board. It applies only to elected or appointed members. Section 8 of the Act shows that ex officio members as a class are different from elected or nominated members. Section 9 (3) provides that, for the pruposes of sub-s. (2), ex officio members who do not hold a salaried office under Government shall be deemed to be elected members and shows that ex officio members holding such office cannot be deemed to be elected members even for the purpose of calculation of proportion and must form a distinct class. For purposes other than sub-s. (2), ex officio members are a distant class.

Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar relies on Symmers v. Regem (1), for the point also. (See also 8 Halsbury's Laws of England, para. 355 at page 799). Lord Mansfield says "it is true, that, in general, the person elected must take upon himself to support the right and title of his electors : it is so in a variety of cases. In the election of Aldermen of the City of London, Coroners, Members of Parliament, etc. all these are bound to support the right of their electors". This is against the petitioner. Lord Mansfield then says: "But, for the sake of justice and convenience, a distinction has been made in cases where the right of election depends upon corporate franchises. There are qualifications to the exception, such as have been stated by Mr. Buller. The general question has never been fully settled, though it has been touched upon in many cases". All this is scarcely authority for the petitioner. His further remarks at page 1210* and again at page 1212* as to freemen in their corporate description have no application here. Again at page 1212* he says "in cases of elections in the City of London, certain qualifications are required at the poll: therefore, it must be seen that in some degree the candidates have that qualification," and at page 1213* he says: "Suppose a corporate body consisting of twenty-four were to add ten to their number. That would be an absolute nullity; because they never were corporators de facto. But the present question is, whether in a quo warranto against particular members, you can go into the title of other corporators de facto, etc."

The case before me is not one of quo warranto proceedings. In Nell v. Longbottom (5) and Bland v. Buchanan (6), already cited by me, the Judges were of opinion that the validity of a vote in an election petition may be questioned. It is true that Channel, J., in the later case considered the reasoning in the former inconclusive but apart from the reasoning he was of opinion that it was right. In those cases, it was not considered that the proceeding quo warranto were the only remedy. One of the objects of an election petition is to see if there is an improper reception or refusal of a vote. (See r. 11, cl. (c) of the Rules for conduct of inquiries G. O. No. 650). I do not see how this object is to be achieved if the validity of the vote of the right of the voter to vote is not to be examined. In my opinion, the rule makes it clear that the position of the voters can be and ought to be scrutinised. It is suggested that the Full Bench decision in Kokku Parthasarathy Naidu v. Chintalchervu Koteswara Rao (7), decides the point in favour of the petitioner; in my opinion it does not. All that was held in that case was that, where an election petition was filed and the validity of the vote of one of the members was questioned under s. 57 on grounds other than those mentioned in s. 57, the District Judge had no jurisdiction to enquire into the petition, the grounds mentioned in s. 57 not being even alleged. I stated so expressly at page 380*. Waller J. said at page 381* "He cannot disqualify them save on grounds that are not applicable here." Schwabe, C. J. said "what he has jurisdiction to decide is whether a person so appointed is disqualified under s. 55 or 56 and nothing else." The rest of the sentence of Schwabe, C. J. ought to be considered in the light of the above observations. I do not think that case lays down that the validity of a vote cannot be questioned. In that case the person whose appointment as a member was in question was also the person elected as President. Rule 1 of the rules provides that except by s. 57, no election can be questioned except by an election. In the present case it is not the election of Mr. Pethachi Chettiar that is being questioned, but the fact of his membership. The effect of s. 57 and the rules is that, in the case of elected members, the validity of the election can be questioned by (1) an election petition under the rules or (2) by a petition under s. 57. In the latter case the petitioner is confined to certain grounds. The election cannot be questioned in any other way. In the case of a nominated member, the validity of his membership can be questioned by a petition under s. 57 only on the grounds alleged in it. But there is nothing in the Act to prevent the fact of the membership of a person claiming to be an ex officio member from being questioned. In Forrester v. Norton (8), the election of a person as Alderman and Mayor of the Borough was questioned on the ground that he was not validly re-elected a Councillor. The question whether the election as Councillor was valid was fully considered. It was found that, though he was disqualified, his election not being questioned within one year, the election became valid under s. 73 (No such provision like s. 73 exists in our Act curing the effect of a disqualification by lapse of time). The question whether the election could be valid if one year did not elapse was expressly raised by Channel, J. This case is against the petitioner's contention.. Channel, J., takes care to say: "I must not, however, be understood to say that all de facto Councillors are Councillors within that section". In R. v. Mayor and Common Council of Bedford (9), where the Council of a Corporation was to elect 13 Common Council men out of 25 burgesses and the 13 should elect the Mayor by a majority, the election of Mayor was held to be void on the ground that one of the 13 Council men was only a freeman and not a burgess and was not validly elected as a Council man. It is true that, in R v. Mein (10) it was held that the rule that the title of the electors is not to be brought in question by attacking the title of the person elected by them does not apply when there is no method of prosecution by which the title of the electors may be questioned in the first instance. I already held that s. 57 does not apply to ex officio members. Whether proceedings 'quo warranto' lie or not is not clear and the possibility of it ought not to stand in the way of the membership being questioned having regard to all the other cases. Neither in this nor in Nell v. Longbottam (5), Bland v. Buchanan (6), was any reference made to the possibility of quo warranto proceedings or such possibility being an obstruction to the validity of the vote being considered. The authorities cited by either side on the question whether a Mandamus or a quo warranto proceedings viz., (10 Halsbury 81) R. v. Corporation of Bedford (11), R. v. Mayor of Chester (12) are not relevant. I, therefore, decide that the validity of the vote of Mr. Pethachi Chettiar can be and ought to be decided in this election petition. See also Rogers on Election, page 128. The result is Civil Revision Petition No. 169 of 1924 is dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee the minimum for a civil revision petition.

Civil Revision Petition No. 254 is by the respondents in Civil Revision Petition No. 169 of 1924. The point raised by them is that there ought not to be a fresh election but that 1st respondent ought to have been declared elected. Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer relies on Brown v. Benn (13) and Monks v. Jackson (14) and R. v. Hawkins (15) and Rodgers on Elections, pages 127 and 128. These authorities support him. are concerned not with English practice, but with our own rules. Under r. 12, the Sub-Judge has a complete discretion either to declare the only other candidate elected or to order a fresh election. Seeing that the petitioner in Civil Revision Petition No. 169 was himself qualified to be a Vice-President and he loses his election on the ground of a defect in the proposer's qualification, I think the Subordinate Judge exercises his discretion rightly. Nor will I interfere with his order as to costs. The result is Civil Revision Petition No. 254 is also dismissed with costs. Pleaders' fee minimum in a Civil Revision Petition.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 539 OF 1923.

March 3, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sulaiman and Mr. Justice Mukerji.

SRI LAL GOAIKA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

KESHO DAS AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Benares District—Haq chaharum, right to recover—Judgment in which right admitted, value of—Halat dehi, entry in, value of—Appeal, second—Parjaut land—Finding of fact—Jamabandi, entry in, value of.

Where the question is whether the land in dispute is or is not parjaut land, an entry in a jamabandi showing that the land is parjaut land is admissible in evidence and is of great value. [p. 368, col. 2.]

A finding that certain land is parjaut land is a finding of fact and is binding on the High Court in second appeal. [ibid.]

The District of Benares is a permanently settled District and there was no Regular Settlement in that District in 1883, but there was a revision of Settlement in that year and in substitution for a proper wajib-ul-arz a document called the halat dehi was prepared. In addition to the record of other matters it contains a memorandum of existing customs as ascertained by Settlement Officials during the course of the Settlement operations. An entry in such a record that haq chaharum was realised by the proprietor of a mahal on sale of houses is of considerable importance in proving the existence of the custom. [p. 369, cols. 1 & 2.]

The mere fact that in a suit to recover haq chaharum the vendor confessed judgment and the vendee allowed the case to be decreed without contest does not establish that the judgment is of no weight as an instance in which the right to recover haq chaharum was held to exist. If the existence of the custom is well-known the vendor and the vendee may very well not think it worth their while to contest the case. [p. 369, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 12th January 1923.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and Gadadhar Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. K. Mukerji and Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of a sum of money claimed as haq chaharam payable on the sale of a house situated in Patti Kasho Das mahal Pirthipal Singh in the village Kashipur within the Municipal limits of the City of Benares. The plaintiff alleged that there was a custom in existence under which all houses situated on perjaut lands were liable to the payment of such dues. The defendant-vendee denied the existence of any such custom and also denied that the land on which the house was situated was parjaut land.

The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the site was not parjaut land at all and that no parjaut had ever been paid in respect of it. It also came to the conclusion that the evidence produced by this plaintiff was totally insufficient to prove the existence of any such custom in this particular mahal.

On appeal the learned District Judge has reversed both the findings of the Court of first instance and come to the conclusion that the site is perjaut land and that the custom of haq chaharam is established. In the course of his finding on the question of custom he has also noted that the respondent's-defendant's Pleaders have in argument conceded that point and admitted that the finding of the lower Court against the existence of the custom is wrong.

As regards the question whether the land is or is not parjaut land we are of opinion that the finding of the learned District Judge is a finding of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal. The learned Judge had before him the jamabandi of the year 1883 in which this was clearly recorded as parjaut land on which Rs. 1-8 parjaut was payable. There was a further fact that in the sale-deed executed by the defendant-vendor in his favour there was a clear recital that it was parjaut land liable to the payment of Rs. 1-8. There also appears to have been some oral evidence, e. g., that of the patwari. It is true that the learned District Judge when referring to the jamabandi has said that the Court of first instance's view that it was not properly "attested" was not intelligible. Apparently the two Courts have taken the word to mean two different things. What the Court of first instance had meant was that the document had not been witnessed by the tenants and raiyats, whereas the learned Judge thought that it had been duly prepared by the Settlement Officer. In any case an entry in the jambandi was admissible and was certainly of great value. The learned Judge had before him evidence on which he could come to a finding as to whether the land was parjaut land or not. His finding is a finding of fact and is binding on us.

On the question of custom although there is a finding that its existence is established, and although there is a remark that the learned Pleaders for the defendant conceded in argument the point that the finding of the lower Court was wrong, we have allowed the learned Advocate for the appellant to show us that the evidence as regards the existence of the alleged custom was really legally insufficient. The plaintiff produced several pieces of evidence in support of the alleged custom. In this first place we have the halat dehi which was prepared in the year 1883 in which there is a clear recital that zemindars of the mahal get a quarter share in the price on sales of miscellaneous trees standing on land without rent, groves and houses. It has been strongly urged that the halat dehi is of no value at all because it is not the wajib-ul-arz and, therefore, it cannot justify any presumption that it contains a record of a custom. We may note that the District of Benares is a permanently Settled District and that there was no Regular Settlement in 1883, but there was a revision of settlement in that year and in substitution for a proper wajib-ul-arz the halat dehi was prepared. The Settlement Officer in his report on the Survey and Revision of Records of the Benares District (1887) at page 13 has remarked that the halat dehi was prepared by way of a substitute for the old wajib-ul-arz as recommended by the Committee in 1883. The paper contains mention of the methods by which instalments of Government Revenue are paid, rents collected, cesses realised, and other matters of local interest such as rights of irrigation et cetera. It is also a memorandum of existing customs ascertained by Settlement Officials during the course of the Settlement operation. It is clear, therefore, that an entry in such a record that haq chaharum was realised on sales of houses is of considerable importance.

In addition to this halat dehi, the plaintiff has produced a number of judgments and decrees showing that such a custom was upheld by Courts with regard to the sales of houses situated in village Kashipur. Exhibits 3 and 13 are a decree and judgment in a case of 1873 with regard to a house in Mahal Kashipur. The learned Subordinate Judge has conceded that this mahal is situtated in village Kashipur. Exhibit 4 is a decree of 1894 relating to Mahal Kabir Chaura which also is a part of the village of Kashipur. Exhibits 5 and 12 are copies of a judgment and decree with regard to the right of haq chaharum in village Kashipur. They are of the year 1890. The mere fact that the vendor in that case had confessed judgment and the vendee allowed the case to be decreed without contest, doest not establish that the judgment is of no weight. If the existence of a custom is well-known the vendor and the vendee may very well not think it worth their while to contest the case. Then there is a decree of 1887 relating to Mahal Kashipur.

The learned Advocate for the appellant has strongly contended that leaving aside the halat dehi all these judgments do not prove the custom because it may very well be that a custom exists in certain mahals but not in the Mahal Pirthipal Singh in which the house is situated. But there it is not shown that in any case the Court has ever held that the custom does not exist in any part of village Kashipur, on the other hand it is established that such a custom exists in certain mahals of village Kashipur and it is further established that as regards halat dehi prepared for Mahal Pirthipal Singh there is an express mention of such a custom, the conclusion is irresistible. There is a further fact that in the sale-deed in favour of the defendant vendee there is a recital that the vendor has not paid any haq chaharum and will not be liable to pay it. That cannot amount to an admission on the party of the vendor that the right to collect haq chaharum does exist, but it does certainly appear that he was aware that it was likely that a claim may be made and he wanted to make his position clear that he was not liable. Having regard to these pieces of evidence we are of opinion that there was legally sufficient evidence before the lower Appellate Court on which it could come to the conclusion that the custom had been established.

The finding that the custom exists must, therefore, be accepted. The result, therefore, is that this appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court-fees on the higher scale.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 876 OF 1921.
March 5, 1925.

HARPHUL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
BHAG MAL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Custom—Gift—Collateral allowed to take possession of land with consent of other collaterals, effect of—Extinction of line of donee—Reversion of land to heirs of donors.

After the death of a proprietor his collaterals permitted one of themselves, who had married the widow of the deceased to take possession of the land belonging to the deceased, without receiving any consideration:

Held, that the transaction must be regarded as a gift by the collaterals in favour of the second husband of the widow of the deceased, and that, on the extinction of the latter's line, the property must revert to the heirs of the donors.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 22nd February 1921.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for determination in this second appeal is whether the land which belonged originally to Sahib Singh, was gifted by his collaterals to Brij Ram who married Sahib Singh's widow in or about the year 1876. Now, the entry in the Settlement Record of 1880 shows that Brij Ram was allowed to take possession of the land with the consent of the collaterals of Sahib Singh, and there can be no doubt that the collaterals with the exception of Brij Ram's brothers received no quid pro quo for the transfer of the property. The learned District Judge has correctly set out all the circumstances relating to the transaction, and we concur in his conclusion that it cannot be regarded as anything but a gift from the point of view of the collaterals other than Brij Ram's brothers.

Now, Brij Ram's descendants have died out and the property must revert to the donors's family. We accordingly confirm the decree of the learned District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 17—"Amount due under decree," meaning of.

The words "the amount due from him under the decree" in s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, mean the amount due under the decree at the date it was given and not the amount due under the decree at the time of presenting the application.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Azamgarh, dated the 20th October 1924.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Applicant.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a decree was passed ex parte on the 4th of August 1924 for a sum of Rs. 174-7-9 with six per cent. interest. On the 16th of August 1924, the defendant applied for restoration under s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. When he applied for restoration the defendant deposited the sum of Rs. 174-7-9, which was the amount due under the decree at the date of the decree the 4th of August 1924. The Judge of the Court of Small Causes dismissed the application for restoration on the ground that the application should have been accompanied by a deposit of the amount due from the judgment-debtor under the decree. So far he was clearly correct. But he went on to interpret these words to mean the amount entered in the decree plus the future interest at 6 per cent. from the 4th of August to the 16th of August 1924, and here by the respondent an attempt is made to suggest that the words "at the time of presenting the application" in s. 17 govern not only the action to be taken by the applicant, namely, his making a deposit or giving security but that they govern also the words "the amount due" and that, therefore, the amount to be deposited is the amount due under the decree at the time of presenting the application. I do not think that this is so. The words "the amount due from him under the decree" are certainly capable of two interpretations and may mean "due under the decree" as entered in the decree or due under the decree at the time of presenting the application. To my mind the words mean "due under the decree at the date it was given." The case is quite different from other cases where the person who has to make a deposit must know the exact amount to a fraction of an anna which he has to deposit. In this case under s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, if the Court of Small Causes is correct he would have to deposit not only the sum of Rs. 174-7-9, but would have to calculate the exact amount of interest that was due and, if in making that calculation he was subsequently found to have been short in the amount deposited by half an anna, he would, according to the view that has been taken by the lower Court, necessarily have his application rejected. I do not think that this is so, I think that in depositing Rs. 174-7-9 the defendant-applicant did all that he was called upon to do.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the lower Court and remand the case to the Court of Small Causes to restore it to its original number and dispose of it in accordance with law. Costs will follow the event.

BEHARI SINGH—DEFENDANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, Sch. II, para. 15—Appeal—Reference to arbitration—Misconduct of arbitrator—Objection, decision of—Revision, whether lies.

During the pendency of an appeal the parties agreed to refer their dispute to certain arbitrators. The arbitrators made an award but the award was attacked on the ground that the arbitrators had made secret enquiries and the Court before whom the appeal was pending gave effect to the objection and entertained and decided the appeal without reference to the arbitration:

Held, that the question of the misconduct of the arbitrators having arisen for decision by the Appellate Court and the Court having jurisdiction to decide it, it could not be said that the Court had acted without jurisdiction or had acted illegally or with material irregularity in deciding the question and that, therefore, its order was not open to revision.

Appeal against an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gorakhpur.

Mr. Sankar Saran, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a preliminary objection is taken that no revision lies. That objection is, in my opinion, well founded. While the appeal was pending in the Court below the parties agreed to refer their dispute to certain arbitrators. These arbitrators made an award. The award was attacked as vitiated by misconduct on the ground that the arbitrators made secret enquiries. It appears to have been common ground that they had made secret enquiries. The learned Subordinate Judge held that this amounted to misconduct and, therefore, entertained and decided the appeal from the Munsif's decision without reference to the arbitration. It may be that I should have come to a different conclusion on the legal question, but it cannot be said that the learned Judge acted without jurisdiction or that he acted illegally or with material irregularity in deciding a point of law which arose before him for decision and which he had jurisdiction to decide. A similar view was taken in the case of Ganga Sahai v. Beldeo Singh (1) which is practically on all fours with the present case.

I, therefore, accept the preliminary objection and dismiss the application with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, r. 9—Suit in forma pauperis—Death of plaintiff—Legal representative, whether can be dispaupered—"Plaintiff," whether refers to physical person—Court-fee, levy of, on dispaupered plaintiff.

When a plaintiff in a suit instituted in forma pauperis dies, his executor is not liable to be dispaupered because personally he is not a pauper. [p. 372, col. 2.]

The expression 'plaintiff' in r. 9 of O. XXXIII of the C. P. C., when applied to the legal representative of a deceased pauper plaintiff refers not to the physical person before the Court but to the legal person in his representative capacity as the legal representative of the deceased pauper plaintiff. [ibid.]

The mere fact that a right to sue in forma pauperis is a personal right is no reason for holding that the legal personal representative of a pauper plaintiff loses that right. [p. 374, col. 1.]

Obiter.—There is no provision in O. XXXIII of the C. P. C. giving retrospective effect to an order dispaupering a plaintiff. A dispaupered plaintiff cannot, therefore, be required to pay the Court-fee in respect of a plaint which has been by the order of the Court admitted to be filed without any fees. [p. 374, col. 2.]

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, dated the 2nd September 1922, in I. A. No. 449 of 1922, in O. S. No. 56 of 1917.

Messrs. T. Narasimha Iyanger and K. S. Desikan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. A. V. Viswanatha Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this civil revision petition is of considerable importance. A suit for partition was allowed to be instituted by the plaintiff in forma pauperis. He died during the pendency of the suit leaving a Will and appointing two of his sisters as executrixes. On their application to be brought on the record as legal representatives, they were made plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 in the suit. One of the defendants in the suit would thereafter appear to have applied to the lower Court under r. 9 of O. XXXIII, to dispauper the plaintiffs so added as legal representatives and the learned Subordinate Judge directed that they should as a condition precedent to continuing the suit pay the institution fee in respect of the plaint on or before a date fixed by him. Against that order, this civil revision petition has been preferred.

The questions that arise for determination are whether, when the plaintiff in a suit instituted in forma pauperis dies, his executor is liable to be dispaupered because personally he is not a pauper and whether he is also liable to be called upon at that stage to pay the Court-fees payable on the institution of the suit. The learned Judge in the Court below made the order following the judgment of Mr. Justice Davar in the case of Manaji Rajuji v. Khandoo Baloo (1). It is true that that decision is a direct authority for the position. The learned Vakil for the petitioners drew my attention to the statement at page 281 of the report of the judgment in that case where the learned Judge states that it was admitted before him that if the executor had come before the Court and asked to institute the suit in forma pauperis, the application would necessarily have to be refused. I am unable to say why or how such an admission came to be made, and how far the decision of the learned Judge was influenced by such admission. However that may be, I cannot regard the decision as correct. The real question is whether the expression "plaintiff" in r. 9 of O. XXXIII of the C. P. C., when applied to the legal representative of a deceased pauper plaintiff refers to the physical person before the Court or the legal person in his representative capacity as the legal representative of the deceased pauper plaintiff. Under the General Clauses Act, the word "person" includes not only individual human beings but also companies or associations or bodies of individuals whether incorporated or not. As I understand the scheme of the law of procedure in this country, the word "person" indicates a juridical person. In that view, it is possible that an individual human being might by reason of his possessing several juridical capacities be susceptible of possessing a number of juridical personalities. Rule 4 of O. VII of the C. P. C., is as follows:—"Where the plaintiff sues in a representative character, the plaint shall show not only that he has an actual existing interest in the subject-matter, but that he has taken the steps (if any) necessary to enable him to institute a suit concerning it". Rule 5 of O. II runs as follows:—

"No claim by or against an executor, administrator or heir, as such, shall be joined with claims by or against him personally, unless the last mentioned claims are alleged to arise with reference to the estate in respect of which the plaintiff or defendant sues or is sued as executor, administrator or heir, or are such as he was entitled to, or liable for, jointly with the deceased person whom he represents". These provisions would clearly seem to indicate that the person contemplated even by the law of procedure is the juridical person. To hold otherwise would obviously lead to serious and inconvenient consequences. If the trustee of a pauper trust should not be allowed to sue in forma pauperis because he has got private means, what about the converse case of a person himself a pauper but being possessed of sufficient means as the trustee of a trust with plenty of money. Could it then be contended that because it is the same human individual that is possessed of sufficient means though in his capacity only as a trustee, he should not be allowed to sue as a pauper in respect of his own personal claims? The very expression "legal representative" clearly indicates the representative character of the person brought on the record in the place of the deceased. From r. 3 of O. XXII it would seem that it is obligatory on the Court to allow the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to come on the record and proceed with the suit. In r. 9 of O. XXXIII, therefore, if the expression "plaintiff" should be construed as including the plaintiff's legal representative, then the means of the plaintiff can only be regarded as the means of the person who is the legal representative in his character as such legal representative.

In the case of Bhagbut Doss v. Buloram Doss (2), the learned Judges state as follows:—"There was really no necessity for inquiry whether the applicant, who claimed to be the representative of an admitted pauper, was a pauper or not. No such provision is found in Ch. V of the Civil Code. The Court, if satisfied that the appellant was the legal representative of the deceased, ought to have admitted him to carry on the suit". Justice Davar in the Bombay case, I have already referred to animadverts against this decision and states that he was unable to understand the reasoning of it. It seems to me that in that case the learned Judges only laid down that once a person is allowed to sue as a pauper and he dies, it follows necessarily that his legal representative is also a pauper in his character as such legal representative and that, therefore, no inquiry is necessary or prescribed. Again in the case of Venkatanarasayya v. Achemma, (3). Sir Charles Turner, C. J., and Mr. Justice Kindersley held that the rule of English practice which prevents a minor from instituting a suit in forma pauperis through his next friend unless he gives proof not only that he is himself a pauper but that the next friend also is a pauper and that he cannot get any substantial person to act as his next friend, is not to be found in or deduced from the section of the Procedure Code and that the minor may sue as a pauper by a next friend who is not a pauper. The principle to be gathered from this decision is that regard must be had to the real juridical plaintiff in the case and not to the person who may be really acting for plaintiff.

Again In the matter of the petition of Mary Ann Bill (4), their Lordships Sir Charles Turner, C. J., and Justice Muthuswami Iyer held that the Procedure Code while it excepts certain cases does not exclude persons holding a fiduciary character from suing in forma pauperis and in India where it is difficult to procure administrators, it may have been thought inexpedient to introduce the English rule. This case has been explained by Mr. Justice Davar in his judgment already referred to on the ground that in that case the administratrix was herself a pauper. It may have been so. But nevertheless when the learned Judges refer to persons holding a fiduciary character, I believe they were really referring to persons holding a representative character; and when the learned Judges refer to the difficulty of procuring administrators in India as the probable reason for the Indian Legislature having thought it inexpedient to introduce the English rule in India, it seems to me that they were referring not to any inducement to paupers to accept the administratorship, but to the immunity granted to them for not being required to pay their own monies for financing the litigations in respect of the estates they might undertake to represent.

In the case of Perumal Koundan v. Tirumalvayapuram Jananukoola Dhanasekhara Sanka Nidhi Ltd., (5). Mr. Kumaraswami Sastriar, delivering the judgment of this Court held that the liquidator of a Company though not a pauper himself may file a suit in forma pauperis on behalf of a pauper Company. In the course of his judgment the learned Judge referring to the case of Manaji Rajulu v. Khandoo Baloo (1) and also the case of In the matter of the Will of Dawubi (6) says that they were cases of executors suing and the learned Judge expressly refrains from expressing any opinion as to the correctness of the decisions.

The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have adopted the suggested distinction as final, overlooking altogether the intimation that the Court did not wish to express any opinion as to the correctness of Mr. Justice Davar's view in the Bombay case.

In Mohammad Zaki v. Municipal Board of Mainpuri (7), the Chief Justice Mr. Richards and Mr. Justice Banerjee, held that while a person suing in forma pauperis becomes an insolvent, the Receiver in insolvency is entitled to continue the suit in forma pauperis as the insolvent might have done.

The learned Vakil for the respondent referred to the case of Farzand Ali Khan v. Amir Haider (8), for the position that leave to sue in forma pauperis is a personal right. Undoubtedly it is so. But the mere fact that it is a personal right is no reason for holding that his legal personal representative loses that right.

I consider that the Bombay case of Manaji Rajuju v. Khandoo Baloo (1), has been wrongly decided and I prefer to follow the Madras cases already referred to by me and the undoubted principle underlying them. It may be that in the r. 9, O. XXXIII, the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff is sometimes shown to have come into possession in his character, as legal representative and out of the estate of the deceased, of sufficient means within the meaning of cl. (b). Then undoubtedly he too may be dispaupered even as the original plaintiff might have been.

The learned Subordinate Judge also refers to the fact that the two executrixes are also legatees under the Will. It appears that there are other legatees as well. I do not however see the relevancy of the reference to the petitioners executrixes being also legatees. It is not shown or sought to be argued that in their capacity as executrixes or legatees they are in possession of sufficient means. It follows, therefore, that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in dispaupering the petitioners and ordering them to pay the Court-fee payable on the plaint.

It is very doubtful whether even after a plaintiff is dispaupered, he could be required to pay the Court-fee in respect of the plaint which has been by the order of Court admitted to be filed without any fee. The right of the Court to levy Court-fees from the plaintiff in such a case would, under the procedure, laid down only be by the decree. My attention has been drawn to r. 11 of O. VII, C. P. C. I cannot consider that rule as aptly worded or ever intended to refer to the case of a dispaupered plaintiff or to any such stage in this suit. In the absence of any clear provision in O. XXXIII, giving retrospective effect to the order dispaupering, I cannot see how in reason a dispaupered plaintiff could be required to pay at a later stage what might have been demanded from him at an earlier stage had he not been allowed to proceed as a pauper. However, it is not necessary for the purpose of the present case to decide the point because I have already held that the order of the lower Court is wrong on a more fundamental ground.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge in the Court below and direct that the petitioners be allowed to continue the suit in forma pauperis. The respondents will pay the costs of the petitioners in this suit.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA AND CHINA AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Deposit of title-deeds by manager—Suit to enforce mortgage—Receiver, appointment of—Discretion of Court.

The members of a joint Hindu family, along with others, formed a limited Company. The manager of the family made a deposit of title-deeds of property belonging to the family to secure an over-draft upon the banking account of the limited Company. The adult members of the family were aware of the deposit of title-deeds and a large portion of the over-draft was used for the purposes of the joint family business. In a suit to enforce the equitable mortgage created by the deposit of the title-deeds, a Receiver was appointed in respect of the mortgaged property. On appeal:

Held, that an inference could be drawn from the circumstances under which the deposit was made that the money was raised for legal necessity and that, therefore, it could not be said that the discretion of the lower Court in appointing a Receiver was exercised wrongly or in a manner which was not judicial. JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by Ram Coomar Lal and others against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose which was delivered on the 20th of April 1924. By that judgment the learned Judge appoined a Receiver to take charge of certain immovable properties which were referred to in the petition presented by the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China.

It is not necessary, in my opinion, to deal in great detail with the facts of this case but the following are the facts which it is necessary to mention.

A joint Mitakshara family owned certain mica properties which I understand, are in the neighbourhood of Hazaribagh and the business was carried on in the name of Johormull Sundermull and also in the name of J. S. Mull & Co.

There was a Firm of Y. Artin & Co. the members of which were Sunder Mull, Sree Nath Pal, & Simpson. They were acting as selling agents in respect of the joint family business.

In May 1919 a Limited Company was formed, the Memorandum of Association being signed by Sundermull, Sreenath Pal & Simpson in order to take over the business of Y. Artin & Co. and that Limited Company was called J. S. Mull & Co. Ltd, and, as I understand, their course of business was that the mica was raised by those carrying on the family business and was delivered to J. S. Mull & Co. Ltd.—sometimes bought by that Company and sometimes sold by that Company on commission.

Both J. S. Mull & Co. and Y. Artin & Co. had accounts with the Chartered Bank. They were kept alive by leaving a small sum of money to the credit of each account: and a current account was opened in the name of J. S. Mull & Co. Ltd. with the Chartered Bank and that was the account which was operated upon. Advances were made from time to time by means of an overdraft on that account.

Apparently, about July 1920 the Bank required further security for the advances which they were making: and, on the 23rd of July 1920 the deeds relating to certain properties were deposited together with a letter, signed by Sundermull and directed to the Chartered Bank, and it ran as follows:—

"We send herewith conveyance for properties as per list attached with present valuations; which please hold as collateral security against your loan to Messrs. J. S. Mull & Co., Limited.

"We are arranging to deliver the other titles as promised and hope to do so shortly.

"I am agreeable to execute a security bond or mortgage on any or all of the properties in your favour whenever called upon to do.

Yours faithfully.
Sundermull.

"Properties belonging to Rai Sabib Sundermull,

	Rs.
1. No. 64-3, Cross Street ...	10,00,000
3. Nos. 2 and 3. Gobind Chunder Dhur's Lane ...	2,50,000
	12,50,000"

In addition to this there was a hypothecation letter of certain stocks of mica given on the 30th of November 1920.

It appears that the operations upon the current account of the Limited Company were brought to an end in November 1921. It is in evidence that the overdraft on the Limited Company's accounts with the Bank was largely in respect of cheques drawn by the Limited Company in favour of Johurmul Sundermull which sums, it is stated, were used for the purpose of the family business. The said amounts were alleged to aggregate the sum of Rs. 76,25,200, out of a total debit of Rs. 87, 21, 630 inclusive of interest. It was agreed on both sides that the properties of which the title-deeds were deposited, are the property of the joint family and that Sundermull was acting in his capacity as karta of the joint family, when he deposited the title-deeds.

It was stated in the Bank's petition that all the defendants had agreed to execute a legal mortgage and a draft was accordingly prepared, but the negotiations with regard to this mortgage fell through as the parties could not agree as to the exact amount due and on certain other points.

The suit was brought to enforce the equitable mortgage, which was created by the deposit of the title-deeds, against J. S. Mull & Co. Ld, Sundermull in his personal capacity, as well as a partner in the Firm of Johormull Surdermull, and also as a karta of the joint family carrying on the joint family business, Ram Coomar, who is the brother of Sundermull, and the sons of Sundermull and of Ram Coomar.

The argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant, stated shortly, was, that in this case there is a dispute as to whether Sundermull as karta of the family had authority to pledge the title-deeds of the properties in question, and there being a dispute as to that point, it was not right for the learned Judge to appoint a Receiver.

In my opinion there are facts from which an inference may prima facie be drawn that the adult members of the joint family were aware of the deposit of the title-deeds by Sundermull and that although the overdraft was upon the banking account of the Limited Company, it may be inferred that the money, or at all events a large portion thereof, was used for the purpose of the joint family business.

That being so, there is some evidence that the deposit of the title-deeds by the karta of the family for the object of raising money for the abovementioned purposes was caused by legal necessity.

The result is that in my judgment it cannot be said that the learned Judge's discretion in appointing a Receiver was exercised wrongly or in a manner which was not judicial.

I desire to make it clear that I am giving no decision upon the points, which Mr. Pugh argued on behalf of the appellants in this appeal. If the suit comes to trial it may be that these questions will have to be investigated and decided.

We are now merely dealing with an interlocutory application in respect of the appointment of a Receiver and upon evidence, which is contained solely in affidavits.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Walmsley, J.—I agree.

Z. K. Appeal dismissed.

Messrs. D. Apparao and B. Somayya, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. Lakshmanna and A. Satyanarayana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 to 31 are the descendants of five brothers. The plaintiff represents one branch, defendants Nos. 1 to 6 another branch; defendants Nos. 7 to 9 the third branch, defendants Nos. 10 to 12 the fourth branch and defendants Nos. 13 to 21 the fifth branch. The plaintiff's suit is for partition of his share of the family property. The plaint property was karnam service inam and was enfranchised in 1903 and inam title deeds were issued in 1904.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 9 pleaded that 40 acres odd were not joint family property and the plaintiff could not claim a share of it. Defendants Nos. 13 to 31 pleaded that 23 acres and odd were their separate property and the rest of the property, about 40 acres odd, was joint family property and they, as representing the fifth branch, were entitled to one-fifth share.

The Subordinate Judge granted a preliminary decree for partition in favour of the plaintiff for one-fifth of the plaint property. Against that decree defendants Nos. 7, 8, and 9 preferred one appeal and defendants Nos. 13 to 16, 31, 17 to 22 and 24 to 30 preferred another appeal. The District Judge dismissed both the appeals and affirmed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. The defendants have preferred this appeal, and evidently defendants Nos. 1 to 9 and 13 to 31 have made common cause against the plaintiff.

The first contention urged by Mr. Somayya for the appellant is that the enfranchisement was for the benefit of the karnam, and the other members of the family had no interest in the plaint property. At the time of the enfranchisement, the karnam's office was held by Venugopal Rao under whom the defendants Nos. 13 to 31 claim. The argument of Mr. Somayya is that Venugopal Rao was karnam at the time of the enfranchisement, and the enfranchisement must, therefore, be for his benefit, and the inam lands enfranchised became his private property, and he strongly relies upon the rent decision in Venkata Jagannadha v. Veerabhadrayya (1). What really happened in this case was Venugopal Rao was appointed karnam in the place of his father. He brought a suit S. S. No. 47 of 1902, for recovery of the inam property attached to the office of karnam against the relations and a decree was passed in his favour for possession of 3 puttis and 19 tooms, vide Ex. 1. This decree was affirmed on appeal by the Collector of Godavari District on 14th January 1904, vide, Ex. 1. Before the appeal was disposed of proceedings for the enfranchisement of the karnam's inam were started and the Inam Deputy Collector passed proceedings on 2nd August 1903 and directed that Inam title deed should be issued in the names of the persons who were actually in possession of the land constituting the karnam's inam, vide Ex. II. Venugopal Rao who was given a decree for possession of 3 putties and 19 tooms was unable to get possession of what was decreed to him, by reason of the issue of an injunction in a suit by some of the defendants against the delivery of the property to him. The Inam Deputy Collector in his proceedings did not order patta in the name of Venugopal Rao. He ordered patta to be issued only in the names of persons then in actual occupation of the inam land. His father Kama Razu was in possession of some of the inam lands and his name was included in the inam patta. If the enfranchisement was for the benefit of the karnam then in office, no doubt, Venugopal Rao would have been entitled to the whole of the enfranchised land. But the Inam Deputy Collector for reasons which are not quite clear, directed patta to be issued only in the names of persons in actual occupation, and he even included the name of one Ammachi Lakshmamma, the widow of one of the members of the family on the ground that she had an interest in the inam property. In Venkata Jagannadha v. Veerabhadrayya (1) it was decided that when land is enfranchised and patta is issued in the name of a karnam, the enfranchised inam land becomes his private property and the members of his family have no right to it. The decision, therefore, has no application to the facts of the present case. If the enfranchisement was in the name of Venugopal Rao, the other members of the family could not claim a share of the property. The enfranchisement is not in his name but in the names of the other members of the family. The contention that the enfranchisement was to enure for the benefit of the karnam in office at the time of the enfranchisement receives no support from the decision in Venkata Jagannadha v. Veerabhadrayya (1). On the other hand their Lordships lay considerable emphasis on the fact that the inam patta should not be treated as a mere formality, but should be treated as giving title to the property to the person in whose name the inam patta is granted. They observe at p. 655* "when accordingly, on the 21st March 1906, the title-deed already quoted was granted by way of an inam to the appellant's father and was in express words confirmed 'to him, his representatives and assigns, to hold or dispose of as he or they think proper,'" the Board is of opinion that that enfranchisement must be given full effect to and that it is not subject to be eviscerated or altered by the claim for partition or division put forward in the present suit." This decision overrules the decision in Gumaiyan v. Kumakshi Ayyra (2) and the cases which follow that case. Their Lordships approve of the Full Bench decision in Venkata v. Rama (3) in which it was held that the enfranchisement of the service inam in favour of the holder of the office for the time being though he had no hereditary title to the office, enured for his benefit, and his title was not liable to be defeated at the suit of the hereditary office-holder who was able to evict him from the office. The principle of the decision is that the land which is given to a village officer is Government land and the village officer is only entitled to the emoluments or income from the land so long as he holds the office. Whether the office be hereditary or not, the service inam land is only attached to the office and if the office happens to be held by any person whether with or without hereditary right to it, the enfranchisement in his favour confers an absolute title on him. His relations who on his demise or on his dismissal would succeed to the office could not claim the enfranchised land as belonging to the family of which the karnam is a member. It follows, therefore, that the Government has an undoubted right to enfranchise the inam in favour of any person and no one has a right to question it. No doubt according to inam rules the enfranchisement is made in favour of the person holding the office. But that would not give a right to the other members of the family to a share in the land so enfranchised in favour of the holder of the office. Vide decision in Venkatarayudu v. Venkataramayya (4).

In this case rightly or wrongly the Inam Commissioner declined to issue inam patta in the name of Venugopal Rao who was the holder of the office of karnam at the time of the enfranchisement proceedings, and though he was aware of the fact that Venugopal Rao had obtained a decree for possession of the inam land yet he declined to make out a patta in his name unless he executed the decree within two months. The two months having expired and the decree not having been executed the Deputy Collector proceeded to order pattas according to possession. The inam pattas, therefore, conferred title on the persons in whose names the pattas were issued. In Tariya Gawdu v. Vonamo Gowdu (5) pattahs were issued in the name of the members of the family of hereditary office holders although only one of them was the actual office holder. It was held that such a grant was not illegal. The learned Judges observe at page 206* "we cannot find any legal foundation for the view which appears to be held by the two lower Courts that if on enfranchisement the Government grants a portion of the inam lands to a man who, although a member of the family of the hereditary office-holders was not himself actually in office at the time of enfranchisement, such a grant is illegal, and must be set aside by a Civil Court." This case is against the contention of the appellants that the grant enured for the benefit of Venugopal Rao. In Dharanipragada Durgamma v. Kodambari Virragu (6) the lands constituting the emoluments of the office of the karnam were enfranchised in favour of a widow who had been in possession since the death of her deceased husband which took place about 18 years previously. They were subsequently sold by her. The Court held that the reversioners could not dispute the alienation. With regard to the Full Bench ruling in Venkata v. Rama (3) the learned Judges observe: "that decision proceeded on the broad ground that the plaintiff did not hold the office of karnam at the time of the enfranchisement and, therefore, had no title to sue for the lands and that the land when enfranchised was at the disposal of Government and alienable to whomsoever the Government pleased." In this case, as I have already observed, the Inam Commission rightly or wrongly refused to grant inam patta in the name of Venugopal Rao who was the karnam in office and who had obtained a decree for the possession of the inam land, and it must, therefore, be taken that the enfranchisement in the names of the persons mentioned in Ex. II enured not for the benefit of the karnam but for the benefit of the persons in whose name the pattas were made out. That the inam patta gives a good title is clear from a recent decision of a Bench of this Court in S. A. Nos. 287 and 288 of 1921. In that case Sir William Ayling, J. obsrves as follows: "I think the judgment of the Privy Council" [meaning Venkata Jagannadha v. Veerabhadrayya (1)] amounts to stating that the grant of a title deed at enfranchisement of a service inam (unlike the case of personal inam) does confer a new title and that for this reason it cannot be questioned by other members of his family." This decision was followed in a recent case by Wallace, J., in Gourikantam v. Rammaurthy (7). He observes at p. 490*: "Since, however, I hold that enfranchisement is a clear and unequivocal resumption by the Government of the land and re-grant to whomsoever it pleases, it follows that, unless, Government had at the time of the resumption no right to resume, the 1st defendant has no case." It is unnecessary to decide in this case whether there was an actual resumption by the Government of the service inam or not. It is sufficient for the purpose of this case to hold that the Government enfranchised the inam land which it had absolute power to dispose of, in favour of the persons in whose names pattas were issued by the Inam Commissioner. The first contention, therefore, that the enfranchisement in 1903 was for the benefit of Venugopal Rao, the karnam then in office, is not sustainable.

The second contention is that the decree in S. A. No. 47 of 1902 was for the whole of the karnam's inam which measured about 63 acres and owing to some miscalculation only 23 acres were delivered to the plaintiff Venugopal Rao. It is argued that the whole of the land having been decreed to Venugopal Rao, the others had no right to the land and, therefore, it must be taken that Venugopal Rao was in possession of the whole of the land and the enfranchisement proceedings were for his benefit. It is unnecessary to consider this point in detail in view of my decision on the third point.

The next point urged by Mr. Somayya is that the defendants Nos. 13 to 31 are entitled to 23 acres. This contention is based on the fact that subsequent to the inam proceedings the decree in S. A. No. 47 of 1902 was executed by Venugopal Rao and he got actual possession of 23 acres. He no doubt got possession of 23 acres by virtue of his being the karnam in office. But unfortunately for him the enfranchisement proceedings were over before he got possession, and the inam pattas had been issued or ordered to be issued. According to the proceedings of the Inam Deputy Collector, Ex. II, persons who were actually then in possession were granted pattas. And he says: "Venugopal Rao decree-holder in the Summary Suit referred to above admits that he has himself no possession, but he says that the Virayala people do not hold a half share in it, but he has not proved it, and besides he has nothing to do with the land not being one in possession." The argument for the appellant is that 23 acres odd had become the property of Venugopal Rao, and that the enfranchisement proceedings could not take away that right, and he relies upon the decision in Lakshminarasimham v. Venkataratnayamma (8). In that case Spencer and Ramesam, JJ., held "the fact that the Government enfranchised a karnam service inam and issued title deed in the name of a person, did not of itself confer a title on such person and the inam title deeds could create no title where no title existed before." Mr. Justice Spencer observes at page 335*: "On this point I am of opinion that the language of their Lordships should not be strained too far so as to make it apply to circumstances which were not before them. To say that inam title-deeds created a title where no title existed before, would be to disregard the provisions of Madras Act VIII of 1869 which expressly state that 'nothing contained in any title-deed shall be deemed to define, limit, infringe or destroy the rights of any description of holders or occupiers of the lands from which any inam is derived' or 'affect the interests of any person other than the inam holder named in the title-deed, and nothing contained in Madras Act IV of 1862 or in Madras Act IV of 1866 shall be deemed to confer on any inam holder any right to land which he would not otherwise possess.'" Mr. Justice Ramesam observes at p. 336*: "The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Venkata Jagannadha v. Veerabadhrayya (1) cannot be used as an authority for the proposition that the inam title-deed is conclusive as to the persons in whose favour enfranchisement is to operate." If this decision is good law no doubt the appellant's contention could prevail. But Mr. Justice Ayling and Mr. Justice Odgers have dissented from the view of Mr. Justice Spencer and Mr. Justice Ramesam in the case already referred to, S. A. Nos. 287 and 288 of 1921: and Mr. Justice Wallace also dissents from this view in Gouri Kantam v. Ramamurthy (7). The view of Spencer and Ramesam, JJ., is opposed to the decision in Sankara Subbayyar v. Ramasmi Ayyangar (9), where the facts were; inam lands constituting the emoluments of the office of Nattamgar were enfranchised in favour of the plaintiff and defendant separately. In November 1890 the defendant was informed that a patta for half of the lands would be issued in his name, and it was so issued on the following May. In April 1891 (after the resolution to enfranchise the land was come to) the plaintiff was appointed to be the sole Nattamgar and he sued in 1894 for the cancellation of the enfranchisement patta issued to the defendant, and for the issue of a patta in his own name in respect of the lands compromised therein and for possession of the lands. The Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief sought. The learned Judges observe at page 456*: "We think that the enfranchisement of half of the land in second defendant's name was in accordance with the principle accepted in the Full Bench case [Venkata v. Rama (3)] referred to by the District Judge, inasmuch as the right of the 2nd defendant, established by the suit under Regulation VI of 1831, was never subsequently set aside or even disowned by the Revenue Authorities. The appointment of the plaintiff as sole Nattamgar in April 1891 was never intended to affect the right of the 2nd defendant to the moiety of the lands. It was merely an act of policy on the part of the Government for the more convenient discharge of the duties of the office and could only affect the right of the 2nd defendant from the date of such appointment. We do not think it would be reasonable, nor is there any authority for holding that the plaintiff's appointment in April 1891 should have effect retrospectively so as to divest the second defendant of the right which had vested in him by the prior order to enfranchise half the lands in his name." The order for enfranchisement was passed before Venugopal Rao got possession of the lands. His subsequent possession cannot divest the title which was created by the grant of inam patta in favour of the persons then in possession of the lands. If the subsequent appointment of the plaintiff in Sankara Subbayyar v. Ramasami Ayyangar (9), could not divest the title of the 2nd defendant in that suit which had vested in him, it is difficult to see how the getting possession of the land in execution of the decree in the summary suit could divest a title which had been conferred by the grant of the inam patta. In this view Nenugopal Rao and his descendants could not claim exclusive title to the 23 acres in their possession. They do not attempt to set up adverse possession for more than 60 years against the Government, and granted that they could get prescriptive title against the plaintiff, they have not proved that they were in possession for more than 12 years before the date of suit. As a matter of fact their possession was only subsequent to 1905 and the suit was filed in 1917.

In the result the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 2 OF 1925.

March 17, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kalwant Sahay.

SURAJ NARAIN MISSER AND OTHERS —PETITIONERS

versus

HARDOWAR SINGH AND OTHERS— OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXI, r. 90—Execution of decree—Sale of non-transferable occupancy holding—Purchaser of portion of holding, whether can apply to set aside sale—Collusion —Sale set aside—Revision.

A purchaser without the landlord's consent of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding has an interest in the holding sufficient to entitle him to apply after an execution sale of the holding, as a representative of the tenant, to have the sale of the holding set aside under O. XXI, r. 90 of the C. P. C. on the ground of fraud. [p. 381, col. 2.]

Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhuri, 27 Ind. Cas. 61; 42 C. 172; 18 C. W. N. 971; 20 C. L. J. 52, relied on.

Mahadeo Lal v. Langat Singh, 40 Ind. Cas. 257; 2 P. L. J. 457; 1 Pat. L. W. 504; (1917) Pat. 169, distinguished.

Where a Court finds that there was collusion between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder, and that there was a material irregularity in the sale proclamation, and that the value of the property as stated in the sale proclamation was grossly inadequate, and that the price fetched at the sale was also inadequate, it has jurisdiction to set aside the sale and its order cannot be questioned in revision. [p. 382, col. 1.]

Application against an order of the District Judge, Monghyr, dated the 31st October 1924, reversing that of the Munsif, Monghyr, dated the 6th April 1923.

Messrs. Abani Bhusan Mukerjee and B. C. Dey, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. N. N. Sinha and B. P. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners obtained a rent decree and in execution, thereof proceeded to sell the holding. The sale took place on the 25th of October, 1922 and the petitioners themselves were the purchasers. On the 30th October, 1922 an application was made by the opposite party for setting aside the sale under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90 of the C. P. C. The opposite party are the purchasers of a portion of the holding from the original tenant by a private sale.

The Munsif before whom the application was made dismissed the application for setting aside the sale. On appeal the learned District Judge has allowed the application and has set aside the sale. Against this order of the learned District Judge on appeal the petitioners have come up in revision to this Court.

The first point taken by the learned Vakil for the petitioner, is that the application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the C. P. C. was not maintainable at the instance of the opposite party inasmuch as they were the purchasers of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding and, therefore, they were not persons whose interests were affected by the sale. This question does not appear to have been raised either in the Trial Court or in the Court of Appeal below. There is no allegation in the application for revision filed in this Court to the effect that the holding was a non-transferable occupancy holding and it is too late for the petitioners to raise this point for the first time in revision in this Court. It raises question not only of law, but also of fact and, as the question was not raised in the Court below, it cannot be entertained for the first time in the present application in revision. Reliance has been placed by the larned Vakil for the petitioners on the decision of the Special Bench in Mahadeo Lal v. Langat Singh (1), but that was a case which depended on the construction of s. 170, cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and not on the construction of the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90 of the C. P. C. The learned Chief Justice in the course of his judgment in

"Both sides have in this case admitted the correctness of the propositions laid down by the Full Bench in Dayamoyi v. Ananda Mohan Roy Chowdhuri (2), and it may be conceded that, as held in that case, a purchaser without the landlord's consent of a part of a non-transferable occupancy holding has an interest in the holding sufficient to entitle him to apply after an execution sale, as a representative of the raiyat, to have the sale of the holding set aside on the ground of fraud, but the question which we have to decide is whether such a person has an interest in the holding 'voidable on the sale' within the meaning of s. 170 of the Act."

This decision of the Special Bench, therefore, cannot be of any help to the petitioners in the present case.

The next point taken is that it being found by the learned District Judge in concurrence with the Trial Court that the sale proclamation was duly served and that the processes were not suppressed, the mere finding that the price fetched at the sale was inadequate was not sufficient in law to entitle the learnd Judge to set aside the sale. Now the learned Judge has found that there was collusion between the judgment-debtors and the decree-holders, that there had been material irregularity in the sale proclamation, that the value of the property as stated in the sale proclamation was grossly inadequate, and that the price fetched at the sale was also inadequate. On those findings the learned District Judge was perfectly competent to set aside the sale. There is no question of want of jurisdiction involved in the present case; and this application must be dismissed with costs. Hearing fee two gold mohurs.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1691 OF 1922.

November 13, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ramesam.

DORAISWAMI MUDALIAR AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANT No. 3—APPELLANTS

M. DORAISWAMI IYENGAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 130—Assignment of debt, what constitutes—Words of transfer, absence of—Assignment of part of debt, validity of—Notice to debtor, whether assignment—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 35—Unstamped transfer deed—Secondary evidence, admissibility of.

To constitute a valid assignment of a debt under s. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act there must be words of transfer in the instrument which must be executed in favour of the assignment and such assignment must be of the whole debt and not merely of a part of the debt. [p. 386, col. 1.]

A notice to the debtor not containing words of transfer nor referring to a transfer does not amount to an instrument of transfer. [p. 383, col. 2.]

For a document to operate as an equitable assignment, the fund out of which the payment is to be made should be specified and if no fund is specified the order does not operate as an equitable assignment. [p. 385, col. 2.]

The word 'absolute' in s. 130, Transfer of Property Act, is used in contrast to the expression 'by way of security' and has nothing to do with the question whether the assignment is of the whole debt or of a part thereof. An assignment may be of the whole debt by way of security though when the security is worked out, a part only may suffice. [p. 386, cols. 1 & 2.]

No secondary evidence can be given of the contents of a letter of assignment of a debt which is admitted to have been unstamped. [p. 383, col. 1.]

Raja of Bobbili v. Inuganti China Sitaramasami Garu, 23 M. 49; 4 C. W. N. 117; 26 I. A. 262; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 597; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 428 (P. C.), followed.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, North Arcot, at Vellore, in Appeal Suit No. 102 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Vellore, in Original Suit No. 531 of 1919.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. A. Govinda Raghava Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this second appeal may be briefly stated. The 2nd defendant is a contractor who entered into a building contract in respect of the Vellore Municipal Hospital Works with the P. W. Department. By September 1914, a sum of Rs. 2,156-8-1 was due to him. At that time he owed Rs. 1,600 to the 3rd defendant. When the 3rd defendant demanded the payment of his debts, he executed certain letters intending (I assume this in favour of 3rd defendant) to transfer Rs. 1,600 out of the amount due to him from the P. W. D. In December 1914, he owed Rs. 6,750 to the plaintiffs and intending to transfer the whole of the said amount, he executed similar letters. The documents that came into existence in September and December respectively may be shown in a tabular form as follows:—

	3rd Defendant dated 22nd September 1914.	Plaintiffs, dated 10th December 1914.
2nd defendant to assignee	Letter not exhibited.	Exhibit C.
2nd defendant to the Executive Engineer ...	I	„ E.
Assignee to Executive Engineer ...	III	„ D.
Reply by Executive Engineer to Assignee ...	II	Endorsement on D.

From the above table, it is seen that, on each occasion, the scheme was the same, consisting of (1) a letter from assignor to assignee as an instrument of transfer, (2) a letter from assignor to Executive Engineer being the notice intended by s. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act. The letter of transfer to the 3rd defendant though referred to in Ex. III is not forthcoming. It is admitted to be unstamped (D. W. No. 1) and no secondary evidence can be given of its contents [Raja of Bobbili v. Inuganti China Sitaramasami Garu (1).] In the written statement of 3rd defendant, it was alleged (paras. 3 and 5), "When the 2nd defendant was demanded payment, he gave this defendant a letter of authority asking him to draw Rs. 1,600 from the amount due to him for the Pentland Hospital Works and also he sent a letter to the Executive Engineer, North Arcot, asking him to pay the said amount to this defendant. This was on or about the 22nd September 1914. The alleged assignment referred to in para. 4 (plaint) is a fraud and not sustainable in law when the 2nd defendant had already given a letter of assignment to this defendant to draw the amount, referred to in para. 3 of this statement." It is, therefore, clear, that the only assignment to the 3rd defendant pleaded by him is the letter addressed to him, of which no secondary evidence can be given. As the assignment to 3rd defendant cannot be proved, it follows that there is no assignment in his favour and the appeal must fail on this ground. Mr. Anantakrishna Iyer contends that, apart from the assignment intended by the missing letter, Ex. I only is enough to prove an assignment. In the first place, this is opposed to the pleadings in which the letter of 22nd September 1914 other than Ex. I was described as the letter of assignment and the plea cannot be allowed to be raised. In the second place, to allow the plea to be raised is an evasion of s. 91 of the Evidence Act and of the Stamp Law and the principle of the ruling in Raja of Bobbili v. Inuganti China Sitaramasami Garu (1). A perusal of Exs. I and III only or of even I alone leaves in one's mind the impression that something like a transfer was intended. It is so easy to infer the transfer but to allow such an inference to be made and to give effect to it is to allow secondary evidence of the letter of assignment to be given.

For the sake of argument, I will leave these two considerations aside and consider the question whether Ex. I by itself amounts to an assignment. In my opinion, if the matter is dealt with, apart from the English decisions to be considered lower down, it does not. There must be words of transfer in the instrument. A notice to the debtor not containing words of transfer nor referring to a transfer is not an instrument of transfer. Otherwise every order of payment is a transfer. Every cheque or bill of exchange is a transfer. In the first place one would expect that an instrument of transfer should, in general, be an instrument executed in favour of the assignee. I say 'in general,' for there is the well recognized exception of a transfer effected by an endorsement on the bond or other paper evidencing the debt sought to be transferred. The case in Rama Iyen v. Venkatachellam Pattar (2) is an example. So also is the decision in Harding v. Harding (3). In civilised communities, such an endorsement ordering the debtor to pay, has been always considered as a transfer—an idea borrowed from the law and practice of Negotiable Instruments—and the intention is given effect to by recognizing the endorsement as a transfer. But, apart from such cases, I would expect an instrument of transfer to be addressed to the assignee. The settlement of accounts containing the entry in Seetharama Ayyar v. Narayanaswami Pillai (4) was between the assignor and assignee and must be regarded as addressed to the assignee. But assuming that the instrument may be addressed to the debtor, there must be words operating as a transfer.

In England, the matter has been complicated by the history of the law relating to the assignment of choses-in-action. At common law, except in the case of an annuity, a chose-in-action cannot be assigned at all. The inconvenience of the rule was avoided by permitting the assignee to sue in the name of the assignor [see reference in foot-note (n) to s. 780 of Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. IV.] The case where the debtor consents and a novatio is effected is really not an assignment. But Courts of Equity recognized equitable assignments from the earliest times—Ryall v. Rowles (5). The assignment may be verbal (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. IV, s. 796). An agreement to assign is enough [see Tudsbery. on Equitable Assignments, pages 54 and 53 and Ryall v. Rowles (5).] An agreement may be made out from a course of dealing between the parties. (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. IV, s. 796). An order to pay will be enough provided the intention is clear. Brandt Sons & Co. v. Dunlop Robber Co. (6). Then came the Judicature Act, s. 25 (6). The Act created no new rights but enabled the assignee to sue in his own name. It has not made assignable contracts which were not assignable in equity before. Nor does it impair the efficacy of equitable assignments which would previously have been valid. (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. IV, s. 783). Mr. Anantakrishna Iyer also contended that no particular form of assignment under the Statute is required, and relied on Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. IV, s. 788, where it is said: "A direction or order by the creditor to pay the amount is sufficient" and reference is given to Harding v. Harding (3) and Brice v. Bannister (7). In the former (not a case of debt) the assignor George Harding writes the instruction to pay at the foot of the account furnished by the trustees. The case is similar to Rama Iyen v. Venkatachellam Pattar (2), Wills, J., recognizes that, "before the Judicature Act, it would have been impossible to give a legal title to Laura Harding, so as to enable her to sue in her own name in respect of this right of action; she could have maintained a suit in equity, but the legal title could not have been completed in her. Now it can be done." He then points out that the trustees assented to the assignment. "It seems to me that that fact carries us a step further, and imports into the case another doctrine of equity." Lord Alverston, C. J., in Brandt, Sons & Co. v. Dunlop Rubber Co. (8) thinks this is the real ground of the decision—a remark not affected by the reversal of the decision by the House of Lords in Brandt Sons & Co. v. Dunlop Rubber Co. (6) as I shall show lower down. In Brice v. Bannister (7), the only point argued and decided was that there can be a good equitable assignment of a future debt. It is true that Lord Coleridge, C. J., regarded it as a good assignment under the Statute, but on appeal, this position was attacked and the Counsel for the respondent supported the judgment on the ground that there was a good assignment in equity. Cotton, L. J., opens his judgment by saying that there was a "good equitable assignment." Brett, L. J., who dissented discusses the case only on that footing. None of the Lords Justices refers to the Statute. This has been pointed out by Chitty, L. J., in Durham Brothers v. Robertson (9): "It is necessary to refer to Brice v. Bannister (7).....Lord Coleridge, C. J. held that the assignment was within the 25th section. The Court of Appeal decided the case quite apart from the Act. Cotton, L. J., expressly decided the case on the ground of equitable assignment.....Bramwell, L. J. reluctantly assented to this view. Brett, L. J., dissented, but on general principles. So soon as it was ascertained that there was a good equitable assignment, with power to give a discharge, it became unnecessary to consider whether it fell within the Act or not." In Brandt Sons & Co. v. Dunlop Rubber Co. (6), Lord Macnaghten says (page 161*) "With the utmost deference to the Court of Appeal, I have great difficulty in following to their reasoning. The plaintiffs' case was put in two ways. It was presented as a case within subs. (6) of s. 25 of the Judicature Act. It was also presented as a simple case of equitable assignment perfected by notice. Unfortunately the stress of the argument was laid on the Judicature Act. The Court of Appeal devoted almost the whole of their attention to it. The substantial question—the only question worth considering—was all but ignored. It was treated as subordinate to the question on the Statute and bound up with it. The Lord Chief Justice, with whom the other members of the Court agree says: 'I come to the conclusion that this document,—does not fulfil that which is necessary in order to entitle the plaintiff to sue,...on the ground that it is not an absolute assignment or an assignment at all within that section." Why that which would have been a good equitable assignment before the Statute should now be invalid and inoperative because it fails to come up to the requirements of the Statute. I confess I do not understand. The Statute does not forbid or destroy equitable assignments, or impair their efficacy in the slightest degree. When the rules of Equity and the rules of the Common Law conflict, the rules of Equity are to prevail. Before the Statute, there was a conflict as regards assignment of debts and other choses-in-action. At law it was considered necessary that the debtor should enter into some engagement with the assignee. That was never the rule in Equity. In certain cases, the Judicature Act places the assignee in a better position than he was before. Whether the present case falls within the favoured class may be doubted. But, says the Lord Chief Justice "the document does not, on the face of it, purport to be an assignment nor use the language of an assignment." "An equitable assignment does not always take that form. It may the addressed to the debtor. It may be couched in the language of command. It may be a courteous request. It may assume the form of mere permission. The language is immaterial if the meaning is plain." After the references I have made to Cotton and Brett, L. JJ., in Brice v. Bannister (7), to Chitty, L. J., in Durham Brothers v. Robertson (9) and to Lord Macnaghten in Brandt Sons & Co. v. Dunlop Rubber Co. (6), I confess I do not understand the sentence in s. 788 of Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. IV. It seems to me conclusive from the manner in which Lord Macnaghten deals with Lord Alverston, C. J.'s judgment, that an assignment to be under the Statute must either "purport to be an assignment or use the language of an assignment."

Now the Privy Council in Mulraj Khatau v. Vishwanath Prabhuram Vaidya (10) say: "The error arose from the learned Judges not having appreciated that the positive language of the section precluded the application in India of the principles of English Law on which they based their decision."
